Dear Jim,

Reading through the minutes of the Convention has reminded me that a resolution was passed authorizing the obtaining of an unpaid consultant in urban renewal and urban planning. I don't recall that this has been done, so I would like to offer the services of Idea Plan Associates.

As you know, we are particularly interested in the potential for deghettoization through physical and social design, with emphasis on the role which urban renewal can play in such an area. We have also done work in several other aspects of urban planning, and have acted as consultants to Borough Hall CORE on the Cadman Plaza urban renewal area, with regard to the question of inclusion of low-income housing in the project.

I think the services of a dedicated young group of urbanists would be most helpful to CORE. I look forward to hearing from you as to your feelings on the matter.

Sincerely,

Clarence

From the coffee-and-Danish at 9:30 a.m. until adjournment at 4 p.m., the MCH 7th Annual Conference will be a working down-to-earth day. The conference, on Sat., Nov. 20, will be an ORGANIZING CONVENTION...for more effective tenant councils...for a more effective Metropolitan Council on Housing.

This can be seen in the kind of panels which are scheduled in the morning:

Panel I --- How to Organize a House
Panel II -- How to Organize a Tenant Council
Panel III - How to Organize in a Conservation, Rehabilitation, or Urban Renewal Area
Panel IV -- New Legislative Tools in Organizing(new rent strike laws)
Panel V --- Publicity Techniques in Organizing

Box lunches, reserved in advance at $1 each, will be distributed in the panels so the discussion can go on through the lunch hour. The morning panels will end at 1:45.After a brief pause and stretch, the conference will reconvene in Plenary Session. MCH chairman, Jane Benedict, will chair the plenary session which will tackle the problem of "Making Met Council Stronger and More Effective." Major Owens, MCH vice-chairman and a leader in Brooklyn CORE, will make brief opening remarks before the morning panels.

Conference registration is $1 per delegate. Each affiliate should send three, four, five or more delegates.

The picketline at 68th St. and 3rd Ave. on Oct. 9 sounded more like the Metropolitan Opera than the Metropolitan Council on Housing. Sopranos trilled and baritones demanded stronger rent control in rich, melodic tones. How come?

The magnificent voices came from a group of young men and women who joined the picketline spontaneously. They were high school students who had been auditioning for the All-City High School Chorus nearby. Until they came, the picketline consisted of 150 enthusiastic, but off-key, MCH tenants. With their arrival, everyone suddenly sang louder -- and better!

Rent increases protested

The picketline was held in front of the home of Mrs. Hortense Gabel, head of the City Rent and Rehabilitation Administration. It was held to protest the weakening of rent control by constant rent increases. Since the City took over control, rent increase on top of increase has weakened rent control and allowed rents to go up and up. The RRA keeps adding more and more reasons for increases -- bells and buzzers, peepholes, boiler repairs,TV security systems, etc. These increases go on forever -- even after the "improvement" is paid for.

Like the hearty crew of the Nina, the Pinta and the Santa Maria -- 41 determined explorers from the Cooper Square Committee set out for Washington, D.C. on Columbus Day, Oct. 12. Their task was to find a new route to the Alternate Plan for Cooper Square.

After being wished Godspeed by the ABC-TV crew at 7 a.m. in New York City, the explorers set forth to confront Robert Weaver, head of the Federal housing agency, HHFA. They wanted to protest the City's inhumane urban renewal plan for their community and ask him to back the Alternate Plan. The A.P. was drawn up by the community itself with the help of a professional planner and is being ignored by the City despite pious words in favor of "citizen participation."

Farbstein and Ryan back tenants

The explorers were well-supplied with picket signs and 2,000 leaflets in their chartered bus. Waiting for them in Washington were Cong. Leonard Farbstein and Wm. Ryan, who are among the Plan's sponsors. After an hour's delay due to heavy rains, the explorers arrived and made a splendid sight as they entered the ornate hearing room on Capitol Hill. Petite, silver-haired Thelma Burdick, chairman of the Cooper Square Comm., was flanked by children who live on the site, by old men and women struggling to keep up with the younger men and women, by artists and students, by black, white, and Spanish and English-speaking tenants.

The meeting was attended by Farbstein & Ryan and by Mr. Andrew Hickey, an assistant to Weaver. Weaver refused to meet.

Questions but no answers

Miss Burdick got right to the point. "What we want to know," she asked, "is why there is no real citizen participation in the urban renewal program and why won't Mr. Weaver hear our complaint?" Mr. Hickey gave an explanation which the group called "ineffectual and double-talking," and then Cong. Ryan and Farbstein promised to try to arrange a meeting with the committee, the NY head of the HHFA and City agencies.

Indignant at Weaver's refusal to meet with the restless natives, the group left and gathered outside his offices on K St. Soon the street was alive with the chanting, singing explorers. Radio, TV and newspaper reporters were moved by their spirit and determination. Chants of "NO FEDERAL FUNDS TO DESTROY OUR HOMES" and "MR. WEAVER -- TALK WITH US!" drifted through the closed doors of the building.

Police were everywhere, filling the lobby of the HHFA, crowding the sidewalk & begging unsuccessfully for a quieter demonstration, and, finally, in squad cars, escorting the waving, laughing busload out of Washington. Undaunted, the happy warriors sped back to NY to picket Weaver the next day at the Women's City Club.

Like now!

The exciting events of the day were seen on ABC-TV and NBC-TV, were carried in the NY Times, the Daily News and the Village Voice, and heard on WNEW, WINS and WNYC. To quote a new, hip member of the committee: "The Alternate Plan is cool, man. We mean to see it come to pass, and like soon!"

A TENANT NEWS MUSICAL BONUS -- songs to picket the HHFA chief by.

(Sung to the tune of "Give My Regards to Broadway.")

"Give our regards to Weaver.
Remind him that we tried to meet.
Tell all the boys up in HRB
Our Plan they won't defeat.
Tell Weaver that he'll be lonely
If citizens he turns away.
The Alternate Plan for Cooper Square
Will be reality some day."

The Spiegel law was revised in the last session of the legislature -- for the better. This is the law which permits the City Welfare Dept. to withhold rent paid for welfare clients if there are serious violations in the apartment. Now the withheld rent will remain in the City's treasury and never be paid to the landlord. The landlord can get the rent restored when he removes the violations but he gets no retroactive rent for the months when the violations existed.

[illegible] HOUSING HELD DOWN IN HOUSING ACT OF 1965; MCH CALLS FOR ACTION

Soon after Pres. Johnson signed the Federal Housing Act of 1965 into law, MCH issued a detailed analysis of the major features of the new legislation. The MCH statement said that "as a whole, the Housing Act is a tremendous disappointment. Instead of responding to widespread demands for more public housing, it holds appropriations down to 35,000 new units per year (plus 25,000 rehabilitated units). New York City's share would not be more than 3,000 per year."

The statement goes on to consider the gimmick of "rent supplements," and to "oppose the rent supplement as a substitute for public housing." Some of the objections to rent supplements are listed -- low income tenants will spend more money for rent, they will be humiliated with a "dole" or "welfare" label, and they will get less housing for each dollar spent. The statement concludes that rent supplement projects will not be able to avoid public housing's problems.

In the statement, MCH calls for "a public housing program of 100,000 new units per year nationwide" and "an immediate nationwide conference of community, civil rights, religious, labor, tenant and public housing organizations to discuss public housing's problems, suggest improvements and fight for an expanded program in 1966."

Copies of the statement, "Public Housing and the Housing Act of 1965," are available on request from MCH, 219 - 7th Ave.

Supplements may fizzle in N.Y.
The latest development in the supplement program is Congress' refusal to grant funds this year. Southern racists who also oppose public housing have mustered enough strength to vote down funds.

It is doubtful anyway that New York City can make use of the supplement program even if funds are voted next year. New rules for the supplement program, just issued by the Federal housing agency, would seem to exclude New York City. One of these rules prohibits supplements in cities with a low vacancy rate, such as New York City. A document issued by Mr. Weaver's office says that the average mortgage size on each dwelling unit will be $12,500 -- far below what it costs to build in New York -- and "that elevator apartments will generally be too costly to qualify."

LAST CALL FOR "POSTMARK ZERO"

Tickets are going fast for the MCH Theater Party on Nov. 12th. It's a unique evening -- and a unique play. The play, POSTMARK ZERO, has been hailed by Stanley Kubrick, William L. Shirer, Judith Anderson, and Linus Pauling. The novelist, C.P. Snow, commented that it "contains the human compassion which, I sometimes think, is wasting away a good deal too quickly for us to be safe."

The evening is also unique in offering an after-theater cocktail party right in the theater itself. Admission to the party and a free cocktail is included in the price of the ticket. Give yourself an engrossing evening -- and give MCH some much-needed funds. Order tickets now from MCH, 219 - 7th Ave. or call MCH at 924-9858 or Millie Weitz, Theater Party chairman, at UN 4-7960.

LAST MINUTE BARGAIN -- MCH has gotten a few more $6.50 tickets for the Theater Party. Order them right now!

MET COUNCIL DIARY

Planning conference, Oct. 16: Jane Benedict, MCH chairman, and Wilbert Tatum, MCH bd. member and exec. secy. of the Cooper Sq. Comm., participated in the Public Conference of ARCH, AIA and AIP. The conference was held at Cooper Union and centered around planning for New York City and the problem of citizen participation. ARCH stands for Architects' Renewal Committee in Harlem; AIA for American Institute of Architects; and AIP for American Institute of Planners. Miss Benedict spoke in the panel on "Priorities for the Development of New York City," and Tatum was one of a panel of questioners who interrogated Cong. John V. Lindsay, mayoralty candidate.

A REMINDER ... that MCH is now open five afternoons a week, Mon. thru Fri. from noon to 2:30 ... plus Tues. evenings, 8 to 10 pm. Also a reminder that MCH can use dependable volunteers to keep the office open and needs $$$ for rent, etc.

One poster in the picketline showed how much an "improvement" actually costs the tenant. It showed that a refrigerator, which might cost the landlord $100-$150, will cost the tenant over $1500 during a twenty-year period. One of the first picketers waved this poster at Mrs. Gabel as she fled from the building into a waiting car at the start of the demonstration. Mrs. Gabel's only answer was a quick brush-off.

Three radio stations -- WINS, WNEW and WBAI -- broadcast news of the picketline including taped interviews with Jane Benedict, MCH chairman, with the singing in the background. The Herald-Tribune printed a story about it on Oct. 10.

Several thousand leaflets were distributed all over the city during the week before the picketline. And a few hundred were handed out during the demonstration to passers-by. These explained why rents are going up and demanded -- NO MORE RENT INCREASES!

Better rent control in 1966!

When the rent control law comes up for renewal in the City Council next spring, there must be even bigger and better picketlines. Tenants must fight for changes in the law to make it stronger.

The following telegram was sent to Pres. Johnson on Sept. 11 by MCH:

"Rumor Mayor Wagner to be appointed Secy. Urban Affairs. If true, disastrous. Neglecting logical appointment, Robert Weaver, insult Negro people. Wagner record housing and related problems abysmal. NYC urban renewal policy destroys communities with poor its victims. Slums have worsened. Misery deepened. As New York mayor 12 years Robert Wagner symbol benefactor of poor by publicity release only. Genuine desire to fight poverty rules out such an appointment. If rumor true, urge reversal."

To this date, Wagner has not been appointed to the newly created post of Secy. of Urban Affairs. Neither has Mr. Weaver who has been head of housing in the country. Despite MCH's differences with Weaver (see story of Cooper Sq. picketline), it was felt that by-passing Weaver, a Negro, to pick Wagner who has an "abysmal" record on housing would be an insult to the Negro people and a concession to the racist Southern politicos.

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR A STATEWIDE HOUSING ASSOCIATION

1. A state wide association of interested groups and individuals should be set up. This association should not be politically affiliated and should not be led by or identified with a public official but should allow membership to political groups of both parties.

2. The purpose of this association should be the positive one of fighting to protect the right of every person in California, regardless of his race, religion or national origin, to acquire property of his choice which he can afford and to reaffirm judicial, quasi-judicial and legislative for his right, and not the negative purpose of completely repealing proposition 14.

   Other purposes should be investigated in order to broaden the base of the association without reducing its impact on the problem of housing.

3. The association should work for the adoption of the following proposed constitutional amendment, even before the court fight on Proposition 14 is completed, if our legal advisors agree that doing this would not be harmful to their positions in attempting to having Proposition 14 declared unconstitutional. The amendment should state that:

   > Nothing in the Constitution shall be deemed to deny a person the right to acquire or lease residential property offered for this purpose which he chooses and can afford, without regard to his race, religion or national origin, or to remove from the state, its subdivisions or agencies the power to provide a remedy for any person who has been deprived, directly or indirectly, solely because of discrimination based on race, religion or national origin, of his right to acquire or lease residential property of his choice which he can afford.

4. The association should join with other Civil Rights groups outside of California in seeking steps on the federal level which would increase the chances of success for the amendment. Including:

   a. An amendment to the President's Executive order of the Civil Rights Act to extend its coverage to purchasers of FHA housing.

   b. Barring the use of federal funds in California's Urban Renewal projects.

5. The association should seek legislation in Sacramento making the acceptance of discriminatory listings a ground for revocation of the license of a real estate broker.

6. The association should institute and seek the cooperation of its membership and local affiliates in positive education and action programs, including:

   a. Calling and organizing a Day of Mourning in California due to passage of Proposition 14.

   b. A scientific study should be made of the proposition 14 election results to determine guidelines for future education and action programs.

   c. Intensive efforts should be made to speed the integration of all local Realtor Boards.

   d. Continue to speedily establish programs for testing the constitutionality of Proposition 14.

   e. Promote a selective boycott against major enterprises such as the Los Angeles Times which took a "Yes on 14" position.

   f. Publicizing the misstatements of the realtors on proposition 14 and seeking to have them correct their misstatements.

   g. Promote fund raising activities.

   h. Demonstration against proven discriminators, i.e. boycotts, leaflets, pickets.

   i. Boycotting of "Yes on14" realtors, at the appropriate time, demanding that they do not participate in discriminatory transactions.

   j. Providing list of realtors agreeing to sell under the Rumford Act and encouraging the people of goodwill to deal only through these realtors or fair housing groups.

   k. Providing local information centers concerning available open housing and "No on 14" realtors.

   l. Arranging meetins and programs on civil rights and the relationship thereto of fair housing laws.

   m. Seeking fair housing pledges from individuals and realtors of goodwill.

America the Beautiful...

Webster's tamely defines rat as "any of certain rodents allied to the mice, but considerably larger."

26-year-old Mrs. Rita Davis, mother of four, told the New York Times: "When I have to use the bathroom at night I always knock before opening the door. You've got to warn the rats you're coming, or they'll resent the intrusion."

John Alexander also knows rats intimately. Reports the New York Post:

Boy Bitten by Rat

Five-year-old John Alexander was bitten on the lip by a rat while the youngster slept in his first-floor apartment yesterday at 2174 Lexington Av., near 130th St. His parents are taking part in the rent strike to protest rats in their building. The child's mother, Mrs. Anabelle Alexander, said she had complained to the landlord for more than two years about the rats.

Why does CORE care? Isn't CORE primarily concerned with the non-violent struggle for racial equality?

> Yes, for 22 years CORE has been in the forefront of the movement for civil rights -- and you know that decent housing is an essential first step toward racial equality. The segregated ghettos of the North do as good a job of repressing human dignity as do the white supremacists of the South!

In Cleveland, in Philadelphia, in New York, in suburban slums as well, CORE is showing that people can do something about fallen ceilings and leaking pipes ... about heatless radiators and stinking firetraps ... about rats that gnaw on their children and slumlords who turn deaf ears to legitimate complaints.

Dateline: Cleveland. "Much of the city remains a bleak wasteland of broken plaster and fetid hallways, where every day children are bitten by rats."

Dateline: Hempstead, L.I. "At the invitation of the Long Island CORE, Welfare Commissioner John J. McManus took a guided slum tour here yesterday and immediately halted rent payments to five landlords. 'We never CORE has proved that rent strikes are effective in establishing livable conditions. Cleveland's first rent strike ended after two weeks with the owner of a four-story slum building agreeing to all of CORE's demands. A New York judge has upheld the legality of rent strikes, and New York's Mayor Wagner has endorsed them.

The problem now is how to put this potent formula to work in hundreds of other rat-ridden slum areas. YOU can help CORE organize more tenant groups, spur victimized householders into acting on their own behalf. You can help with money!

Won't you act now, before the next child is mutilated by rats? Place your contribution in the postpaid envelope below. Give $10 or more if you can -- less if you must -- but send it today, so that little ones like John Alexander may sleep safely through the night.

DRAFT - INCOMPLETE

HISTORY OF SYRACUSE C.O.R.E.'S ACTION CAMPAIGN INVOLVING URBAN RENEWAL AND RESIDENTIAL DESEGREGATION IN SYRACUSE

Related by G. A. Wiley

In the spring of 1963 C.O.R.E'S research committee, under my direction, prepared maps showing in detail the trend of the Negro relocation over the first two years of urban renewal. In summary, these data indicated that 97% of the Negroes relocated in the city were placed either in the hard core ghetto or in areas immediately adjacent to it. At the same time the Housing Committee conducted tests on the listings made available by the Relocation Office. These tests showed that 6 landlords out of 6 tested discriminated against Negroes solely on the basis of ~~their~~ race. Similar case studies were available from a church sponsorship program which had been written up by the Urban Renewal administration. Their data showed that a Negro met rejection based on race in 18 out of 19 instances after apartments were located and found to be otherwise suitable. In June, C.O.R.E. began its campaign to confront the City of Syracuse with the trend of resegregation which relocation, due to urban renewal, was found to be producing. Since at this juncture there were still over 600 families to be relocated due to urban renewal, a highway project, and the Upstate Medical Center expansion, an important opportunity for residential desegregation obviously confronted the Syracuse community. Since resegregation had been occurring, despite some efforts put forth by church groups, and despite the operations of the State Commission for Human Rights, with its law against discrimination in multiple residence housing, it seemed clear that dynamic new action programs were going to be required by the community. C.O.R.E. prepared a set of nine suggestions aimed at overcoming racial discrimination in housing for Syracuse. On June 27th, 1963, these proposals were brought by Evert Makinen, then co-chairman of C.O.R.E., and myself to Mayor William F. Walsh, and on the same day to Mr. Edward Eagan, senior vice-president of Eagan Real Estate, which was one of major benifICIARIES from urban renewal. It was necessary to sit-in in the Eagan Real Estate offices in order even to get an appointment. In both instances we were politely brushed off by Mr Eagan, after appropriate expressions of concern for the plight of Negroes in Syracuse. But he pointed out that his most immediate concern was convircing Syracusans that they should live in high-rise, multi-story, luxury apartments that he was to build on the urban renewal site. The mayor, after referring us to his long record of activity with the State Commission for Human Rights, was concerned with the situation of the Negro and with appropriate references to his Code of Human Rights, proposed a year ago, made passing references that a Human Rights program he was considering establishing later in the summer, and invited us to talk at greater length with the director and associate director of urban renewal, who had in addition been present at the June 27th meeting. Before such a meeting could be set up, however, our attentions became involved with the Merchants National Bank, when we found evidence of their having been involved in a discriminatory practice in dealing with a Negro over the sale of a house. While picketing of the bank was in progress, an expanded form of our nine-point program was produced and mailed to all the banks and realtors of Syracuse, under the title "Let's Desegregate Syracuse." We also sent letters to the presidents of these organizations, asking them to discuss our program with us and to relate to us what programs of their own they might be establishing toward the end of desegregating Syracuse. Very few responses were received.

Simultaneously, we were canvassing the urban renewal site for families being forced to move as a result of the project demolition. We tried to encourage some families to stand firm and pledged to stand with them until adequate housing could be found for them outside the ghetto. This phase of the program was not particularly successful, possibly due to lack of adequate follow-up on our part because of involvement with other action projects. Specifically, close on the heels of Merchants Bank action followed the dramatic and successful action against Hotel Syracuse, which culminated in the hiring by the hotel of a number of Negro busboys and a pledge to hire waiters, waitresses, doormen, and bellman.

On August 26, two days before the historic march on Washington, we sponsored, along with N.A.A.C.P., I.U.E. Civil Rights Committee, and the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, a marchk in Syracuse for fair housing. This was attended by about 300 Negro and white citizens. It was designed as a public confrontation of Mayor Walsh, County Executive John Mulroy, Mr. Kenneth Spaulding, president of the Board of Realtors, and Mr. William Andrews, speaking for the out-of-power Democratic Party. We aksed each to speak to the question of what positive programs their party or group or administration intended to pursue toward the desegregation of Syracuse. Mr. Spaulding had no program but promised to take up the issue at the September 18th meeting of the Board of Realtors. Mr. Mulroy promised to look into potential legislation and said he wanted to "do right" in this area. Mayor Walsh again pointed to his record and referred to his Commission on Human Rights that he was in the progess of developing but mentioned no specific actions otherwise. Mr. Andrews, for the Democratic Party, came out in favor of city or county human rights commissions, better distribution of Negroes in public housing, a scattered site public housing program, pledged himself against the construction of any more public housing in ghetto areas, pledged a desire for extra city services in ghetto and surrounding areas, porposed a rent-control office to prevent slum landlords from exploiting Negroes, and suggested the formation of biracial neighborhood councils to promote racial harmony in neighborhoods. On Wednesday, August 28, four members of Syracus C.O.R.E. who remained home from the Washington March, had the follow-up meeting with the Urban Renewal adminstration. It was clear that the magnitude of changes which we had suggested in our nine-point program had to be decided at a much higher level than the Department of Urban Improvement. Since we had had nothing from the city, county, or private interests of the community by way of a positive program, we commenced on a direct action program aimed at halting the progress of urban renewal.

To this end Bruce Thomas, now chairman of C.O.R.E., Debbie Niemand, Byron Rushing, and I walked onto a lot at the corner of Madison and South Townsend Streets where a crane and bulldozer were in the process of leveling a gas station, and physically interposed ourselves and thus prevented the equipment from being operated. At one point in this action, which was, to say the least, hair-raising, a workman attacked Bruce Thomas with fists and an iron pipe and attempted to throw him off of the deck of the crane. Despite being struck several blows to the face Bruce maintained a non-violent attitude and maintained his position on the crane. The workman was restrained by his associates. Several policemen stood by passively. The next day we greeted the workmen early in the day at the site and perched on their equipment in such a manner as to prevent them from using it. We also expanded our operations to two other sites involving the Upstate Medical Center, one of which was being worked by a Negro concern. These projects were also blocked and the ~~xxx~~ workmen returned home. The third day we conceived a plan wherein we permitted all of the demolition crews to return to work save for the original lot at Madison and Townsend, which we adopted as our own. We permitted the demolition crews to go to work on other lots so long as they kept their equipment away from ours.

We posted daily pickets on the site to be sure that the workmen did not return.

These actions prompted a response from the Mayor's office. I was invited to a meeting on September 3, with the Mayor, Mssrs, Hale & Chiles from Urban Renewal, Corporation COunsel Pancock, Presson, from the Mayor's office, Councilwoman Coburn, Mr. Maier from the State Commission for Human Rights, Bob Warr, president of N.A.A.C.P., and Rev. Horn, representing the Interfaith Committee on Religion and Race. The Mayor made no specific reference to our direct action but had before him our suggested program for desegregation of Syracuse. He discussed it with the group point by point, in general pointing to reasons why he could not carry out most of the proposals suggested. He did promise "beefed-up" code enforcement," renewed effort on the part of the relocation office, and a committee to work on fair housing in connection with relocation. I pointed out at the end of the meeting that these proposals did not sound like the action program which might warrant the cessation of our direct action activities. On September 6, after a meeting of the active membership of C.O.R.E. to discuss the matter, Bruce Thomas sent a letter to the Mayor advising him that the major points of our program had been 1) desegregation as a major objective of urban renewal and specifically that no Negroes should be forced to move into blocks containing more than 30% Negro residents and 2) that the city should undertake an immediate program of scattered-site public housing. These were felt to be the heart of the proposals. He indicated that it was the will of Syracuse C.O.R.E. that if significant action were not forth-coming by September 13, that direct ~~xxx~~ action campaign would be stepped-up to the point of retarding all demolition in the urban renewal project area. On September 12, the Mayor responded with a 5 page letter discussing our nine-point program in detail. This letter was basically a summary of the discussion of the meeting of September 3. The Mayor labelled the Thomas letter as an ultimatum. The only new proposals indicated were that he planned to set up a human rights commission before October first and that he was appointing Councilwoman Coburn to head a special committee on relocation and code enforcement. On Friday, September 13, as promised, C.O.R.E pickets appeared at an urban renewal site where demolitions were in progress. A direct action team led by C.O.R.E. chairman Bruce Thomas invaded the site, climbed on cranes and equipment, and completely blocked the progress of demolition action. This was met by vigorously police action, called for by the mayor. Thirteen C.O.R.E. members and one bystander were arrested in the course of the afternoon. That night over a hundred people rallied at the C.O.R.E. office and marched to the jail to serenade the prisoners. Also on September 13, the Interfaith Committee on Religion and Race volunteered to act as mediators in the dispute. A meeting was held in the mayor's office with them, representatives of C.O.R.E., the mayor and his staff, ~~and~~ Bob Warr of N.A.A.C.P. No great progress was made but everyone agreed to submit more detailed recommendations on Monday, September, 16. Over the weekend the N.A.A.C.P. and the Civil Rights Committee of Local 320, I.U.E., joined in support of C.O.R.E. in the action. At Monday's meeting, C.O.R.E., N.A.A.C.P., and I.U.E. submitted ~~x xxxxx~~ and eleven-point set of proposals, which were jointly sponsored and in many cases contained more detailed suggestions. Some specific steps called for from the administration were the following: for the mayor to solicit volunteers from among his top administrators to participate in relocation of Negro families outside the ghetto; for the ~~xxxxx~~ Mayor to call a meeting of bankers and realtors to remind them of their responsibilities in this effort; that the 30% rule be invoked so as not to force Negroes to relocate in segregated neighborhoods; that a city ordinance prohibiting discrimination in all phases of housing transactions including injunctive powers, and ~~subpoena~~ penal provisions be enacted; that a scattered-site public housing program be undertaken; and that the housing code be enforced more vigorously. The mayor at this meeting conceded a number of additional points over his original position. He agreed not to force Negroes to move into blocks already densely populated with Negroes. He would not accept our definition of 30% but said he would defer to the State Commission for Human Rights for a judgment. He additionally suggested some steps for an educational campaign to promote open occupancy and he offered to ask the state commission to move up its open meeting to discuss the new anti-discrimination law in housing from October 24 to near the beginning of October. On the same day, September 16, ten more demonstrators were arrested on the urban renewal lot. At this meeting the mayor contended that he would not further negotiate with people who participated in what he characterized as 'lawless acts'. This threat was answered with 14 more walk-ins on Tuesday, September 17, including myself and Jesse Epps of the negotiating team. Tuesday was the roughest day on the lot. There had been some incidents on Friday, one in which the boom of the crane was dropped about five feet with three persons on it and two of the three were injured, though not seriously. On Tuesday, Ira Harrison and I both had our arms severely twisted by police, who claimed this was necessary in order to subdue us. Both of us suffered sprained wrists and required medical treatment. Another person was punched by a police officer. On Wednesday, September 18, the arrests were voluntarily suspended. This was done as a gesture of good faith as our step toward re-establishing negotiations, which had been broken off as a result of Tuesday's arrests. The Religion and Race Committee, again acting as mediators, and acting through Bob Warr, re-established communications. On Thursday, serious negotiations had progressed for about two hours when the mayor summarily announced that he ~~xxxxx~~ was promulgating his human rights program along with his so-called action program for desegregating Syracuse. These represented his most advanced suggestions to date. He proposed a human rights commission which would have educational and investigatory powers but no coercive or penal powers. He proposed some specific steps for effecting better code enforcement, including the hiring of a new deputy superintendent as soon as possible and provision for people to fill the gap until the deputy could be found. He also proposed the hiring of a community organization specialist who would work with the community organizations and act as executive of the human rights commission. He endorsed in principle scattered-site public housing and indicated that a pilot program would be undertaken. He also indicated a program for relocation wherein Negroes would not be forced to relocate in blocks having "approximately one-thirdNegro residents." He noted that there would be 300-350 low-middle income housing units put back into the urban renewal area. Note that this would not necessarily achieve residential desegregation, but it would PROVIDE some additional housing for Negroes. He also indicated that he would send some letters urging open occupancy to churches & realtors and conduct other educational efforts. This clearly represented a major advance over previous programs. Nonetheless, it fell short of our hoped-for program in several important respects. First, the personal leadership involving personal action of the mayor and his top administration in the relocation program was not called for. Second, his human rights commission would not even have subpoena power, not to mention injunctive power or enforcement power. Further, our groups were quite concerned about a guarantee that there would be substantial representation of civil rights groups on the human rights commission. The pilot nature of the scattered-site public housing program did not measure up to our concepts of an immediate program and the "approximately one-third" seemed too fuzzy to be useful in promoting residential desegregation of relocatees. When the mayor announced his strong-armed intention of releasing this information to the community while negotiations were still in progress, our groups interpreted this as a sign of bad faith and walked out of the meeting. Since the arrest group had been pledged to be held in abeyance while negotiations were in progress, with the break-up of this meeting, 23 persons immediately entered the urban renewal site, including 3 university professors, one of whom is the director of the highly-touted Youth Development Center. On Friday the demonstrations continued with 18 additional arrests on the site. These arrests after the first day did not materially interfere with the progress of demolition. The did, however, provide an important witness for members of the community to express themselves clearly and directly on the question of social injustice done to Negroes in Syracuse due to housing discrimination. In addition, the strong picket lines maintained at the demolition sites, seldom falling below 100 at any given time, indicated the magnitude of community support for the Negro cause.

METROPOLITAN COUNCIL on HOUSING
219 Seventh Avenue WA 4-9858 New York 10011

December 23, 1965

Dear Friend:

One of the "Rent Strike" laws passed in the last session of the State Legislature called for the establishment of rent-impairing violations by the Department of Buildings. These violations, once enumerated, would give tenants the right to have the rent abated, SIX MONTHS after the violations were recorded in the files of the Dep't. of Buildings.

There are many defects in the law (which will be discussed at the Metropolitan Council on Housing Legislative Conference scheduled for January 29, 1966) but the Department of Buildings has now issued the list of violations, 66 in number, which it states "constitutes a fire hazard or a serious threat to the life, health or safety of occupants". Attached you will find the 66 violations. You will see as you read the list that many are a danger to tenants' rights! These we have starred. We have also listed below about a dozen violations which the Department of Buildings has NOT seen fit to include as a serious threat to life, health or safety of tenants.

MCH feels that the law has many weaknesses and pitfalls, such as: tenants must wait six months enduring hazardous violations before the rent may be abated; the tenants must deposit all of the rent into court before trial; if the landlord proves the condition was caused by the tenant, his family, his guests or some other tenant, his family or guests, the landlord wins the case and the tenant may be charged with $100 in court costs.

We ask that you or your organization appear at the hearing scheduled by the Department of Buildings for January 5, 1966, at 10 A.M. at 125 Worth Street. Demand that proper rent-impairing violations be established and point out to the Department the pitfalls in the law.

We urge you to write to the Department of Buildings for time to speak. We are urging all tenants to attend, whether or not they wish to speak.

Sincerely-

HOUSING PROGRAM : 12/28/64 - GS
DRAFT PRPPOSAL ON TECHNICAL PROBLEMS

Slumlords are engaged in an active revolt against the City. Individually and through associates, they deliberately violate the housing laws. Since the motive for the revolt is entirely economic, the slumlord can be expected to surrender when the cost of the revolt becomes great enough.

Surrender means an attempt to abandon a building, give it away or sell it cheaply. More and more slumlords are trying to surrender. But there is no one to whom to surrender. We propose to remedy that situation by organizing tenants' cooperatives or nonprofit private agencies with access to public funds which can rehabilitate the slum buildings.

CORE should take a position and act in this situation. A good program will not only have a massive impact on slum conditions. It will provide jobs. And it will give CORE a great opportunity to organize.

Several alternatives should be considered. Each of them may be the best in a particular situation. The wishes of the tenants will frequently dictate the choice.

First, there is the possibility of a voluntary receivership. T his would put the city in the position of repairing the building, ownership and control returning to the landlord after the city's expenditures have been repaid. In light of the small rent rolls of these buildings, the city might be in control of the buildings for a number of years. The land and building would ultimately still be owned by the landlord. City management of slum buildings is notoriously poor.

A second alternative is a donation of the building to the city. The City real estate department usually rejects such gifts. Under Lazarus, the department has been disposing of valuable city land at upset prices on the theory that city ownership of land and buildings not needed for immediate purposes is contrary to public policy. Commissioner Lazarus can best be described in terms of his proposal to build apartment building in the northern half of Central Park.

The third alternative is to set up a nonprofit membership corporation, the directors of which would be community leaders. This organization would acquire title to the buildings, raising money either by way of mortgage or by way of loans from the city or the federal government, or both. This approach has much to recommend it, but, in the past has drawn opposition on a variety of political, social and other grounds. This technique has been used successfully by Boston CORE.

The fourth technique is to form a nonprofit corporation which would secure funds from the city, foundations and private sources. The money would be used to repair buildings. The city would assign its lien for such repairs, enabling the corporation to be repaid. This device is being used in Philadelphia. It is simply a device to help the city evade its responsibilities since the city already has the power to repair buildings, recovering the cost through a lien on rents.

The last alternative is to establish a cooperative (or condominium) under which the tenants themselves would own the buildings. This alternative is by far the most attractive when the tenants want it and when the tenants are well organized.

The cooperative is a good solution because, at every level, it meets the test of Occam's Razor : It is the simplest and most direct solution.

The purpose of any slum housing program is not the development of real estate, but the amelioration of living conditions for the people. The most effective way to assist these people would be to give them new public housing of an adequate standard at a cost they can afford to pay. This is unfortunately not available. It must be a part of CORE's program to secure such housing. Until such time as these buildings can be replaced, which must take between 10 and 20 years, the community must deal with the problem of making these particular buildings habitable.

This primary objective can be accomplished by a variety of means, but the simplest and in the long run cheapest device is to give assistance directly to the tenant rather than to one of several layers of profit-making individuals who will ultimately pass a share of the assistance to the tenant. There would be a considerable direct financial saving. More important, tenant groups having an interest and a responsibility for their own buildings gain in a veriety of ways. Having an interest in the buildings, the tenants would and could perform a great many repair and maintenance jobs for themselves far less expensively than it could be done for them. This is one obvious additional aid factor. Primarily, there are psychological and sociological benefits which are recognized but not that easy to define.

The initial step toward cooperatives is to organize tenants. The whole scheme must be democratically accepted or it is worthless.It should be the rule that something more than three-fourths of the tenants ought to accept the plan for it to become effective. The purpose of this requirement is purely practical, aside from any other consideration. The plan will work only if the tenants truly cooperate.

The financing of the acquisition would depend entirely on city or federal funds. The city has available funds to assist in the rehabilitation of slum dwellings. These funds are available on a ten year, 5% basis. There is every reason to expect that an investment which can be repaid without significant rent increase will make a considerable difference in the living conditions of these buildings, even though it will not by any means make them first class housing. The justification of the investment is the lack of alternatives at this time and the hope that within the ten year period a more satisfactory, permanent, alternative can be developed. Further, such an investment will make these buildings sufficiently better than the average of New York tenements to put the matter beyond doubt.

There has been a tendency on the part of some officials to be disinterested in any rehabilitation which does not convert a slum into a palace. Thus some rehabilitations have taken four story walkups and converted them into two duplexes. Such rehabilitations require rent far in excess of the ability of these tenants to pay and consequently intensify rather than ameliorate the problem. It does no good to tell them that for the next ten years they must continue to have inadequate heat because it is impossible to give them a first class central heating system. What is required, until they can get good housing, is an adequate housing system. Further, the inability to create perfection overnight has been used as an excuse for doing absolutely nothing. These tenants, and many others, would benefit greatly from an investment that makes sense in terms of these buildings, without regard that they would benefit even more if the investment were triple. There is reason to believe that key city officials are now prepared to cooperate with CORE in developing and implementing a sound program. Demonstrations will probably be necessary to convince the Mayor.

In addition to the city funds, the city can make a substantial contribution by utilizing its powers to grant tax abatements. While the taxes of these buildings are not great, they are the equivalent, approximately, of a month's rent. A five-year abatement would therefore be a significant addition to available funds.

In addition, federal housing mortgage guarantees might be available. This involves a good many complications. It is , however, a distinct possibility.

In addition , private mortgages might be available upon showing a proper financial plan. The reduction of the outstanding mortgage is here of the utmost importance. In many cases, the present mortgagee will take his loss now in order to secure at least some payment. The reduced mortgage could be refinanced with the use of governmental or private funds. At this level, community leaders and foundations should be willing to participate.

Within the cooperative, the concept of rent would of course be eliminated. The tenants would make a monthly payment sufficient to pay off the mortgage and to provide for maintenance and services. The exact payment must be calculated by an expert. It is anticipated, however, that the monthly payment will be slightly less or slightly more than the current rents, but not greatly different. At the same time, a portion of the monthly payments (the amount used to pay off the mortgage) would in fact be building an equity for the tenants.

It is contemplated that transfer of the individual apartments will be closely restricted. Leasing or subleasing would not be permitted except under most unusual circumstances. In the event a tenant desired to move away permanently, the cooperative would have the right to purchase the apartment at a price equal to the accumulated equity actually paid by that member, payment being made over a reasonable period of time. The cooperative would in turn resell in such a way that the new member would pay off the old member's equity in addition to his own current payments. For example, a member selling out after three years, would be paid off by his replacement over a three year period, or, possibly, over a five year period. In any event, the withdrawing member would receive his equity, but nothing more.

Outright sale of the buildings ought not to be undertaken except with the concurrence of 90% of the members unless the sale is a forced one. Any net equity remaining would be distributed to the members at the time of sale.

Of particular importance would be a scheme under which the cooperative were allowed to build up a limited reserve which could be utilized to tide over the payment obligations of families of deceased members. Every precaution should be taken to enable families, the leading earner of which dies, to continue their memberships. On the same theory, transfers to the immediate family of members should be permitted. In case of death or serious illness interfering with the income of the family, the cooperative should postpone the payments due, meeting the deficit out of the reserve fund.

Certain aspects of the plan would have to be cleared with the welfare department. The general principle of welfare is that the ownership of property terminates the right to receive welfare. Since some families depend on welfare for rent, a suitable arrangement would have to be made to enable them to be members while still retaining welfare assistance. The titles of such families could perhaps be held in trust by the cooperative.

The cooperative would clearly acquire certain kinds of specialized assistance. This is true of any cooperative, even on Sutton Place South. Such assistance would be made available from several sources. Legal services will be made available without charge for such period of time as that may be necessary by CORE. Expert assistance on matters of construction and maintenance would be given by one of several persons well qualified in that field. Naturally, the entire scheme would not become operative without some cooperation from certain government agencies, whose continued assistance would then also be available. CORE will also arrange accounting and bookkeeping services for the time being.

CORE will also continue to work with the tenants, with the assistance of the regional field staff. The initial financing will be negotiated for the tenants by CORE personnel. Financial assistance will theraafter continue to be negotiated by CORE personnel where necessary.

It is to be anticipated that, from the commencement of the project to the completion of the initial construction program, approximately one year will elapse. During that time, the processes involved will furnish invaluable training to the tenants. This training, together with the promised assistance of specialists should make the whole project a success.

In such cases, it is, of course, necessary to anticipate the possible impact of failure. It is difficult to see how the tenants themselves could possibly be worse off should their cooperative fail than they are today. If, at the worst, they have to give up their cooperative, they will again have a landlord and they will again have to pay rent instead of owning their buildings. The program does not involve any dislocation of tenants. It does not involve any rent increases. At the same time, it is possible that some governmental agency will sustain a financial loss. This loss cannot exceed a relatively small amount and would in any event be recovered in large part even if the cooperative is a failure. (The recovery will simply be from rents). The loss cannot be excessive since at least two thirds of all monies advanced will be applied to the improvement of the building, (and as much as 100% may be so applied).

It goes without saying that a considerable amount of calculation must be performed for every building before these arrangements can be completed. Nevertheless, it is the principle that arrangements of this kind are the best solution to the problem and that the only question is whether the amount of improvement is dollars "X" or dollars "Y". Only where the tenants do not want a cooperative, are not organized for it or where other good reasons exist should an alternative method for rehabilitation of the buildings be utilized. Fundamentally, CORE should take a clear, public position that any program of this kind is, first a stopgap, interim, inadequate program; second, necessitated by the abdication of government either to enforce the housing laws or to provide directly for the amelioration of housing conditions in the slums; third, an essential undertaking at this time to ameliorate horrible housing conditions in New York City which must not be allowed to continue. But such a program is in no sense a substitute for broad programs which government must initiate. It is CORE's position that government should initiate the following programs with the utmost promptness:

1. New York City should take into receivership one thousand buildings every three months for at least one year. This compares with less than 200 taken in the last three years. These buildings should be selected as the worst slums, which no landlord will voluntarily repair. This would take into the immediate government responsibility the worst 10% of New York City's slums.

2. A greatly strenghtened enforcement program should be instituted. The question here is not new laws; it is constant pressure on the large landlords who deliberately violate the housing laws, for the purpose of forcing them to obey the law or to get out of the housing business. To be effective, the building department needs about 2,000 inspectors instead of the present 412.

3. The city should immediately authorize the construction of 30,000 to 50,000 units per year under the Mitchell-Lama law. While this is by no means a desirable or, under some views, even an acceptable device for the construction of new housing, city government has permitted the situation in housing to detetiorate to such a point that large amounts of new housing are essential. The construction of this housing will also provide substantial amounts of new jobs, since such housing should not, of course, be permitted to be done except by integrated unions. Further, the construction of housing under Mitchell-Lama places no economic strain whatsoever on the city, that being a feature of the law. Such construction would permit the development of really sound urban renewal plans for New York and would immediately put pressure on real estate owners to repair and recondition such housing as warrants the expenditure. In effect, the construction of Mitchell-Lama housing in large quantities would place pressure from the top on slum housing, just as the taking of large numbers of buildings into receiverships squeezes from below.

4. The city should not sell any more land. On the contrary, all land acquired by the city by any means should be reserved, as in a land bank, pending the development of urban renewal plans. Empty spaces should be turned into small parks or play areas for the time being. Much of this work could be done by community groups. The sale of land in New York City at this time is a shortsighted policy which will cast a large financial burden on the near future when this same land will have to be repurchased.

5. City, state and federal agencies should promptly develop a plan for urban renewal which contemplates neighborhoods which are racially and economically integrated and which mix old and new housing. Under-occupied and under-utilized areas should be used for these purposes. This plan should contemplate that by 1985 not less than 40% of all housing in the City of New York will be owned by government. This plan should exclude the taking of land by eminent domain for high rent housing. No land should be taken by eminent domain under this plan for resale for private development, except during the next three years. In other words, Mitchell-Lama, as a concept is to be used solely as an interim measure and for a limited period of time.

6. The city should promptly implement each of the now existing programs under which the repair, rehabilitation and construction of housings can be subsidized. The failure of the city to utilize existing programs is one of the most significant failures of the Wagner administration. This administration has deliberately avoided taking decisive action in housing, over the protest of its own experts. Certain laws to protect rent strikes would be useful. The criminal negligence of the Mayor should be stressed.

8. The city should create either a deputy mayor in charge of housing or should ask the Legislature to create a housing authority. In either case, the agency so created should have full enforcement powers, coupled with super-departmental power. One of the key problems of New York City housing is that a given constructive step requires the consultation of many different departments and compliance with their respective regulations. The lack of coordination is the one most damaging factors, indeed providing the excuse for much of the administration's inaction.

9. Fundamentally, CORE must demand and create a change in approach to housing. New York requires massive housing measures, the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars. These sums are available in a city with an annual budget of three and a half billion dollars. The funds are simply not made available.

The foregoing points of a general program are here set forth solely to show that the cooperative program is simply one emergency element of CORE's long range housing program. The cooperative program is needed now because it is intolerable to permit existing conditions to continue while a broad program is carried through. It is, however, only the broad program which can produce the ultimate results required by the community.

James Russell Lowell

From "The Present Crisis"

The Congress of Racial Equality, like many groups watching the growth despite 15 years of urban renewal, wants answers to the question: "Is urban renewal adequate to the job of eliminating urban ghetto areas - and if not, why not?" To find answers, an autonomous planning and urban renewal department, called Urban Associates, was organized in New York CORE.

STATEMENT OF THE PROBLEM

Authorities admit that present-day American ghettos cause or foster high delinquency and crime rates, school and housing segregation, and intense deprivation contributing to periodic violent eruptions, such as those in the summer of 1964.

New York, like many major cities, acknowledges the undesirability of ghettos. The city's official policy is to encourage integrated public schools and residential areas, and generally healthy environmental conditions for all citizens in an "open city". Nevertheless, New York has been rebuilding ghettos, using urban renewal funds supplied in part by federal and state governments. Urban renewal, which is intended to "renew", has done nothing of the kind.

Urban Associates believes it is impossible to have healthy cities so long as they contain massive ghettos serving as fountainheads of social ills, not only for the ghetto dweller, but for the city at large.

In general, American ghettos are areas for the containment of the Negro minority. Nearly half of America's Negroes are forced to live in ghettos. New York's Harlem is typical. Like most ghettos, it is characterized by:

a) Almost total ethnic homogeneity.

b) Extremely high densities and poor housing.

c) Very low average income.

d) Inadequate or deficient city services; e.g., dirty streets (poor garbage collection) police tolerance of extra-legal activity, etc.

e) Very poor, ethnically and economically segregated schools.

f) An environmental boundary which identifies it as apart from the majority city and as a less desirable place to live, raise children, shop or go to school.

g) A general feeling of hopelessness on the part of residents, which is reflected in low aspirational levels of youth. (Dr. Kenneth Clark calls this "the death of the spirit".)

The many adverse ramifications of ghettos are well known. While attempts have been made to solve one or another prblem, they have been largely piecemeal. For example, while much lip service has been paid to the desirability of integrated housing, no major renewal project in New York has considered this element in its selection, configuration or design. Renewal and redevelopment schemes have tended to solidify rather than weaken the ghetto.

APPROACH TO A SOLUTION

"We believe it may be possible to redesign and renew ghetto areas so attractive environmentally and physically as to sharply minimize the importance of racial homogeneity of a community as a consideration for potential white residents. If this is true, it may be possible to remove huge ghettos from our central cities."

Report to the national CORE convention, June, 1964

"The problems of Harlem will not be solved as long as Harlem remains all Negro and all low-income." Leader of District Planning Board #10, N.Y.C., during recent conference

Like many local and national leaders, we feel the present impetus should be toward eradication of the ghetto. Any plan which purports to do this must attempt to eliminate all the characteristics mentioned above. Mere construction of new buildings is not enough.

We feel the adequacy of urban renewal to meet this task can be evaluated by a research project which sets forth the steps required to reduce our country's ghettos and slums. By comparing what needs to be done with what can be done under urban renewal, the project could illuminate deficiencies in the construction and/ or application of present urban redevelopment provisions.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE RESEARCH-DEMONSTRATION PROJECT

One of the best ways to arrive at answers to hypothetical questions is to have an experiment applicable to an existing area. In this way, hypotheses can be compared against existing field conditions and practices. This project is concerned not only with constructing plans which answer the questions posed here, but also with having these plans implemented by the city.

For this reason the research project should be constructed around an existing area which is part of a ghetto. To have a workable research-demonstration project, the area should:

a) Already be declared appropriate for urban redevelopment.

b) Not be surrounded by other slums, but be in a peripheral position relative to the hard core.

c) Have been adequately studied and analyzed by city redevelopment agencies.

d) Have been preliminarily planned; e.g., the planning agency should have stated conceptually what is required in the area.

e) Have very high densities and generally very poor housing.

After reviewing all areas which have been given urban renewal designations by the New York City Planning Commission (pursuant to application for federal funds for more detailed planning) the St. Nicholas Park area was one which met all these criteria.

The city is presently doing preliminary studies on an urban renewal project for St. Nicholas Park. There is every evidence that the city will be content merely to clean out the worst buildings and erect new low-income units, with no imaginative planning to reduce the ghetto itself. In fact, the city's proposal promises to further solidify the ghetto, with all its attendant social and physical problems.

Urban Associates believes that, presented with a new, fresh, well-documented alternative, the city would be inclined to accept it. As additional incentive, we will insure community support by full participation of all levels of the community in the plan's preparation.

The research project will devise a complete plan, reinforced with adequate documentation and coupled with thorough social planning, expressly designed to:

a) Maximize opportunities for economic and ethnic residential integration.

b) Incorporate a school building plan to encourage and serve an integrated student body.

c) Design and situate facilities to insure their utilization by both St. Nicholas and the city at large.

d) Devise criteria for rehabilitation of buildings, utilizing construction innovations which keep new rents at a level present occupants can afford.

e) Devise plans for relocating displaced persons consistent with the city's stated policy of fostering residential integration, and the federal requirement for safe, sound, sanitary housing. The plan might recommend: 1) construction of vest pocket (FHA) housing on available land outside ghetto areas; 2) rent subsidies; or 3) any combination of these or any other schemes which can practically provide for adequate non-slum, non-ghetto housing.

f) Take advantage of existing city and community facilities and amenities (City College, parks, existing waterfronts) and combine these with others to increase the intangible "status" potential.

In sum, our plan would do all the things the city says it regards as important and desirable: integrated communities, moderate densities, racially-balanced schools, etc. We would, however, unlike the city, include these provisions as part of a total well-coordinated scheme ready for immediate implementation.

CENTRAL QUESTIONS TO BE ANSWERED BY THE PROJECT

ONE: Can the housing of ghetto dwellers be brought up to standard using existing urban renewal tools?

TWO: Can slum dwellers be relocated in numbers sufficient to reduce the density of the renewal area?

Three: Can the relocation of slum dwellers take place without encountering social restrictions (discrimination), and if not, how can these restrictions be overcome using existing urban renewal tools?

FOUR: Can a community once solidly a part of a ghetto be reclaimed by design to encourage racial and economic integration by virtue of its design elements alone?

FIVE: Can urban renewal as presently constituted answer any or all of the needs of families being rehoused or relocated?

SIX: Are the rehabilitation provisions of existing urban renewal laws sufficient to permit meaningful upgrading of reclaimable ghetto housing?

SEVEN: Can urban renewal answer any of the environmental problems which characterize slum and ghetto areas?

EIGHT: Can school planning and location in conjunction with over-all planning in urban renewal areas result in better quality and more integrated schools?

NINE: How much would educational parks (clusters of schools) cost the city when located in urban renewal areas to serve several such areas? (Present urban renewal legislation allows partial payment for any schools built to serve persons living in an urban renewal area. New York, however, has seldom had total planning which includes this provision.)

TEN: What are the operational problems and deficiencies which permit and even encourage conflict or lack of cooperation between the many city agencies responsible for urban renewal?

Finding of the answers to these questions will be the central concern of the research-demonstration project. Where deficiencies are uncovered, the project will propose alternatives to existing practice which will meet the needs implied in each question.

TECHNICAL AND PROFESSIONAL RESOURCES

PHYSICAL DESIGN AND PLANNING; including associated research and documentation where required: Harvard University's School of Architecture and Department of City and Regional Planning.

RELOCATION AND ASSOCIATED SOCIAL PROBLEMS: including community organization: Paid staff of Urban Associates, assisted by professional social workers from Social Workers for Civil Rights Action, and professional planners from City Planners for Equal Opportunity, and community groups.

COORDINATION AND MONITORING: Urban Associates, in cooperation with community people, with emphasis on the grass roots level, in a broad program to insure that the community's own thinking is taken into account and reflected in the solution.

SUMMARY

Plans which are completed as a result of this project will be presented to the city and supported for adoption in lieu of the city's plans. This healthy competition will not preclude cooperation with city officials to insure that the project's plans are legally and financially feasible.

It is expected that vigorous community backing, coupled with the persuasive nature of an exciting, new and promising design, will fire the imagination of federal as well as city and state officials.

A successful project will, for the first time, point the way toward the elimination of slum ghetto areas, with parallel reduction of associated social problems.

While this project is immediately concerned with Harlem, it can be of more far-reaching benefit in two ways:

a) The specific plan designed for St. Nicholas Park will based on orginal techniques of coordinated action which will be applicable to deghettoization projects all across the country.

b) The mass of urban renewal and redevelopment legislation will be wieghed as to its relevance to the problems of deghettoization. Proposal for modification, elimination or enlargement of existing urban renewal provisions will be viogorously supported.

EVALUATION AND COMMENT

"Devising plans for the future development of the St. Nicholas Park area of Harlem that would at once attract white residents and minimize relocation needs and impacts upon the existing residents is a challenging pedagogical exercise. It will require imaginative inter-disciplinary collaboration, not just among the design professions, but also with several social sciences. The least we can expect is a searching reappraisal of the existing problems and the adequacies of current public programs in coping with them."

Dr. William Nash, Jr., Chariman, Department of City and Regional Planning, Graduate School of Design, Harvard

"The problem of planning truly integrated neighborhoods and cities is confronting America. We 'must' find new methods of building communities that embody the principles of democracy."

"We in the architecture schools want to work with you."

Dr. Benjamin Thompson, Chairman, Department of Architecture, Graduate School of Design, Harvard

"I find your proposal to be well-written, realistic, pertinent and generally most feasible. I wish you the best of progress with it."

Dr. Robert A. Dentler, Executive Officer, Institute of Urban Studies, Columbia University Teachers' College

"We are vitally interested in aiding people outside government in developing plans for their own areas. The basic assumptions here seem sound, and it would be of great help to the city if the group went ahead with its project for the St. Nicholas Park area."

"In a real sense, regardless of the specific merits of this proposal, it would be a vital educational experience for the people of the area to plan for themselves."

Roger Starr, Executive Director, Citizens' Housing and Planning Council, New York

"I think the possibility of finding radical new solutions to the problems of ghetto slums is an exciting one. But of more immediate interest to me is the fact that ghetto residents, through this program, would at last be able to decide for themselves what future they want for their communities. Even if nothing else is accomplished, this would be an outstanding contribution."

Gladys Harrington, Assistant Director, Volunteer Services, Assoicated Community Teams (ACT)

"This appeals to me as a wonderful project. I feel strongly that it should be undertaken. I should think many of the larger foundations would want to have a part in such a program. Reading your proposal and thinking of the need makes me wish we had the resources to participate."

Randolph Compton, The Compton Trust, New York

"I think your proposal represents a commendable venture which promises to develop some new constructive thinking on the ways in which urban renewal can be effective in rehabilitating and rebuilding a ghetto area. Particularly well thought out is the criteria developed for selecting the demonstration project area. The study, in addition to possibly developing new renewal and rehabilitation techniques, will give to the demonstration area residents a technical basis for evaluating the efficacy of the city's renewal proposals for the area."

"In summary, this is a very excellent concept and I wish you the best of luck in getting it underway."

Nathaniel J. Parish, Partner, Raymond and May Associates

"My reason for actively supporting the program for deghettoization put forward by Urban Associates goes beyond my appreciation of the unique features of the proposal in question. They are based on the realization, implicit in the proposal, that in order to attain the goal of an integrated and slumless environment, we must begin to take action now, multiply our efforts ten-fold, and set forth in detailed and articulate terms the means for attaining this goal."

TIMETABLE

Preliminary Stage (now in progress): Organization of project, investigation and documentation of problem, preparation of proposal, review of proposal by associated consultants, preliminary community organization. In pursuit of the latter objective, we organized and sponsored a major symposium to explore possibilities for deghettoization, guage and assess the community's feelings on deghettoization as a concept, and explain to city and federal officials and regional civic leaders the concept of deghettoization. We have also organized a four-class, 12-hour course in the rudiments of urban renewal and community participation in planning for deghettoization under urban renewal for community and civic leaders, to take place in February.

With respect to the main portion of the research-action project, estimates of a timetable are exceedingly difficult, due to the new nature of the program and the need for flexibility within limits. Nevertheless, the following general schedule is indicative of the pace we hope to set immediately upon receipt of foundation support:

Phase I: Planning and technical research, organization for community education and support, analytical investigation of the operation and structure of city, state and federal urban renewal agencies. This stage will last six months.

Phase II: Physical and social planning utilizing design innovations, with full community participation in the construction of the plan.

Phase III: Completion of design and final research into social problems associated with relocation. Documentation and analysis of conclusions. Continuation of organization for community action in the implementation process.

NEWS PERSPECTIVE

Housing Bias—Law at an Impasse

By Andrew J. Glass
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

WASHINGTON.

An official document circulated within the highest councils of the Johnson administration warns against the signing of a broad Presidential decree that strikes at racial prejudice in housing.

The secret civil rights position paper, drafted by the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel, was sent to the White House after being approved by Attorney General Nicholas Katzenbach.

Many legal pitfalls cited in the informal Katzenbach opinion, it was learned yesterday, will probably cause President Johnson to abandon plans for issuing a long-studied executive order that would vastly extend the Federal government's role in protecting Negroes against discriminatory housing practices.

Mr. Johnson's aids have recently urged the civil rights leadership to ease its pressure for a wide-ranging order in return for a firm Administration pledge to sponsor Federal fair housing legislation at the coming session of Congress.

The housing order sought by the civil rights groups would cover virtually all privately financed, multiple dwelling housing, such as apartment houses and suburban developments. Both public and Federally-assisted private housing of this type are already covered by legislation and by an executive order issued by President Kennedy in 1962.

But so far, key Negro leaders have resisted the legislative alternative advance. They have insisted the President has sufficient legal and political power to combat the sensitive nationwide problem through "another stroke of the pen."

"They tried to sell us a bill of goods and we weren't buying," a civil rights leader said.

The impasse over the contemplated housing order has led to frustration and bitterness on both sides. For, as a key Administration official put it, "everyone feels that anything is better than what we have now."

Nicholas Katzenbach

RECOMMENDED

The immediate issue has been simmering since March. At that time, the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing secretly recommended to Mr. Johnson that he issue an expanded executive order tightening the rules on bias in housing. This proposal became generally known in May.

As envisioned by the 16-member White House panel, such an order would apply to all multiple-dwelling mortgage lending by savings and loan associations as well as commercial and savings banks. An estimated three-fifths of the nation's new residential construction would be covered under the order.

The committee, headed by former Pennsylvania Gov. David Lawrence, made its proposal without the benefit of any formal legal opinion. Yet it held that the banks and the lending associations were receiving Federal assistance—since their deposits were insured, up to $10,000, by government agencies.

The Katzenbach opinion, however, seriously questions the legality of such a Presidential order. Basically, the Justice Department feels that the courts could hold it to be an excessive and wanton use of executive authority.

Doubts were raised over Mr. Johnson's authority to control such semi-independent agencies as the Federal Reserve Board, which insures depositors through its Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

COMPULSION

The Justice Department also questioned whether the White House could or indeed should compel private lending institutions to enforce a matter of public policy.

The housing issue arose again last month at the White House Conference on Civil Rights. In essence, the rights leaders accused the Administration of undue delay while officials termed the outsiders' sweeping proposals wishful thinking.

Since then, the problem of what to do about the housing order—once the special domain of Vice-President Humphrey—has been inherited by Joseph Califano, a Presidential special assistant. But it could not be determined what, if anything, Mr. Califano will recommend should be done.

An original order which the rights groups brand as unsatisfactory was issued in November, 1962, by President Kennedy. Its anti-discriminatory provisions were limited to mortgages backed by either the Federal Housing Administration or the Veterans Administration. Later, the FHA decided to exclude the resale of one and two-family houses from the order.

Mr. Kennedy utilized the housing prejudice issue during the 1960 campaign when he accused former President Eisenhower of failing to exercise his power through "a stroke of the pen." Later, however, Mr. Kennedy himself trod cautiously through the complex legal and political problems raised by his demands.

Prejudice against Negroes in housing is also partly covered under Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. This extends the "open occupancy" rule, at least in theory, to all public housing, urban renewal projects and specialized housing for the elderly.

Since FHA mortgages cover only a fifth of the housing market, the Kennedy order left a great gap. While this gap would be narrowed through covering conventional mortgages as well, such newly arisen lending institutions as insurance companies would still remain exempt.

In fact, the non-retroactive executive order urged by the Lawrence panel would account for merely 2 per cent of the total number of housing units, old and new, within the United States.

A BIG GAP

At best, enforcement of the 1962 Kennedy order has been spotty. As one high-ranking FHA official explained: "We've got to go out and compete in the market with conventional (bank) lending. So you can't expect us to go out and look for trouble."

Thus there is wide agreement in and out of the administration that executive orders, civil rights laws and urban renewal projects have all failed to achieve integrated living in the U. S.

Finally, the immense problems of the urban Negro ghettos— such as New York's Harlem, Chicago's South Side and Los Angeles' Watts—would not be met by a Federal "open occupancy" law of the kind the Administration is advancing.

"Open occupancy" relates mostly to middle-class housing of the type that the nation's impoverished Negroes couldn't afford even if their legal rights were fully protected.

Plans are being made for the MCH Legislative Conference on Sat., Jan. 15, 1966. The conference will discuss new State legislation and amendments to old laws, and decide on a State legislative program for MCH. Actions to be taken to bring the program to the attention of the legislators will also be on the agenda. The conference will be held at the McBurney YMCA, 215 W. 23rd Street.

During the State legislative session in the spring of 1965, MCH sponsored a 500 man (and woman) delegation to Albany and later sent 50 representatives on a follow-up delegation. In addition, MCH's legislative chairman, Frances Goldin, made several trips to Albany to keep pressure on the legislators.

The Case of the Missing Transcript

A highlight of the first and larger delegation occurred when Gov. Rockefeller met with some of the delegates & agreed to every one of the MCH proposals! Since a stenotypist was making a record of the meeting, it was expected that this would make a good news story. Unfortunately, the transcript of the meeting, although promised, never could be found by the Governor's office. The mystery of the missing transcript is still an open case in the MCH files -- filed under "D" for "demagoguery!"

In 1966, MCH plans to send an even larger delegation, get more bills passed -- and keep its own record of meetings with bigwigs. Every organization concerned with housing legislation-- and certainly every MCH affiliate -- should send representatives to the Jan. 15 Conference.

SEASON'S GREETINGS!!! HAPPY NEW YEAR!!!

Vol. IV, Nos. 3-4
November-December, 1965

The 7th Annual Conference of MCH on Sat., Nov. 20 drew almost 200 people to its six panels and plenary session, far more than the number expected. When the doors of the McBurney YMCA auditorium opened at 9:30 the rush for registration started. Labelled with name-tags and loaded down with MCH publications, the delegates fortified themselves with coffee and Danish pastries. They moved around the room looking at the exhibits which showed a year's activity by MCH and some of its affiliates. The room was ringed with picket signs, posters and photographs. At the literature table, copies of MCH's Organizing Handbook and the Citizens' Survey of Available Land were being sold and new members and sustaining members were being signed up.

Public housing panel added

Bill Tatum of the Cooper Sq. Committee chaired a brief opening session during which Major Owens of Brooklyn CORE spoke. The assembly then split up into panels. In addition to the panels on house organizing, organizing a tenant council, urban renewal, new legislative tools, and publicity techniques, an additional panel was formed of public housing tenants to discuss problems of public housing.

LEGISLATIVELY SPEAKING

by Frances Goldin

A disappointing result of the Nov. 2 election was the defeat of the low rent housing propositions, Nos. 2 and 3. The voters were so confused by the long list of propositions, questions and amendments that many didn't bother to vote on them. They just didn't know what these were about. About half of the New York City voters didn't vote at all on Prop. 2 & 3.

One proposition which did pass was the Governor's favorite, Prop. No. 1 to finance water purification. It passed because Rocky backed it to the hilt. He went on TV and gave a vivid demonstration of the importance of pure water by showing children who had become ill because of pollution. The voters were impressed and they singled out Prop. No. 1 and, quite rightly, gave it a big YES.

Rocky had also declared his support for public low rent housing. But why didn't he go on TV and introduce children who are the victims of slum housing? He could have shown the rat bites, the illness and the other effects of living in crowded, unheated, crumbling slums. And he could have urged voters to cure the slum disease by building more housing. Instead the Governor limited himself to one last-minute, undramatic tour of the slums along with Mayor Wagner. Even that token gesture was delayed until after MCH's telegrams to Rocky and until Jane Benedict exposed his neglect of the propositions at a public hearing on Oct.28.

MCH had met with the Governor back in March of this year, wrote him five times since then and wired him in late October. His response was silence until after Election Day. A letter to me from his counsel, dated Nov. 10, regretted his inability to meet sooner and stressed "the Governor's efforts on behalf of the propositions --for example his tour with Mayor Wagner on Oct. 29 -- and his disappointment that they were not approved by the people."

What chutzpah!* The Governor made one token gesture in support -- and then has the nerve to brag about it!

Silence killed propositions

The defeat of these important propositions can be blamed directly on the Governor, Mayor Wagner, Mayor-elect Lindsay and on Abraham Beame. None of them did enough to push the propositions. Lip service is not public service and tokenism never advanced a cause.

Not only did these men ignore the propositions but they did nothing to improve the image of public housing and make it more appealing to the voters. They could have, for instance, urged the construction of individual vest-pocket public housing throughout the city on vacant land. Such buildings could be integrated and would fit into existing communities.

Tenants demand housing anyway

This defeat must not mean the end of the public housing program in NYC. Lindsay has promised a massive increase in public housing (see list of campaign promises on page 5). Lindsay and Rockefeller must win from Washington an increase in the amount of public housing allotted to NY State -- which is now limited to 15% of the national total. They must figure out other methods of revitalizing the program of low rent public housing, without which the housing dilemma cannot be solved.

* Call it chutzpah, gall or nerve -- it's all the same.

This supplements the information in the Sept. issue of TENANT NEWS on nighttime heat, hall lights, and elevator mirrors:

Peepholes: Required after Jan. 1, 1966. New ones must have label of approval of Bd. of Standards and Appeals. Old ones are ok unless they weaken door. Rent increase for new peepholes installed by landlord is 10¢ per month or 15¢ if a new bell is installed also -- only after approval by the Rent Administration.

Lights: In addition to 40W lights in yards, two 50W lights must be installed at front entrance-way, encased in metal guard or shatterproof globe. Both yard and entrance lights must be on all night.

Cooper Square chairman wins award, Oct. 19: The Lower East Side Neighborhood Assn. (LENA) presented Miss Thelma Burdick, chairman of the Cooper Sq. Community Development Committee, with its annual award. The award was given for her outstanding contributions to the East Side.

MCH affiliates meet with Lindsay, Oct. 27: Propositions 2 and 3 (the public housing proposals on the election ballot) were the subject of a meeting between mayoralty candidate John Lindsay and representatives from MCH and its affiliates. Groups represented included Neighbors in Action, the Housing Committee of RENA, Chelsea-Village NAACP, plus the legislative and law committees of MCH. Cong. Lindsay promised to support the propositions publicly and to discuss them later that day at a press conference.

Joint Legislative Committee on Housing and Urban Development, Oct. 28: Jane Benedict, MCH chairman, spoke at an open hearing called by this committee of the State Legislature in New York City. She testified in favor of a massive program of low rent public housing and for passage of the housing propositions, 2 & 3.

Outdoor rally, Nov. 1: An outdoor rally was held by MCH in the garment district at 7th Ave. & 33rd Street at lunchtime. It was well-attended by garment workers who stopped to hear our speakers urge them to vote for Propositions 2 and 3.

Democratic Club, Nov. 18: Ruth Beinart, TENANT NEWS editor and co-chairman of the Housing Committee of RENA, addressed a new Democratic club, the 80th A.D., Part B Reform Democrats, on neighborhood housing needs. The club is in a newly formed district in Washington Heights.

Bill Tatum on CBS-TV News, Nov. 24: Together with Woody Klein, noted housing reporter, Bill Tatum, exec. secy. of the Cooper Sq. Committee and MCH bd. member, toured a lower East Side tenement at 5th St. and Ave. D. They inspected the "repairs" made under the City's emergency fund and found that, although $4,000 was spent, the building was still in deplorable condition because of sloppy or non-existent repairs.

Just to jog your memories, here's what our next mayor, Hon. John V. Lindsay, promised to us voters:

* A program to build 100,000 low income housing units and 60,000 middle income units in the next 4 years.
* Speedup in processing applications for low and middle income housing.
* Centralizing the handling of all housing complaints.
* Expanding the number of housing inspectors, in fact, tripling it.
* Retention of rent control (although he didn't pledge strengthening it).
* Unqualified support of the Alternate Plan for Cooper Square.

City Council Pres.-to-be Frank O'Connor also made some promises as part of the Democratic slate. He is bound to carry them out as leader of the Democratic party in New York City. He promised:

* "Compulsory listing of apartment vacancies with central city agency to assist low and middle income groups."
* A single department to handle housing complaints, inspection & enforcement. Stronger code enforcement.
* Continued rent control.
* Higher public housing income limits.
* Putting city pension funds into mortgages for "home-seekers in minority groups."

Our job now as voters and as tenants is to see that these promises are fulfilled.

50 speakers from 17 organizations spent the afternoon of Nov. 23 demanding that the City allow real citizen participation in urban renewal decisions. The Speak-up, from noon to 5:30, went on in front of 2 Lafayette St., office of the Housing and Redevelopment Bd., City Planning Commn., and other City housing agencies.

7th ANNUAL MCH CONFERENCE

making MCH stronger and more effective. Brief introductory remarks by Frances Goldin included a recommendation for a committee of 100 -- 100 people who would join MCH as individuals for $5 each and who would pledge to sign up 5 more members. She pointed out that this plus the formation of an effective fund-raising committee would guarantee enough funds for MCH to hire a full-time organizer and expand its operations.

One step in the direction of more money was made when the delegates voted to raise organizational dues in MCH from $10 to $15 per year.

MCH extends thanks to the east side bakeries who provided the delegates to the 7th Annual Conference with delicious breakfast Danish pastries. Take a bow: Ratners on 2nd Ave., Karlin's on Grand Street, and Honey and Spice on Clinton Street.They're as sweet as their pastry!

Jovenes Progresistas
(Puerto Rican Progressive Youth)

Tenant councils formed in over 50 buildings and 200 tenants organized, most of them dues-paying members -- this is the wonderful work of the Jovenes Progresistas, MCH affiliate, in the past 2 years.

Starting in 1962 as a group to study and discuss "freedom of the spirit,"they decided after a year that their study must lead to action.Working in Brooklyn, they soon found that their main area of work had to be housing.

Tenants need new outlook

Most of the Puerto Ricans with whom they work have come to the mainland recently. In Puerto Rico they had their own homes, did their own repairs, lived amongst friends and, accordingly, did not know the rights of tenants or ways of dealing with landlords. Faced with a language difficulty,forced into substandard housing with landlords who push them around, they need skilled and sympathetic help.

With 30 active members,Jovenes Progresistas has its own lawyers to aid in legal matters. It also assists with translation problems, teaches the history of Puerto Rico, organizes tenant councils, and educates tenants on their rights. It is not surprising that its leaders must spend about 20 hours a week (or 2½ days) of work to carry on this program. And they have gotten results.

Officers of JovenesProgresistas are Pepe Sanchez, president; Flora Sanchez, secretary; and Ricardo Alvarez, treasurer.

Mr. Carl Rachlin

Dear Mr. Rachlin:

This will bring you up to date on the Bogalusa situation.

As Mr. Joseph Burstein, General Counsel of the Public Housing Administration, informed you by telephone, the PHA is investigating the complaint of the Voters' League. We assume you know by now that the matter of the alleged KKK Member on the Board of Commissioners of the Housing Authority, which Mr. Burstein also discussed with you, has been resolved.

We want to correct any impression that the Public Housing Administration anticipates no problems in dealing with the established pattern of segregation in Bogalusa. Although it is not a problem that public housing can solve by itself, the PHA fully recognizes its continuing responsibility to secure compliance by the Bogalusa Housing Authority with the requirements of Title VI of the Civil Rights Act and the assurances already given by the Housing Authority that it will comply. This extends to the processing of applications and the assignment of dwelling units on a nondiscriminatory basis. In addition to the Civil Rights Act requirements, the financial assistance contract between the PHA and the Housing Authority contains a nondiscrimination requirement as to employment which will also be the subject of continuing compliance review by the PHA. Enclosed for your information is PHA material pertaining to these matters.

We are taking the liberty of sending copies of this letter to Mr. Farmer and to the Voters' League because it answers some of the questions they have raised. You will find enclosed our letter to the Voters' League on the same subject.

Sincerely yours,

HOUSING AND HOME FINANCE AGENCY — WASHINGTON, D.C. 20413

CIRCULAR
8-27-65

TO: Central Office Division and Branch Heads Regional Directors
Local Authorities
Managers, Directly Operated Projects

SUBJECT: Title VI of Civil Rights Act of 1964

Experience in the low-rent housing program under the HHFA regulations and PHA requirements issued pursuant to Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 indicates that clarification and greater detail are needed in respect to certain aspects of administration. The following requirements are designed to provide this clarification, in order to assist local housing authorities in meeting their obligations pursuant to the Civil Rights Act of 1964 in accordance with Government-wide policies applicable to Title VI-affected programs.

1. Methods of Administration. Methods of administration, staffing arrangements, assignment of responsibilities and procedures shall provide for the following (reports thereof, along with copies of all materials used or produced, to be furnished promptly to the PHA Regional Office):

   a. Administration of all dwelling units on a uniformly nondiscriminatory basis in respect to race, color or national origin, including nondiscrimination in maintenance, equipment, facilities, and services, and in the treatment of tenants.

   b. That the race, color or national origin of the tenants of the dwelling units or of the staff shall not be a factor in the assignment of managers and other staff responsible for the administration of the dwelling units.

   c. Such location of facilities for filing of applications for tenancy and such circumstances for acceptance of applications as will afford the applicant the greatest opportunity for the exercise of his rights under the tenant selection and assignment plan adopted by the local authority (see subparagraph d below).

   d. Establishment of a plan for selection of applicants and assignment of dwelling units to insure nondiscrimination on grounds of race, color or national origin. Examples of different types of acceptable plans are the following:

Each applicant is assigned his appropriate place on a community-wide basis in sequence based upon date of application, suitable type or size of unit, and factors affecting preference or priority on grounds (other than race, color or national origin) established by the local authority's regulations; and any suitable vacancies arising at a given time at any project or location are offered to the eligible applicant first in sequence at such time. If such applicant refuses to accept the offered vacancies on any grounds, the plan shall provide for one of the following: (i) that he remain in first place; (ii) that he remain in first place but if he rejects suitable vacancies on a stated number of occasions (two or three, for example) he be moved to last place; or (iii) that he be moved to last place.

Each applicant is offered the opportunity to state on his application in what project or projects, or in what location or locations, he wishes to obtain housing, or to state that he will accept housing in any project or location; and assignments of dwelling units to eligible applicants are made in accordance with such stated preferences insofar as consistent with the other pertinent factors (other than race, color or national origin) established by the local authority's regulations. Each applicant will be informed that he may indicate a preference for housing without regard to the race, color or national origin of the existing occupants of any project. Whenever there are one or more vacant units in a project for which no eligible applicant has expressed a preference, the local authority shall offer such units to the eligible applicant(s) having priority, whether or not the applicant has indicated that he will accept housing in any project or location other than his stated choice.

Under any plan, the applicant shall be fully informed, at the time of application, as to which projects contain dwelling units of the size and type suitable to his needs, and the location of all such projects.

The PHA may from time to time review and determine the adequacy of any plan for selection of applicants and assignment of dwelling units to accomplish the purposes of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the regulations and requirements pursuant thereto.

e. Nondiscrimination in reassignments or transfers to other dwelling units.

f. Instruction of the local authority's staff concerning its obligations under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the HHFA regulations and PHA requirements pursuant thereto, by suitable means such as providing them with copies of all pertinent documents, conducting training meetings, and maintaining review through regular supervisory channels.

g. Posting, in a conspicuous place in the local authority's facilities in which applications are received, of notice that the facilities and services in the authority's low-rent housing program are provided on a nondiscriminatory basis and of its plan for tenant selection and assignment of units; and inclusion of such information in material distributed to tenants and prospective applicants, to the general public, and to agencies, institutions, organizations, and political subdivisions which may refer applicants.

h. (1) Receipt and processing by the local authority of complaints from or on behalf of any person who believes himself to be subject to discrimination by the local authority or its staff; (2) keeping a record of each complaint including the date of the complaint, by whom made, investigation and hearing (if any), and evaluation; (3) a written notice to the complainant of action taken; (4) posting, in a conspicuous place in all facilities of the local authority which are open to the public, of a notice that complaints of discrimination may be filed with the local authority or the PHA Regional Office, at a designated address, including notice that the filing of a complaint with the local authority will not prevent the subsequent filing of a complaint with the PHA; and (5) posting with the above notice a copy of the PHA regulation under which complaints may be submitted to the PHA (copy enclosed--additional copies available from the PHA).

i. A prohibition against intimidatory or retaliatory action or threat thereof by the local authority or its staff against any applicant or tenant because of participation in civil rights activities or for having asserted any of his rights under the Civil Rights Act, and the regulations and requirements pursuant thereto.

j. Periodic review by the local authority of its practices to assure that they are in conformity with its obligations under the HHFA regulations and PHA requirements.

2. Reports on Complaints. Beginning with September 30, 1965, and thereafter at the end of every calendar quarter, or such less frequent intervals as the Regional Director with the approval of the Commissioner may determine to be consistent with the objectives of the provisions of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the regulations and requirements pursuant thereto, each local authority shall furnish the PHA Regional Office with a report showing the number of complaints (if any) filed with the local authority during the reporting period, the nature of the matters complained about, and the findings made and action taken on such complaints.

3. Selection of Sites for New Projects. The local authority shall furnish, for inclusion in the PHA Project Planner's report on Form PHA-2651, "Preliminary Site Report," such supporting data or information as may be required to enable the PHA to include, in its tentative approval of the site selected by the local authority, a specific determination that the selection is in accordance with the policy established by the PHA under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (see Low-Rent Housing Manual Section 205.1).

The foregoing requirements shall be effective on September 1, 1965.

Notwithstanding the provisions of § 1500.6, Complaint procedures—equal opportunity in housing, the procedure prescribed in the HHFA regulations, as implemented by the Public Housing Administration in this § 1500.7, shall apply with respect to any complaint of discrimination on the ground of race, color or national origin in the low-rent housing program under the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended, 42 U.S.C. 1401 et seq. The procedure prescribed in § 1500.6 shall apply only to complaints of discrimination on the basis of creed.

(b) Definitions. As used in this section:

With respect to any federally owned or operated low-rent housing project, the housing project manager shall be deemed to be a "Local Authority" for purposes of this section.

(2) "Discrimination" means any action or practice of a local Authority of the kind prohibited by section 601 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 or by § 1.4 (a) and (b) of this title (HHFA regulations), and, in the case of a project covered by a contract clause for equal opportunity in housing pursuant to section 101 of Executive Order 11063 (see § 1500.6(b)(2)), any action or practice prohibited by such clause relative to race, color, or national origin.

(3) "Project" means a low-rent housing project assisted under the United States Housing Act of 1937, including any low-rent housing project owned or operated by the Federal Government pursuant to said Act.

(4) "Commissioner" means the Public Housing Commissioner.

(3) Acknowledgment. Upon receipt of a complaint, the Regional Director shall promptly and in writing acknowledge its receipt.

(4) Further notice to complainant. The complainant will be advised in writing when investigation of the complaint indicates discrimination and the matter is resolved by informal means. In all other respects, the procedure prescribed in the HHFA regulations will apply.

(d) Effective date. This section shall be effective January 3, 1965.

Approved: December 30, 1964.

Dear Mr. Hicks:

This is with reference to the letter of November 5, 1965, from you and Gayle Jenkins on behalf of the citizens of Bogalusa and the Bogalusa Voters' League, requesting that Federal funds be suspended from public housing developments in the City of Bogalusa on the grounds of discrimination. You state the grounds as follows:

"I. No Negroes on planning board
"II. Sites located to maintain segregation
"III. Units to be segregated"

We had occasion to reply to a letter from Mr. Carl Rachlin, General Counsel, Congress of Racial Equality, bearing on some of these matters. A copy of the reply is enclosed. As you will observe from this letter, your complaint is already under investigation.

You will be advised further of the results of the investigation. Thank you for the advance announcement of Wiley Branton; it is indeed good news.

On a related matter: I am distressed that as yet there have been no appointments made to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to supervise the enforcement of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. As you know, the Act takes effect in the area of employment on July 2nd, less that sixty days from now. I would hope that such appointments are to be forthcoming promptly so that this very important section of the Act will be put into effect with dispatch.

Why the Delay?

Although the Civil Rights Act of 1964 was signed last July 2, Title VII – the Fair Employment title – will not become effective so as to prohibit discriminatory practices until July 2 of this year. But the title established, effective immediately upon its enactment, that is ten months ago, an Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, and gave it many essential preparatory tasks to perform during the year of grace.

The Commission consists of five members, all Presidential appointees. But the Commission does not exist as yet. President Johnson has neglected to make the necessary appointments. Thus, it is not too much to say that he has substantially extended the year of grace granted to private employers by Congress, and that he is further extending it every day that he continues to delay organizing the Commission.

Moise Tshombe's defiance of the United Nations and his more recent personal "invasions" of Cairo and Nairobi have given the world a picture – and it is roughly accurate – of a shrewd man gifted with physical courage and inexhaustible sass. Most of the rest of the "popular" picture of Tshombe, however, is false. For instance, he is not pro-colonial, not pro-white, not pro-Belgian. He has neither genius for, nor interest in, administration. At each stage in his faintly Gilbert-and-Sullivan career, distant "observers" have mistaken his unlimited lack of scruple for policy; in fact, no ideology ever interferes with his opportunism. He is charismatic, ruthless, commanding, humorous, resilient.

Dear Bill:

Thank you for your letter of September 21. I had not been aware that the CORE office had been moved from Plaquemine to Baton Rouge. Upon receiving your letter I checked first with Richard Haley, Director of the Southern Office in New Orleans, and with Ronnie Moore, who heads up the Louisiana operation.

From these two conversations the following facts emerge: CORE is not deserting and will not desert Plaquemine or Iberville Parish. CORE Field Worker Henry Johnson will remain in Plaquemine to see that the work goes on. The office which has been located in Plaquemine is the state CORE office and is being moved either to Baton Rouge or to Alexandria for the sake of better research facilities in mapping the state-wide program of community organization and voter registration. At the earliest possible date, no later than January 1, a sub-office is to be re-established in Plaquemine with additional workers assigned there.

As I promised you, there will be no withdrawal of CORE from Plaquemine. The fine people of Plaquemine have backed us up, and we will continue to back them up. Please be assured of this fact.

Dear Jim,

Today I was advised by Mr. Ronnie Moore that the CORE office in Plaquemine was moved to Baton Rouge. I don't know what crime we in Plaquemine have committed that merit such a penalty. You have done the very thing we asked you would you do the night we were on our way to the Donaldsonville jail, that is, "What would happen to us when the demonstrations would end"; would CORE turn its back on us and forget about us". You assured us that you would never turn your back on us. I doubt seriously that you are aware of this recent development. I don't believe you would deliberately go back on your word.

Leaving us without a national civil right office in Plaquemine is like pulling the federal troops out of the south during the 1870's. Moving the office out of Plaquemine has instilled more fear into ## our people. To make bad matters worst the uncle toms are showing the few who had courage they have been used for fools.

I hope you will give this matter very serious consideration and move the office back to Plaquemine,

Hoping to hear from you very soon,

Yours truly,

On December 30th., 1961, I advised you that my $5 order for Christmas cards had not been taken care of. I sent cash some weeks before Christmas, just as I had done the previous year; in the latter case I received the cards with no trouble, but this Christmas they never came & I had to buy other cards.

So far I have heard nothing from you about this matter. I would still like the cards if you have some left over; otherwise just let the matter drop. I would be very pleased if you would use the enclosed stamped, self-addressed envelope to let me know what happened.

Dear Sir:

We are interested in establishing a Civil Rights Commission on our campus. Generally, the purpose of this commission will be to eliminate prejudice through effective education and, specifically, to combat discrimination through active support of the Civil Rights Movement.

At present we would prefer to remain an independent organization, rather than become a branch office of one of the existent Civil Rights' Groups. We would be most appreciative and most eager to receive any suggestions you might have concerning the formulation and functioning of our Civil Rights' Commission. Could you also please add our address to your mailing list and send us any literature on CORE. We are anxious to support any CORE activities which we are able to. Thank you for your cooperation.

I am writing a term paper on the Negro's progress in the field of education from Lincoln and the Reconstruction to the present. Dear Mr. Farmer:

I am currently engaged in a limited research project, which among other things, is aimed at a critical assessment of the current state of Negro-white relations.

May I ask your cooperation as a responsible observer and/or participant in the day-to-day relations between Negroes and whites here in America?

You are asked to do only one thing: read the "guide" questions on the accompanying sheet, and in a paragraph or two state your feelings about "The Current State of Negro-White Relations". The guide questions are merely suggestive. You may respond to some (or all) of them, or you may feel free to discuss "The Current State of Negro-White Relations" in your own way. You may write at length if you wish, or a couple of paragraphs will do. Please use the paper provided, but use additional sheets if necessary.

Your help is important and is very much appreciated. At your request I will be glad to share the results of this study with you.

Guide Questions:

What is the present status of communication between the races? What is responsible for these conditions? Does fear play a significant part in the way whites and Negroes relate to each other? What part? Who is afraid? Of what?

Do whites and Negroes hate each other? More than before? Less than before? Do whites and Negroes see each other in a different light in 1963 than they did prior to 1954? Or prior to World War II? If so, in what way does the present image differ from the past image? Is this good? Is it bad?

Where does the white man think the Negro is "trying to go"? Where is the Negro trying to go? Will he get there? When? What is the best way to improve Negro-white relations? What will most readily cause further deterioration of Negro-white relations?

Dear Miss Smith:

Under separate cover I am sending you a variety of literature about CORE which I believe you will find helpful. Some of the questions, however, can more easily be answered by letter.

CORE was founded in 1942 by James Farmer and a group of others in Chicago. They were interested in adapting Gandhian and labor union techniques to the race relations scene in America. CORE now has about 25 professional employees, some 30 clerical employees and about 40 full time volunteers. We have over 100 chapters throughout the nation and our activity concentrates along the Eastern seaboard, the West coast and the South.

I hope that this along with the literature will prove sufficient for your purposes. Thanks for your interest in CORE and best wishes.

By our Constitution we are not permitted to take stands on issues other than what is commonly known as race relations. Consequently, we have no position on socialism versus capitalism.

As an organization we support and are loyal to the United States of America and work throughdemocratic means to improve our democracy within the context of the American Constitution.

Dear Mr. Farmer,

Thank you for the pamphlets. I will send my pledge in as soon as my allowance arrives.

I would like to ask your advise in a problem we have here at school. You see, we have about nine negroes here at school the rest of the forty-eight students are white. The negroes cluster in one groups and are an eye sore where ever we go.

Dear Miss Farrell:

I am happy to reply to your letter of October 5.

To an extent the so-called white backlash is a creation of the press It is inevitable that whenever there is progress in the field of civil rights there will also be a reaction. The white backlash is simply the manifestation of those persons who are opposed to real and rapid progress of the Negro. It seems highly doubtful to me that these sentiments have been created by the civil rights drive or by the Civil Rights Bill. It is more likely that feelings which existed before, but which were under the surface, have come into the fore.

Some political analysts deny the existence of the backlash. Others recognize a trend of movement of supporters of the late President Kennedy to Goldwater. However, the trend from supporters of Richard Nixon to President Johnson has been even greater. Consequently, I do not foresee the backlash having any real effect on the election. CORE feels that Mr. Goldwater presents a grave threat not only to the Negro but also to the American system. We are dedicated to his defeat.

Sincerely yours,

James Farmer

Dear Mr. Farmer,

The current issue of civil rights has grasped the interest of many people. Among them are the students of St. Mary's High School and their newspaper The Crown. As one of the leaders of the Negro population would you please give us your views on the following questions:

1. What are your feelings toward the white backlash?
2. What effect will it have on the upcoming election? Will it help Goldwater? Will it damage the President's chances?

Your reply will be greatly appreciated. Thank you.

Dear Mr. Bradley:

I am enclosing a copy of the analysis of the killing of James Powell by Police Lt. Gilligan. We believe that the killing was the occasion for the riot. Certainly there were underlying motives, such as the slum conditions, the lack of job opportunities and the general feeling of frustration and alienation. But the killing of James Powell we beleive to be the spark that touched off the riots.

I would like to mention that it is fairly expensive to make these thermofax copies. CORE's present financial situation is quite desperate and we would very much appreciate it if you would send in a contribution to CORE of at least $1.00.

We are a non-partisan organization and unless we take a public stand against a specific candidate we take no stand at all. Clearly, Mr. Farmer does not feel he should lend his personal prestige to influence a political election.

I am in the process of preparing a study of last November's Kennedy-Keating campaign for the office of United States Senator, here in New York.

Sir, I was wondering, if you would consider doing me a favor? At your leisure, would you drop me a few lines answering the following questions: 1) What candidate did you vote for in the Kennedy-Keating contest? 2) What prompted you to make this choice? 3) William Kunstler believes that Robert Kennedy has put his civil rights views tailormade to suit his political ambitions. What is your opinion concerning this?

I completely realize that you are quite busy with your own splendid work, and if you find it impossible to fulfill my request, I certainly (can plead) would understand. However, if your decision regarding this matter is in the affirmative, I'd appreciate it a great deal. Furthermore, As I have tremendous respect for your opinion, I believe your remarks would be a valuable asset to my project.

Dear Mr. Farmer:

I am writing you in an effort to secure information concerning the fundamental position of CORE, specifically in relation to a bill which I have enclosed in this letter. This is simply a mock legislative bill, the merits of which are presently being considered by the first year law students here at Notre Dame Law School. One of the hottest issues in American life today involves the constitutional rights of the person as affected by the various branches of our Government. A bill which advocates an increase in the police power is understandably a controversial one. We here at Notre Dame feel that members and supporters of CORE would be particularly concerned about the ramifications of such legislation should it ever come before any of the legislative assemblies of this country. Therefore, I have been elected to represent the position of CORE with respect to the proposed bill.

I believe it will be necessary to write a position paper explaining our position and reasons for opposition to the bill, or sections thereof. However, I am not well enough acquainted with the position of CORE on such matters to adequately or properly represent the organization. Therefore, Mr. Farmer, I am requesting information as to the exact stand CORE would take on the proposed legislation. I would appreciate hearing your objections to the bill, as well as any suggestions and possible amendments which you may offer.

While this bill is merely being considered by a group of law students, since these same law students are the political leaders and legislators of tomorrow, I feel that it is vital that I adequately warn them of the pot ntial danger of such legislation.Along with any objections and suggestions which you may have, I would appreciate any materials or sources thereof from which I may better understand the position and aims of CORE. I find it most essential to illustrate our position by citing incidents where Negroes have been unfairly treated by police, especially in regard to arrests without a warrant,unfair searches and seizures, etc. Any assistance which you may render me will be greatly appreciated. Since time is of the essence, I would appreciate as prompt a reply as meets with the convenience of your office.

An Act for the Enhancing of the Powers of the Police to Deal with Professional Criminals

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Hoynes:

1. This Act shall be known and may be cited as the Police Act of 1965.

2. Section 142 of Chapter 169 of the Acts of 1905 is amended to read as follows:

> All judicial officers, sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, coroners, constables, marshals, deputy marshals, police officers, watchmen and the conductors of all trains or cars carrying passengers or freight within this state, while on duty on their respective trains or cars, may arrest and detain any person reasonably and in good faith believed to be violating, to have violated, or to be about to violate any law of this state, until a lawful warrant can be obtained, and may apprehend all loose, idle, or disorderly persons whom they shall find disturbing the public peace, or whom they shall have just cause to suspect of any evil designs.

3. It shall be the duty of all persons to assist the police in the carrying out of their duties, and any person who when requested to do so shall refuse to present himself at a reasonable time and place and give a true account of such knowledge as he may have of any matter legitimately under police investigation, except insofar as the same is privileged, shall be guilty of obstructing justice, and shall suffer the punishment of the statutes made and provided in that behalf.

4. Any officer authorized by law to make arrests, or to execute search warrants, or any person aiding such officer, may forcibly break and enter any outer or inner door or window of any building or part thereof, or anything therein, or otherwise enter to execute a search or arrest warrant, or to make an arrest when authorized by law without warrant, or where necessary to liberate himself or any other person unlawfully held. But no such forcible entry shall be made until such officer has announced his identity and purpose, unless such officer reasonably believes that such identity and purpose are already known to some person in the premises, or that such announcement would result in a destruction or concealment of evidence subject to seizure, would permit the person to be arrested to escape, would increase the possibility of bodily harm to such officer or to another, or would otherwise be a useless gesture.

5. Any person who, when the identity and purpose of an officer are known pursuant to Section 4 or otherwise, wilfully destroys, conceals or disposes of evidence subject to seizure, or assists in the escape of any person subject to arrest, or attempts to do any of the foregoing, or to prevent the officer from carrying out his purpose, shall be guilty of obstruction of justice, and shall suffer the punishment of the statutes made and provided in that behalf.

6. An ex parte order for the interception overhearing or recording of telephonic or telegraphic communications may be issued by any magistrate empowered to issue a search warrant, upon oath or affirmation of any prosecutor, deputy prosecutor, or police officer, that there is reasonable ground to believe that evidence of crime or of the activities of professional criminals may be thus obtained and identifying the particular telephone number or telegraph line, and particularly describing the person or persons whose communications are to be intercepted, overheard or recorded, and the purpose thereof. In connection with the issuance of any such order, the magistrate may examine on oath the applicant and any other witness he may produce and shall satisfy himself of the existence of reasonable grounds for the granting of such application. Dear Mr. Farmer:

As a student in graduate Journalism at UCLA, I have been assigned to write a magazine article on the Negro Revolution. I have chosen to write about the modern "Uncle Tom" and his effect on the achievement of racial equality.

This letter's purpose is to ask you for your opinion on the matter. How would you define today's "Uncle Tom"? How does he compare with the "Uncle Tom" of yesteryear? How does he feel about today's civil rights struggle? How is the struggle affected by him? How do you feel about stereotyped television programs (like the old Amos 'n Andy series) that have been accused of keeping the image of the American Negro a subservient one?

Please express your opinions on the preceding questions and elucidate and expand as you wish. If the finished article is good, and with your help it will be, it will probably be published. Of course, I will notify you of publication in advance.

Please respond as soon as possible keeping in mind that the article is to be completed in late March.

Thank you.

Dear Mr. Farmer:

I am a senior at Marywood High School in Orange, California. We have recently been assigned topics for a research paper. My topic is "Has the Negro Made A Significant Contribution to Science?".

Would you have any pamphlets or information concerning this topic in any way ? If possible would you have available the number of Negros in the various scientific fields (Medicine, Research, Engineering)? I also would like information, if possible, on the names of prominent Negro scientists, doctors, or engineers and their achievements and contributions to their fields. This would include contributions in the past also.

If you do not have any of this information, could you possible give me the names of any reliable sources to which I could refer for this information?

Any help which you can give me on this subject will be appreciated.

March 3, 1965

Mr. James Farmer
The Congress of Racial Equality
48 Park Row
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Farmer:

As a result of a growing interest in Civil Rights both here at Bowdoin and on a national scale, and because of a dinner-lecture-discussion encounter with Bayard Rustin last spring, I requested and was granted permission to write a thesis entitled: The History of The Congress of Racial Equality as an examination of the changing nature of the Civil Rights movement 1942-1965.

Although I realized when I undertook the study that obtaining materials would not be easy I hoped that the Legislative Reference Library in Washington would help me. After three days' study there, however, I found this far from adequate. In spite of several articles by Martin Mayer and an extensive study of periodicals and books in the subject field, I still find myself with too many loose ends. An appeal to radio stations has elicited several profitable replies promising tapes, but most, like Mr. Bert Cowlan, wish me to have your approval before helping me. Furthermore, even with these materials I doubt I will be able to do justice to the topic. Therefore, I am writing to you for help.

In order to write a first rate paper on the organization I feel I need:

1. To have access to the files of the national office in New York and several subsidiary chapters for at least a week at the end of March (March 27 - April 4th). This information would be held confidential and you would have the final say before any material was published.

2. To be able to obtain, at least for reading purposes, a complete file of Mr. Peck's CORElator. Either I or the Bowdoin library would be willing to purchase a set.

3. If possible, to interview some members of the organization during April. I realize that this is a great deal to ask with CORE in the midst of instituting a new program.

My credentials are few. I am an "offay" and, although I hope Bayard Rustin may remember me I doubt it. I know Professor Levine very well and he has recommended me to Alan Gartner. Beyond this I have been an honor history student at Bowdoin and have won a prize for a hundred page study of the Sacco-Vanzetti case written before Russell's Tragedy in Dedham. Beyond this I can offer you no proof of either my skill or intentions.

Because of the immediacy of the Civil Rights problem I feel that this work might have a chance for publication if I can rewrite it this summer in the Army. If so, it should benefit CORE.

I hope you will decide in my favor regarding the above requests. Perhaps, if you find it impossible to agree to all of them, you may, I hope, agree to some. To give you an idea of my feelings toward CORE I am enclosing a preliminary outline and bibliography (now hopelessly eclipsed by further research) for your perusal.

Awaiting your reply, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

J. Stephen Putnam

THE HISTORY OF CORE

The history of CORE as an examination of the changing nature of the historical Negro movement.

In 1942 a group of civil rights advocates attempted to desegregate lunch counters in Chicago using non-violent direct action methods. This was the beginning of the Congress Of Racial Equality. Its motivating spirit was the application of Ghandian methods to the problem of civil rights.

In later periods following the large scale revival of the organization during the "Freedom Rides" of the fifties CORE has become more than another rights splinter group within the Negro movement. It has become more than another group agitating for more legal and technical equality. It has given more to the Negro cause than a new set of tactics. Its objectives and its policies have begun to concentrate on many new objectives with respect to the Negro problem. It is agitating for better schooling in New York, whether or not it is integrated. It is agitating for slum clearance in Roxbury rather than worry particularily about integration. In short, it is agitating for immediate and actual improvement in the situation of the Negro today rather than vague technical and legal equality.

The shift from older more conservative methods of agitation to Ghandian tactics has appealed to many Negroes and whites who feel they must do something and achieve something immediately. The change in objectives, however, is more significant. It illustrates an historical change in the philosophy of the entire movement. It is a change from the romantic singing of "We Shall Overcome" and achieving legal victories and token integration without alienating the moderate to hard-nosed bargaining and agitation for real gains for the lower class Negro who isn't helped by the integration of medical schools planned for 1960.

The following is a tentative outline, and an extremely rough one, for my proposed paper:

(I) The Nature Of The Older Agitation:
A short examanation of the earlier movements' objectives, methods, and followings

(II) The Changing Conditions Surrounding The Founding of CORE 1910-1942
Changing situation in North as a result of Northern migration: housing, riots, school problems, employment question, (special emphasis on Chicago as example.)
Participation in War effort with mixture of Negroes from all parts of the country. "Cheering crowds soon become riotous mobs."
Continued cases of lynching; the Scottsboro case, communist agitation
Supreme Court decisions including Grovey vs. Townsend (1935) and Norris vs. Alabama, Armed Forces War Dept. Policy (1940)
Executive Order 88002
Hopelessnes of depression was mitigated by 1942. "historical axiom that revolt occurs after worst is over"

(III)The Founders
Mixed color and background
Initial plans for movement
Response from Negroes and whites
Houser

(IV) Early Agitation and Methods Used Chicago
Other areas Organization
Involvement in national movements; fair employment, war legislation, N.A.A.C.P.
James Farmer
Housing legislation

(V) Participation From 1946-1957
Was it less?
What leaders remained?
What part did they play in; abolition of white primary, fiar employment, Columbia riot , Poll tax exlusion agitation, Drive to abolish segregation in AFL-CIO, New York social segregation?
Leaders of this era; James Peck, Marvin Rich, James Farmer, Nelson "Speaks for the old CORE"
Communist involvement
- Small but significant gains in housing + public facilities.

(VI) Participation From 1957-1963
The "Freedom Riders"
The "sit ins"
The organizational growth
Various agitations
Teaching the NAACP
New leaders; James McCain, James Farmer and many others Merely new tactics or new objectives?

(VII) 1963... The New Core
New objectives
some of the fields; in Education more schools less token integration in Labor more jobs for unskilled and lower class Negroes.
in Housing improve the slums rather than integrate others and forget slums
- beyond legal + token integration the new problems.

New Leaders and new looks on old
Hill and Rustin
Lombard
Gartner
Carey and many others
New Organizational Structure
New Tactics; "stall ins" grocery cart filling, marches etc.

(VIII) ASSorted Issues:
[redacted]
Finances
White vs. Negro involvement
Too much in North?
Cultural tokanism, Baldwin etc.
Influence of Black Moslems

(IX) The Future
Are Negroes ready for change?
Will the movement stay together?
What does "We Shall Overcome" really mean? Negro equality or general social betterment

(X) Conclusion
An Historical Perspective

Dear Mr. Farmer,

In conjunction with my studies at Watchung Hills Regional High School, the topics of segregation and freedom marches have come to the attention of myself and my history class. The question of whether or not it is legally and morally right to protest the discrimination in the South has been a constant source of debate in my class.

Since C.O.R.E. has strong feelings in these areas, I feel that your organization would be in a position to help me in support of assistance in liberating the Negro. Specifically, I am requesting and inquiring about any information, as in the form of pamplet or booklet, that you could send to me. If any such information is available, I would appreciate your efforts to make it accessable to me.

Also, any information on segregation, freedom marches, attitudes towards the Southern hostility and, anything else dealing with the South would be greatly appreciated. Prompt return of such information would be extreemly helpfull.

Thank you for any assistance.

Dear Mr. Farmer,

I am writing to ask if I might come to see you, or one of your organisation's representatives, some time next week. I enclose a note about myself as introduction and hope that this will explain my visit to the United States,

My organisation, in London, is concerned about the evidence of increasing racial discrimination in Britain and I hope to write a book which (among others that will certainly appear in the next year or so) will help tp persuade the British public of the need for action. From this you will gather that I would like to obtain not only facts relating to discrimination in America but information on methods that have been successful in your own civil rights campaigns. No doubt there is much written material from which to work, but I would appreciate the opportunity of meeting you.

I have altered the attached schedule to spend a further week in New York and am fairly free for the whole of next week. After this, however, I will be leaving for the South and I would welcome an early reply, or telephone call.

Yours sincerely,

Mary Grigg.

Mr. Farmer's schedule is incredibly heavy; in fact he will be in the office hardly at all between now and May 4th. Dear Sir:

I am writing to ask for your help. I am a high school student and am presently writing a term paper on "The American Negro's opinion of the Catholic Church and Catholicism." I am now gathering opinions of various Negroes — from magazine articles, Negro students I know, and Negro groups and leaders. And so, I am writing to ask you to help me by answering some of the following questions.

What is the general attitude of your group towards Catholics and Catholicism? Do you find a significant gap between the Christian ideals and the practices of Catholics? What has been the response of Catholic clergymen to your group's movement? of the laity? Do you think this response is adequate? What do you think of the "white backlash" and the "moderate" churchmen? Do you feel that the Ecumenical Council will help the Negro? In general, do you think the Catholic Church has helped the Negro in his struggle for equality? Do you think that Catholics and the Church can do more to help the Negro cause, and what?

The purpose of this paper I am writing is to see "from the other side of the fence" the relation between the Catholic Church and the Negro in his fight for civil rights. I am very interested in this topic; I would very much like to find out about it and would be most grateful for all the help you can give me.

Although I know you are probably very busy, please help me if you can. I need this information within two weeks, before May 4, if at all possible. Thank you very much for your time.

Mr. Harry F. Flynn

Studio City, California

Dear Mr. Flynn:

Thank you for your good letter of May 5th. Before responding directly to its comments I will pause just long enough to say a brief prayer for the advent of the day when Conservatives of your sort -- I am basing my evaluation of you on your letter -- become the dominant representatives of the right. You have no idea what a pleasure it is to receive a letter such as yours which looms up out of a lamentable context characterized by charges of treason, threats, insults, curses, slanders and libels.

Just when I begin to feel tempted by the conclusion that, except for a small handful of intellectuals, the American right is actually slipping into outright political lunacy a communication such as yours comes along to restore my faith in the sort of fair and meaningful political dialogue that I fervently believe is necessary to the preservation of our society.

So much for speech-making. As regards the question: who might want to debate Bill Buckley on the effectiveness and legality of Civil Rights demonstrations, I'm sorry to say that as of this moment no names occur to me although I'll be glad to see if I can come up with some suggestions and get them to you in a second letter.

It might be somewhat easier to book a speaker to oppose Bill on Friday, October 15th if you enlarge the subject-matter to be debated. The Civil Rights struggle -- as I know you are aware -- encompasses a great many more factors than the ethicality of public demonstrations.

I have the idea that if your other speaker is a Negro the discussion -- whatever its boundaries -- will be sharper and more interesting.

As regards the possibility of my own participation all I can say at the moment is though I greatly enjoyed my last set-to with Bill (we are personal friends), and look forward eventually to repeating the experience, it is not possible for me to say at present just what my professional schedule will require of me as of next October. I do know that I will be doing the "I've Got A Secret" program on CBS, which makes it necessary for me to travel to New York every two weeks, but beyond that nothing is definite at the moment. It appears probable, however, that Mrs. Allen and I will be doing a second television show and if this becomes definite I'm afraid it will rule out a great deal of the sort of public speaking that I am presently finding time to do. I suppose, therefore, that all my Conservative friends will be rooting for this second show to go on the air, since it means that Los Angeles residents will be hearing less of my political propaganda in person.

I'll make a few xerox copies of your letter and mine and send them around to some Civil Rights people who might be able to suggest speakers for you.

On another subject altogether: I have a book coming out titled "Letter To A Conservative." It will be published by Doubleday & Company this September. I wonder if your Young Republican group would ever be interested in hearing a non-Republican speaker, not in debate but just in leisurely address, on the subject of right-wing extremism. The point of my book -- and my general thinking -- on the subject is not, God knows, that Conservatives or Republicans are terrible people who ought to be run out of town. I assert, rather, that this nation absolutely requires a vigorous and responsible Conservative movement and that I would be dismayed were one hundred and ninety five million Americans to awaken tomorrow morning to find themselves doctrinaire Liberals. But I assert further that -- from the viewpoint of their own selfish interest -- Conservatives ought to do more than they have done up to the present moment to disavow the right-wing fanaticism concerning which there has been so much publicity the last few years. A number of Conservative intellectuals are generally familiar with my thinking along this line and I have the impression for the most part they go along with me in this one area although it is naturally awkward for them to say as much in public because by alienating, say, the Birchers or the Liberty Lobby group they would run the risk of offending a sizeable percentage of their subscribers, readers, adherents, political shock-troops, etc.

Rest assured that if you are unable to arouse enthusiasm among your associates about the prospect of my speaking to your group -- or, for that matter, unable to feel any enthusiasm for the idea yourself -- I will quite understand. I suppose if the average Conservative wrote to a group of young Liberals or young Democrats and told them he was available to speak there would be a good chance that their first inclination would be to close their ears to his arguments.

In any event, I look forward to hearing from you.

Cordially,

STEVE ALLEN

May 5, 1965

Dear Steve:

Although we haven't talked since the time you did a "Juke Box Jury" for "Peter Potter" with Jayne about five years ago, I have followed your career, particularly your interest in politics, and feel I have something that may be of interest to you.

As an important figure in the Civil Rights Movement, I'm sure you are aware of the discussion between the left and the right concerning both the degree and final efficacy of aggravated demonstrations. Although there's no question for either side as to the need for positive action in behalf of the constitutional rights of every citizen, means do not justify ends. What then are the means amenable to both sides, if any?

You have debated Bill Buckley and I think debates of this nature are good for two reasons: One, they articulate causes for both sides; and two, they bring together both sides in an atmosphere relatively free of emotion-charged animosity.

I represent a group of Young Republicans in the San Fernando Valley who would like very much to see a cool and rational debate between Bill Buckley and a representative of the Civil Rights Movement concerning the effectiveness and legality of the demonstrations now taking place nationally. To make sure that this debate serves not only as a discussion but also as a real "reasoning together", I should like to follow the debate with a cocktail hour for both sides.

We have Bill set for October 15th, which is a Friday. We have not set a hall because we're not sure yet whether he will merely speak or debate. This last, of course, depends on what interest we can elicit from your side of the fence. What do you think? Would someone be interested, yourself, or perhaps even one of the negro leaders of the movement, some of whom I am well aware are very articulate?

Although we are poles apart politically, I am very much in awe of your wide range of talents, your fairness and consistency in political thought, and above all, your sense of humor. I know how busy you are, but if you can find the time to make some suggestions on this project, we would be most appreciative.

Dear Professor Northwood:

The new direction of the civil rights movement is toward community organization, that is looking into the ghetto, seeking to develop roots there and to help to organize it for effective self-help and political action in the interest of equality. Obviously social workers have many skills in dealing with the problems of deprived communities which can be useful to the civil rights movement in its efforts in community organization.

Increasingly, CORE chapters are establishing community centers in the heart of the ghetto. Volunteer services of social workers at certain fixed hours at these centers would be of immense aid in our work. Some social workers have volunteered their services in such community centers in the South. It is probably even more urgent that their skills be utilized thusly in the northern ghettoes.

Mr. James Farmer
Congress of Racial Equality
38 Park Row
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Farmer:

During the past year, more than ever social workers have expressed concern about ways in which they can employ their professional skills to further the objectives of the civil rights revolution. This is complicated by many factors some of which grow out of errors and omissions in their own practice and others which grow out of the confused times and the lack of concensus among civil rights advocates about best courses of action.

I am currently engaged in the preparation of a manual on race and social work which I hope will help clarify the problems and policies in social work practice which involve race differences, prejudice or discrimination and which would point to the need for greater self-awareness and participation on the part of individual social workers and their agencies in the civil rights revolution. The preparation of this manual has some financial support from the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, and correspondence has been entered into with several noational social work organizations which have expressed an interest in the outcome of the project.

Of necessity, this manual is being prepared somewhat removed from front lines of action, whether in social agencies or community. This letter is one attempt to avoid a grand detached isolation. Consequently, I am writing to a number of social work and civil rights leaders to ask them if they will each provide me with a brief personal statement of the ways in which they think social workers and social agencies can be most effective in accomplishing an appropriate stance on matters of race and the civil rights revolution. What is the best point of entry of social work in this struggle? What should be done by social workers as citizens and in their work? What should be done now to meet the crisis? What is appropriate sustaining program?

I would be glad to get a short paragraph or a long letter with your personal opinions on the subject. The results of the letters will enrich the orientation of the manual. In addition, if I have your permission, perhaps I can quote from your reply in the proper place. Of course, if your wish, your comments may be kept anonymous or confidential.

It is my opinion that there must be closer understanding and work between organized social welfare and civil rights movement. I hope that the manual will help to bring this about, and thereby move us one step closer to resolving the American dilemma. Our schedule is to complete the manuscript by the end of the year. We would, of course, be delighted to get your comments on the first draft, if you have the time for that.

I will look forward to hearing from you in the near future. In the meantime, I hope this letter findsyou in good health and spirits.

Cordially yours,

Oct. 1, 1965.

Dear James Farmer:

This is important and rush.

I am out here this term, working on the UN.

But I have persuaded the Center to do a study and possible issue a pamphlet on the civil rights-civil disobedience current movement (nego, student, etc). Bayard will be here, also Judges, lawyers, etc.

I must have a biblio and copies of some of the key articles. The meetings will be toward the end of the month. I should have this ready the latest by Oct. 20-24. Could someone there list (and where possible, phtostat and send me copies of) the articles, books, etc. which you think would most correctly represent the current theory, strategy and evaluation of civil disobedience.

You know I have the historical grounding, but I am not as clear as I should be on the last 10 years or so, and the center Library is not very good for this.

Dear Mr. Judkins:

Mr. Farmer is out of town on an extended speaking tour and will not return to the office until after Thanksgiving. I am therefore taking the liberty of replying to your letter of November 14th.

Because Mr. Farmer's schedule is terribly full through the middle of January, I know he will not have time personally to answer the questions you posed in your letter. I am enclosing two statements by Mr. Farmer that should be of help to you in your term project.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Farmer:

As a graduate student at Boston University, I am involved in a term project dealing with an analysis of the educational and persuasive activities of CORE since the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

I have been to the Boston Chapter and acquired many useful pieces of literature. I would appreciate any literature from the home office, but more importantly I am also interested in the strategy behind the various 'propaganda' campaigns. (I use the word propaganda in a positive sense;of all efforts to propagate an idea--not in a negative, subversive sense.)

I would appreciate replies to the following questions at your earliest convenience as I would like as much time as possible to digest the material:

--Who are the primary audiences of your educational and persuasive activities?

--What is their purpose now that the 1964 Civil Rights Act is law?

--What are the major policies of CORE upon which these various activities are based?

--How much, if any, have these policies shifted since 1942?

--What are the techniques for implementing particular objectives?

Thank you very much.

Sincerely yours,
Roger B. Judkins

Dear Miss Stedman:

Thank you very much for the two statements by Mr. Farmer sent on November 17. They have helped me greatly in writing my term paper.

However, there are a few more things I would appreciate your sending me:

--I would appreciate all the past Annual Reports from 1942 on, and other published statements of Mr. Farmer and other officers of CORE.

--What are the plans, if any, to use the mass media in carrying out policies?

--Could you send any literature concerning the past efforts of the New York City CORE chapters against Mayor Wagner and the Police Commissioner? It would offer an invaluable case study for my paper. ✓

--I would appreciate any literature serving to bolster CORE's "new thrust" in the political, educational, economic, and cultural areas.

--What are the current developments of community organization and political organization and action? ✓ Wall St Journal

--Finally, what is the nature of the conflict of ideology between CORE and the NAACP, and other civil rights groups?

I would appreciate this material at your earliest convenience. Thank you very much

Dear Mr. Farmer:

Although we have never met, I believe you know one of my professors, Mr. Paul Baker. He suggested to me that you might be able to help me with a paper which I am writing.

I am working on an Independent Honor Study Project concerning general semantics and racial prejudice. By doing a general semantic analysis of some representative statements of various significant figures concerned with race relations, I hope to be able to gain some insight into the problems which arise simply from the language and communication difficulties people have.

This letter is, therefore, a request for a copy of what you consider to be your best speech to date in explaining your position on the civil rights issue.

I would greatly appreciate it if you could send me the speech as soon as possible in order that I might start working on it. A stamped, self-addressed envelope is enclosed. Thank you very much for your time and consideration.

Dear Mr. Farmer,

I am a student at Barstow Junior College, taking a course in political science. I have been assigned a term paper for this class. The topic of my paper will be, "The Stand of the Mormon Church on Civil Rights."

I have read several articles about the Mormon Church and their beliefs about the Negro Race. I understand that the Negro people have demonstrated against the Mormon Church in Salt Lake City, Utah, because of these beliefs. I was wondering if you, or your organization could send me any information about your feelings toward the Mormon Church that might be of help in writing this paper? I would appreciate any opinions or written material that you might be able to furnish pertaining to this topic.

Hoping that I will be hearing from you soon and thanking you in advance, I remain

Dear Mr. Farmer:

As a facet of our public affairs function, we attempt to inform our supervisory and professional employees of vital issues concerning the nation. Basically, we do this by writing, publishing and distributing a periodical entitled PUBLIC AFFAIRS MEMORANDUM, devoted to a specific subject. Every effort is made to keep this publication objective so that our employees may arrive at their own independent conclusions.

It is our hope to publish in the near future one such essay on the Negro in the United States. Like other companies, Western Electric has become increasingly concerned with the problems faced by the Negro -- problems which permeate our society -- and we still are probing for answers we do not now have. In recent months much has been said and written about the problems, but not enough thought has been given to their basic causes and what can be done to resolve them.

To help us bring before our management people the facts required to reach enlightened and intelligent judgments, which, we hope, will contribute to worthwhile action, we ask your aid. Would you take some of your valuable time to consider answering four questions? They are:

1. What are the basic causes of the problems faced by today's Negro?

2. What were the five most significant events in 1965 that affected the Negro -- for good or bad?

3. What are the five developments most likely to occur in 1966 to assist the Negro?

4. What do you regard as the single most important action that can be taken to alleviate -- if not eliminate -- these problems?

Obviously, volumes could be written in reply to these questions, but we do not wish to burden you with time-consuming tasks. Perhaps the enclosed examples of recent essays will give you an idea of our approach to national issues and help you formulate your reply.

Very truly yours,

I. M. STERNBERG

Mr. James Farmer, Nat'l. Dir.
Congress of Racial Equality
38 Park Row
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Farmer:

The Jewish Labor Committee National Trade Union Council for Human Rights will hold its 4th National Trade Union Conference at Unity House, the ILGWU vacation resort in the Pocones, Decoration Day weekend, May 26-30.

Several hundred trade union leaders from all over the country will come together to discuss the problems and responsibilities confronting us at this crucial stage in the struggle for civil rights and equality.

Our civil rights conferences have been important landmarks in developing programs to combat intolerance and discrimination. The program, as in previous years, will include both general and panel sessions. Panel discussions have provided a valuable opportunity for an interchange of ideas and experiences and have frequently given rise to new JLC activities. A panel devoted to the meaning of the sit-ins and other protests against segregation and discrimination is planned for Sunday afternoon, May 28.

On behalf of our organization, we cordially invite you to participate in this session. We would be most honored if you would accept this invitation and we hope that you can spend this weekend with us as guests of our Committee. Your participation will add immeasurably to an understanding of this issue.

We would appreciate it if you would kindly let us know if you can attend.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

Adolph Held, Chairman

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy was urged today (Monday, May 15) to commence an immediate "intervention, vigorous investigation and prosecution" of racial bigots who brutally assault participants in the "Freedom Riders" bus excursion through the South this weekend. The Attorney General was also urged to "assign a personal representative to accompany those upholding constitutional rights."

The telegram signed by Jacob Pat, Executive Secretary of the Jewish Labor Committee, to Attorney General Kennedy is as follows:

"BRUTAL TREATMENT OF CONGRESS OF RACIAL EQUALITY'S FREEDOM RIDERS IN ALABAMA AT HANDS OF BIGOTS AIDED AND ABETTED BY LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS CALLS FOR YOUR IMMEDIATE INTERVENTION, VIGOROUS INVESTIGATION AND PROSECUTION. WE URGE ASSIGNMENT OF A PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE TO ACCOMPANY THOSE UPHOLDING CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS. LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICIALS, INDIVIDUALS OR GROUPS RESPONSIBLE FOR THESE ACTS OF BRUTALITY AND INTIMIDATION SHOULD BE BROUGHT TO IMMEDIATE JUSTICE. THE USE OF NAZI SLOGANS BY ATTACKING HOODLUMS ALSO CALLS FOR THOROUGH INVESTIGATION BY YOUR DEPARTMENT. NOT ONLY DOES AMERICAN PRESTIGE ABROAD SUFFER FROM THESE ACTS OF BRUTALITY, BUT EVERY TENET OF DEMOCRACY IS CHALLENGED. YOUR IMMEDIATE ACTION WILL BE DEMONSTRATION TO OUR CITIZENS AT HOME AND TO OUR ALLIES ABROAD THAT AMERICA CONDEMNS AND ACTS AGAINST THESE ASSAULTS ON OUR CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS."

Miss Elaine Abramson

Dear Miss Abramson:

CORE has substantial numbers of Jews active in our local chapters and active in giving us financial support. However, I do not believe we have any information appropriate to the theme of your convention "The Role of the American Jewish Teenager in the Civil Rights Dispute". I believe that our only comment would be that we believe that all Americans have an equal obligation to participate in the civil rights movement. For your information I am enclosing a copy of "All About CORE" and a recent CORElator.

I would suggest that you contact the American Jewish Congress, The American Jewish Committee and the Anti-Defamation League for more specific information about the role of Jews in civil rights.

Sincerely yours,

Gordon R. Carey

Dear Mr. Farmer:

Although you were unable to attend this Conference on October 12, I hope I can assume that you would be interested in learning at least minimally of its results. Speaking for the other Sponsors and myself, as well as for the participants, let me just say that we all found it an unusually informative and productive meeting which contributed to bringing this problem to the attention of American and world public opinion.

For your information, I enclose a list of the participants. I also enclose a copy of the Resolution adopted by the Conference. Since this Resolution is going to be brought to much larger public attention in various ways, it would be of great value and help if you also would adhere to it. May I ask you, then, to drop me a note indicating your adherence.

With best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

AN APPEAL OF CONSCIENCE

FOR THE JEWS OF THE SOVIET UNION

/Statement adopted by the Conference on the Status of Soviet Jews, Carnegie International Center, 345 East 46th St., New York City, October 12, 1963./

Having heard careful and objective evidence about many aspects of the life of Jews in the Soviet Union, we are moved to express unanimously our grave concern and to make the following appeals:

We appeal to all those in the U.S.S.R. who genuinely desire the eradication of the evils of Stalinism and who, with us, thirst for truth, justice and decency.

We appeal to the Soviet authorities to act in this matter on the basis of their own ideological, constitutional and legal commitments.

We fervently hope that the following specific steps may be taken:

1. Jewish education in all its forms should be permitted.

2. Jewish cultural instututions should be reopened and Jewish artistic life -- literature, theatre, music, in Yiddish and Hebrew -- should be allowed to develop fully.

3. Central institutions to serve the religious needs of Soviet Jewry should be established; obstacles to the performance of sacred rites should be removed.

4. Formal religious and cultural bonds with Jewish communities abroad should be allowed, official exchange visits permitted, and the right to make religious pilgrimages to the Holy Land granted.

5. Permission for Jews to leave the U.S.S.R., so that they may be reunited with families in other lands from whom they have been separated, should be implemented.

6. The anti-Jewish character that so strongly colors the official campaign against economic crimes should be eliminated.

7. A vigorous educational campaign against anti-Semitism should be undertaken.

We issue this appeal in all solemnity as a matter of urgency and elementary decency. We cannot keep silent so long as justice is not done on this problem.

Dear Emil Greenberg:

I was heart-sick when I read the story of the Lubavitcher Yeshiva on Bedford Avenue - the Negro teenagers who brutally assaulted those ten-year-old children as they came out of the Hebrew school.

Your letter was one of many in similar vein, "What do you think of your Civil Rights fight now?", etc.

And yet this terrible incident calls for a maximum of maturity - intellectual maturity. What is involved is an untruth we ourselves have fought against for centuries -- the identity of an entire race of people with the delinquency of one or several of its numbers.

When I spoke at UCLA last month there were two Nazi Party pickets outside with placards "Jack Ruby and Harry Golden - Jews." I laughed at it of course, but that's the whole point of the story, is it not? There was a story in our papers some some time ago of a father who was convicted for raping his daughter. It never entered my mind for a single moment that Southern white Baptists rape their daughters. All I thought of was a poor mentally-ill human-being who needs institutionalization and treatment. When I read of the terrible incident outside of the Lubavitcher school in Brooklyn, I did not think of the Negro people, but of a group of juvenile delinquents who need treatment and perhaps punishment too. I understood, too, that the ignorance of the young Negroes on top of their frustration, could possibly result in a lashing out against what their instinct tells them is the weakest point of the white structure arrayed against them, the Jews.

We all need understanding now.

Thanks for writing me.

Sincerely,

Harry Golden

Mr. Franklin D. Moran

Dear Mr. Moran:

You say the Negro "extremists" and J. Edgar Hoover's statement have made you lose interest in the Civil Rights fight? You give up easily, don't you?

Who else is put to the scrutiny and the test you put on the Negroes? They have opportunists and crooks and fools in the same proportion we have.

The fact that this great mass movement has produced so few fellows who pull the emergency cord in the subway, is a great tribute to the Negroes.

The other day a fellow was convicted in a Southern town for having raped his daughter. It never entered my mind for a single moment that white Protestant Anglo-Saxons rape their daughters. All I thought about was of a poor mentally-ill individual.

Yet you are willing to identify some of the best people this civilization has yet produced with a fool who pulls the cord in the subway?

About the "Communism" charge, the FBI may have information not available to the rest of us. It would have been better, however, if Mr. Hoover had publicly revealed the extent, the incidence, and the names involved. I know that Martin Luther King and Roy Wilkins and Jim Farmer are as vigilant against Communists as Mr. J. Edgar Hoover and they have been as effective as the FBI itself.

I am sorry that you lost interest in "their" cause.
I hope I never lose my own interest and my own affection for the white Protestant Anglo-Saxons even though a few of them do try my patience occasionally.

Harry Golden

Dear Mr. Kin:

Your letter of January 27 arrived while I was out of the office. Unfortunately, it got set aside with some other correspondence and has only come recently to my attention. However, it seems that I am reading it at a most opportune moment. I know that you are aware of the recent press reports of increasing tension between the Negro and the Jewish communities. Rabbi Schrage was in my office only a few weeks ago to discuss means of alleviating this situation.

Unfortunately, much of the newspaper reporting has been inaccurate and exaggerated. The stories of the blood brothers are almost entirely fabricated from small shreds of truth. Likewise, Rabbi Schrage's Maccabees have been much aligned and misrepresented. Nevertheless, there is a real problem and an increasing danger of alienation between Negroes and Jews. I am concerned with this problem as are others in CORE.

If after this long delay you would still be interested in an appointment, I would be more than happy to see you. If you would call my secretary I am certain that we can arrange an appointment after July 15.

I was also most interested in the novel to which you referred about the Negro president. If it has been published I should certainly want to obtain a copy. I will look forward to hearing from you and want to thank you for your patience as well as for your support and interest in our common cause.

Dear Mr. Farmer:

For many years I have been interested in cementing closer social and cultural relationships between Negroes and Jews. As the cultural director of the United Synagogue of America, in charge of Youth programs, I laid stress on the arguments of Rabbis during the Civil War period that no Jew was free as long as a single black man was enslaved. I dramatized the story of Harriet Tubman ("the black Moses") and traced the Old Testament background of Negro Revolt in America through the medium of cartoon talks, radio round-table discussions etc. Recently a number of United Synagogue Rabbis went to Birmingham to demonstrate their solidarity with their black brothers in the South. I have just finished a novel which deals with the election of a Negro president of the United States in the year 1984. The black president's name is Frederick Douglass Farmer (it was originally Farmer) and he is married to a Jewish woman, who thus becomes the first First Lady of Jewish origin. My purpose, of course, was to depict a utopian America in which all racial, religious economic and social barriers have been removed and total democracy has become a recognized way of American life.

But I am not only a creative artist but a man of action. I am a veteran of many political battles on the Civil Rights front. My organization, "The American Jewish Alliance" crowned its 40th-year activity by driving Father Coughlin off the air-waves. My book opposing Senator Wheeler of Montana drove this all-powerful pro-fascist legislator out of politics (by his own admission in his autobiography just published).

I am eager to get back into the wars and strike a blow for Negro liberation. A man must either 'not or burn', and to Conrad, and I am all aflame with the messianic desire to forge the unity of Negro and Jew in America in their common struggle against racists and anti-Semites. It is only the Jew's economic potency (as Booker T. Washington said, which places him on a higher social level in America). But his status is just as perilous as that of the Negro - perhaps more so - as long as the democratic process fails to function because of racial, religious and economic inequality. The liquidation of European Jewry is proof of that.

I am certain that it can happen here; and it is bound to take place if our business cycle of 'boom and bust' functions as usual. I am therefore eager to organize a common front of Negroes and Jews against the forces of neo-fascism and racism which will become more powerful and vociferous as labor, both black and white, demand their place in the sun. (In my novel it is the merger of the Negro Revolution in the People's Revolution which finally results in the election of a Negro President).

I am eager to discuss with you the organization of the Union of Negroes and Jews for Civil Rights as a subsidiary of CORE. All funds collected from Jewish businessmen etc will go to CORE, including a possible allotment from the Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation or some other philanthropic agency. One of my main concerns is the rise of Negro Anti-Semitism in Harlem which can be combatted through Good Will meetings in churches etc.

I hope you will grant me an interview in the near future so that we can discuss this matter further.

Sincerely,
David George Kin

Mr. James Farmer, Director
CONGRESS OF RACIAL EQUALITY
38 Park Row

Dear James Farmer:

It continues to be a pleasure to witness the effects of your vigorous and sound leadership.

Looking to the future, I am sending on to you a copy of a recent piece by Shad Polier that you might not have had an opportunity to peruse.

If you have to skim through the first few pages, I would urge that you consider the proposal he makes on the last couple of pages. Such a combination of groups as he suggests might well be able to work out some kind of compromise with leadership of the Mother Church regarding governmental aid to education in city, state and nation.

Further, it would appear time for the leadership in the fight against the segregated "neighborhood school" to join forces at some point with those who are concentrating their fight upon breaking open the restricted housing market. On the one hand we will have to fight in the next Congress for the adoption of a real comprehensive housing bill which would include adequate programs of public low-rent housing and urban renewal. It would mean also a struggle to get the President's order on non-discrimination in housing extended to cover the lending institutions including the Savings and Loan Associations, Home Loan Bank, and FNMA.

As one channel for such a fight you at least have one tool at hand in the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing.

By the way, CORE made the first approach to my agency - The City Housing and Redevelopment Board - by a group representing the Brooklyn chapter. The New York Urban League keeps fairly regular contact with this Agency, which handles the entire slum clearance and urban redevelopment program for the city as well as a large program of middle-income housing, rental and cooperative. We would like to look forward to other chapters of CORE as well as other Civil Rights groups getting into the middle of this picture with both feet.

Finally, I recall your challenging statement made to a CORE group on the boardwalk outside the Democratic Convention. I remember your saying that CORE would have to continue every effort to keep Lyndon Johnson from moving to the Right. I, therefore, was a little puzzled to note CORE units picketing and even heckling Goldwater and other GOP campaign meetings. My own personal thought was that they could not help Barry anymore if he had hired them himself. As an old observer of many political wars, I would have thought that they would have been picketing Johnson if they were trying to "keep him from moving to the Right" although I do not really believe that such action would affect the campaign much either way. But your "minions" would at least be bi-partisan if they picketed both - or neither.

Naturally, these are all personal opinions of an old war-horse who can still smell the powder but not run in the fight. It's presumption to think that you even have time to read all this but do believe that I offer it out of long experience and thinking as deeply as I can.

Best of luck to your continuing labors.

Sincerely yours,

Frank Horne

The Jew and the Racial Crisis

An Analysis of Negro-Jewish Relations Today

By Shad Polier,
Chairman, Governing Council
American Jewish Congress

15 East 84th St., New York

WE ARE IN FOR A PERIOD OF INCREASING ANTI-Semitism among Negroes. This development was almost inevitable. It is important to understand its significance for the Jewish community. It is most important, however, to understand how the Jewish community should and should not deal with this phenomenon.

The points of friction which provoke and exacerbate Negro anti-Semitism are obvious enough. The relationship of landlord and tenant, of shopkeeper and customer in the slum areas, of employer and employee in households and in many marginal industries—all these provide tinder easily ignited in the superheated atmosphere of the Negro revolution. The resentment and hostility by Negroes against white persons in these dominant positions should come as no surprise to anyone.

Regardless of the merits of the particular landlord, the particular merchant or the particular employer, he represents to the Negro the white exploiter, the white who lives and battens upon the Negro's helplessness. In striking back or—more accurately—striking out against the Jew, the Negro is assaulting a white world which he believes has shortchanged him and which he believes is determined to take advantage of him.

A degree of bitterness naturally inheres in this racial conflict. One of its natural byproducts is the Black Nationalist movement. It would be almost inconceivable that this particular form of extremism should not develop under the terrible pressures of a people seeking freedom and equality.

It may perhaps help us as Jews to understand this movement. Offhand, we may regard it as utterly alien to Jews. Yet let us remember a phenomenon in recent Jewish history. To the British people, the Stern gang in what was then Palestine was no less extremist than the Black Muslims are in the eyes of the American people. Nor does it change matters to say that the Stern gang was fighting for political freedom, or that it was fighting to open the doors so that Jews who had survived the hell of Nazism could enter into the promised land. The Negroes are also fighting for entry into a promised land and to escape the degradation and deprivations of second-class citizenship.

The Jews of Israel overwhelmingly repudiated the Stern gang and placed their trust in the Haganah. So, too, the overwhelming majority of the Negroes of America repudiate Elijah Mohammed and Malcolm X, his former disciple and now the would-be new prophet of Negro nationalism. Instead, the American Negro turns for leadership and places his trust in the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, in the NAACP, in CORE, in the Urban League, in the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee. None of these organizations is tainted with anti-Semitism at the national level. On the contrary, as national organizations they are profoundly concerned over the development of anti-Semitism. They realize the corrosive and negative consequences of anti-Semitism among Negroes. Their national leaders—the responsible heads of the Negro struggle for civil rights—are fully aware of the Jewish contribution to that struggle, and the tragic consequences that would result if Negro and Jew were to be pitted against one another.

NEGRO ANTI-SEMITISM, like anti-Semitism elsewhere is essentially the result of a search for a scapegoat, for some one upon whom the Negro's sense of frustration can be vented. Certainly it should come as no surprise that anti-Semitism is seized upon by Negro demagogues who employ it in their unprincipled fight to achieve and hold positions of leadership in local communities. In my view, however, Negro anti-Semitism is neither pervasive nor likely to be enduring. Like Black Nationalism, it touches only a tiny fraction of Negroes. Like Black Nationalism it is, I believe, a passing phase.

I do not dismiss Negro anti-Semitism. But I am equally concerned lest Jews react to it by alienating themselves from the struggle for racial justice.

Jews can point to the fact that their national organizations have joined together with all of the other liberal forces in this country to secure the enactment of anti-discrimination legislation. We can point to the fact that in the fight for the enactment of an adequate Federal civil rights bill Jewish organizations have been among the important voices supporting such legislation. We can point to the fact that no rabbis have invoked the word of God to excuse segregation. We can point to the fact that those Jews who have abused their positions as landlords, as merchants or as employers have acted no differently from any other white persons.

It is important that Jews point to these things. But it is equally important for Jews to realize that it will take time for these things to be seen by Negroes and to be listened to by Negroes. What troubles me is the danger that the individual Jew will become bitter, that he will become hostile, that he will divorce himself from the great struggle which is not a Negro struggle but an American struggle—the struggle for human equality and human dignity. Such bitterness, hostility and alienation can only be self-defeating. It can serve only to fuel the fires of anti-Semitism. Out of that crucible will pour anti-Negroism, a product no less terrible than anti-Semitism. The victim will not be the Negro, he will be the Jew—corrupted and scarred because he will have forsaken the most precious precepts of his religion.

There is one aspect of the racial crisis which, it seems to me, may become the touchstone of the Jewish response to the Negro struggle for full equality and dignity.

There is no Jewish hostility to the upward movement of the Negro toward full participation in the economic benefits of American society. In part this is accounted for by our position in the economic structure, as a result of which the Negro is not a competitor for jobs. There is, however, an even more fundamental reason for the absence of hostility. We Jews believe that there is room in America to provide a full economic life for everyone. Indeed, we welcome the Negro's emergence into fuller participation in our economic life, just as we urge that our country's doors be open to persons of other lands who seek to enter to enjoy a better life, although relatively few Jews will seek entry.

What I have said of employment is, I believe, essentially true of housing. I should doubt that Jews are concerned by the movement of Negroes into their neighborhood because they are Negroes. They are concerned lest the onward movement of Negroes bring persons of a lower economic and social status and threaten the spread of slums. I venture to say, however, that the reaction would be no different if those who were moving into the neighborhood were white persons of the same economic, social and educational level as Negroes.

But there is one area of integration in which there is deep concern and great apprehension on the part of many Jews—the current turmoil over efforts to end racial imbalance in the public schools. Here again, I am confident, the problem is not one of color.

No matter how much we Jews have been affected and influenced by the attitudes of our countrymen, we remain relatively immunized to racial prejudice. This is true because, unlike some others, we cherish our history of oppression and teach it to our children. We make it a part of our most sacred holidays. We humbly remind ourselves and teach our children that we were once "slaves unto Pharoah." We believe in the good things for all men regardless of their race, their color or their creed.

But there is a great distance between the Seder table and the public school. Because we are human, we are unwilling—or at least reluctant—to extend benefits to the children of others if we think it will be at the expense of our own. We have, I believe, fallen into the trap—together with the rest of the white community—of believing that public school integration in the North must necessarily be harmful to our own children. This approach on the part of the white community, of which we Jews are a part, seems to me to reflect a misconception of American society—a lack of understanding of the potentialities of American life, a lack of confidence in the possibilities of our country.

This attitude, which we too often share with the rest of the white community, rests upon a basic fallacy. It is comparable to the gross error of the Marxists who regarded class war as inevitable because they thought there was just so much wealth and income to go around. They reasoned, therefore, that progress could be achieved only by class war in which the proletariat, the disposed, would take over the instruments of production. The Western world has shown that in an advanced economic society there is an alternative which provides both the blessings of plenty and the blessings of freedom and human dignity.

Today, particularly in education, the white community has fallen into the same conceptual error as far as public school integration is concerned. The white community has been increasingly aware of the inadequacies of the present educational system. It has drawn the conclusion—a false conclusion—that our public schools, already inadequate, will be gravely and inevitably damaged by introducing into white schools Negro children who have been socially, economically, educationally and emotionally disadvantaged.

What the white community—and this includes the Jewish community—fails to see is that it is not a question of just so much education to go around, but rather that our society is rich enough and skilled enough to provide quality education for all children without penalizing any of them. But to do so, we must greatly strengthen our school system, build new school buildings in areas where de facto segregation will be minimized, provide more and better teachers, auxiliary services for remedial reading, enriched programs for integrated schools and similar services. The fact is that with enough will and enough funds, miracles can be wrought in giving equal and quality education to every child.

THE APPROACH to this problem requires first and foremost a change of attitude. We Jews should be the first to realize this. For we know—or should know—that the problem America faces today in the North in school integration is basically no different from the problem the people of Israel face as they seek to absorb and to prepare for equal citizenship the children of families from non-European lands. Those children and their parents have come to Israel with all of the economic, social, and educational handicaps with which the Negro has come into our Northern cities. Indeed, in terms of dimensions, our American problem is relatively small. More than half of all the children in Israel below high school are from disadvantaged homes and family backgrounds.

There is, of course, a difference in the situation in Israel. It is illustrated by a recent conversation between Moshe Kol, head of Israel's Youth Aliya movement, and an American visitor, non-Jewish, to whom he had explained what Israel is doing for children from Arab lands. The visitor listened and exclaimed, "Why, you have just the same problem we have." To which Kol replied, "But there is a difference; we welcome these children and their families. They are our brothers."

Israel, with all of its tremendous economic problems, has chosen to tax itself heavily to provide the funds, the plant, the services and staff to solve its integration problem, which has many times the dimensions of our problem here. Israel has done so without lowering educational standards and without taking anything from pupils who do not need the extra help that is given to Israel's own disadvantaged children. Israel is doing so not only out of a sense of brotherhood but because it realizes the consequences of grudging, half-hearted measures.

Cannot we Americans, Jews and Gentiles, white and Negro, learn from Israel's example? Is it not clear that massive financial resources are required to enable us speedily and effectively to provide integrated education now? Has it not become apparent that we can no longer regard Federal aid to education as an issue to be resolved some day rather than today?

Would it not be well for Negroes and whites to join together not only for public school integration but also for good integrated schools? Would it not be constructive if the Negro community issued a statement addressed to the Catholic cardinals, archbishops and bishops who have doomed Federal aid to education by laying down the condition that parochial schools must also benefit? Has the moment not come to stop fighting over what is not enough and rather join hands to provide a full educational fare for all children?

We can make an important contribution as a Jewish community if we take the leadership in seeking to form a coalition of whites and Negroes to secure the means needed to solve this vital and critical problem of de facto school segregation. For the time has ar-

Dear Mr. Farmer:

You will, I am sure, recall having signed last year a simple seven-point Appeal of Conscience for Soviet Jews. This was in response to a letter from Martin Luther King and Norman Thomas, acting for this Conference. We then hoped that the ultimate list of signatories would appear as an advertisement in a national newspaper, and this was indicated in the letter of solicitation. Until now, no funds have been available for this purpose. But now they are, in the following circumstances.

The American Jewish Conference on Soviet Jewry (not to be confused with this Conference, of course), which represents the overwhelming bulk of the American Jewish community, is sponsoring a "National Eternal Light Vigil" in Washington, D.C. on September 19. Among the speakers will be such signatories of the Appeal of Conscience as Mr. James Roosevelt, newly appointed Ambassador to the UN Economic and Social Council, Mr. Bayard Rustin, the civil rights leader, Mr. Michael Harrington, the socialist leader and writer.

The American Jewish Conference plans to insert the Appeal in the Washington Post on September 16. The advertisement will carry a brief notice of the Vigil and its program. But there will be an absolute and unmistakable indication that the signatories are on record as supporting only the Appeal and not the Vigil.

I am certain you will be gratified to learn that the Appeal will at long last see the light of day, and in a noteworthy place. As soon as offprints of the advertisement are ready, I shall be glad to send you a copy.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Farmer:

The plight of Soviet Jewry has been of deep concern to men of conscience. In January of this year 100 distinguished Americans of all faiths joined in an Appeal of Conscience, urging the restoration of cultural and religious rights to the three million Jews of the Soviet Union. It appeared as a full page ad in the New York Times, and subsequently was inserted into the Congressional Record, copy of which I am enclosing.

In the past few months, the Soviet Government has shown sensitivity to world wide public indignation and has made some token promises for corrective measures, yet to be fulfilled.

We appeal to you to join with us as a signatory in this humanitarian plea, which we plan to publish in the New York Times and other media, on or about October 4th. We would appreciate your approval of the ad facsimile on the enclosed response card.

With best wishes, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

Rabbi Arthur Schneier
President

Encls.

You are not forsaken, Soviet Jewry

Our prayers are with you for a New Year of peace. Our hopes are that the Soviet Government will by official policy improve your position as equal citizens of your country.

We welcome the promises made by the Soviet Government to permit the printing of 10,000 prayer books, the granting of resident permits for 20 students at the Moscow Yeshiva and the promise to make matzoth available.

In addition to the fulfillment of these promises, we hope that in the coming year 5726 these essential religious and cultural rights will also be restored to Soviet Jewry:

—Jewish education should be allowed.

—All restrictions placed on synagogues throughout the Soviet Union should be lifted.

—Central institutions to serve the religious needs of Soviet Jewry should be established.

—Obstacles to the acquisition of consecrated burial grounds and to the performance of sacred rites, such as religious burial and circumcision, should be removed.

—The publication of sufficient quantities of prayer books, Hebrew Bibles and the production of religious articles, such as prayer shawls, phylacteries and mezuzoth, should be permitted.

—Permission to Jews to leave the U.S.S.R. so that they may be reunited with their families abroad should be granted.

—Jewish cultural institutions enabling Jewish artists in the theatre, music and literature to develop Jewish culture in the Yiddish and Hebrew language should be re-established.

—Religious and cultural ties with Jewish communities outside the U.S.S.R., official exchange visits and religious pilgrimages to the Holy Land should be permitted.

YOU ARE NEITHER FORSAKEN NOR ABANDONED. REMAIN STRONG. KEEP YOUR FAITH IN YOUR HERITAGE.

September 15, 1965

Dear Mr. Farmer:

After a long period of silence and inaction, public awareness concerning the plight of Soviet Jewry is now beginning to spread. A mounting wave of protest since last year has begun to achieve some small but significant results, significant particularly in that they reveal an acute Soviet sensitivity to world public opinion on what is considered a moral issue by people of conscience.

We should like to state immediately our belief that the fate of Soviet Jewry hangs to a considerable degree on the development of reasonable and relaxed Soviet-American relations. We are therefore careful to disassociate our statements and actions from suspicion of connection with the cold war. Our program is thus presented in a moderate tone, though we will not compromise in disseminating the facts in a complete and unsparing manner.

We should like to call your attention to the fact that the Soviets are commencing a propaganda effort designed to inflate their recent "window dressing" concessions--or better, promises of concessions--and that they are meeting with some success. We believe that at this time, we are compelled to mobilize a much larger force of public opinion than hitherto. In this manner we shall be able not only to counteract this propaganda effort but, above all, prepare the ground for important breakthroughs.

We expect that a major advertisement in the New York Times will be helpful in this respect. We are enclosing the draft of such an ad for your consideration. You will notice that it is divided into two parts, the first of which is largely composed of a reproduction of the heart of Lord Russell's recent message to a Conference of Intellectuals in Stockholm. We are certain that you consider Lord Russell's statements quite appropriate and we should be most grateful if you would consent to associate yourself with them by appending your signature.

I would mention here that our movement--supported by faculty and clergymen--is now well-known to the State Department, to the American Conference on Soviet Jewry, to various Congressional leaders and to the experts as a responsible and dedicated group. We are, of course, in regular and frequent contact with experts. As regards the financial and technical aspects of the ad, we are receiving some assistance from a few business men, formed into a group known as the American League for Russian Jews.

For a number of reasons, it would be important to have this advertisement inserted at the end of September. We should therefore be most grateful if you would kindly inform us of your decision by September 27th.

Sincerely yours,

Jacob Birnbaum

A CALL TO THE SOVIET RULERS ON BEHALF OF SOVIET JEWRY

The famous philosopher, Bertrand Russell, so highly regarded in your country has in recent years persistently called on you to "restore the dignity of the Jewish people" within your borders. In his latest call--his message to the Stockholm Conference on Soviet Jewry this April, Lord Russell insists that "the plight of Soviet Jewry is a moral problem demanding the sympathy and constructive assistance of all impartial people" who are sensitive to the problems of suffering minorities everywhere. The situation of Soviet Jewry should therefore be taken out of the context of the cold war, he suggests. He appeals to you, the Soviet rulers, to understand that the situation gives an unnecessary weapon to your enemies and gravely handicaps attempts to foster co-existence. Lord Russell believes action in four areas is essential--

1. Reunification of Families

> "The reunification of families is a matter of the greatest urgency. Many Soviet Jews are elderly and wish to join their relatives, from whom they have been separated for a long period. The USSR is now the only country where serious steps have not been taken to end this situation. Other Communist countries, such as Poland and Bulgaria, have allowed reunification on a generous scale and continued to permit Jews to rejoin their families in Israel and other countries. The Soviet Union has given official recognition to the principle of family reunification, but this has not been extended on a wide scale. . . .
> It is distressing to see Soviet Jewish citizens who apply to join relations resident abroad subjected to bureaucratic harassment as if the motives for their applications were politically suspect."

2. Restoration of Jewish Culture

> "A basis for the restoration of Jewish culture destroyed by Stalin in 1948 was put forward by the Soviet Writers' Union in 1956. . . . It included the establishment of a Yiddish publishing house and a Jewish theatre; the publication of a Yiddish newspaper and a quarterly Yiddish literary magazine; the convening of an all-Russian conference of Jewish cultural workers in the Soviet Union; the preparation for publication of works by Jewish writers in Yiddish; and the setting up by the Soviet Writers' Union of a special commission for the restoration of Jewish literature in Yiddish. . . ."

3. Religious Freedom

> "In the Soviet Union, the position of Judaism is most unfavorable when compared with the Russian Orthodox Church, Islam, Baptists, Roman Catholics and Buddhists, all of whom have their national organizations, theological seminaries, journals and religious publications. Soviet Jews should be permitted facilities similar to those enjoyed by a group roughly comparable in size [such as] the Soviet Baptists. . . ."

4. Government Campaign Against Anti-Semitism

> "There is a carefully documented evidence of the existence of anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union. It is a matter of the deepest concern that this has often been condoned or encouraged by officials, as in the case of many publications issued with official sponsorship. . . . Anti-Jewish stereotypes are given wide currency in the Soviet Union.
> I should welcome a vigorous campaign by the Soviet mass media against anti-Semitism, in the same way as the authorities have organized public education against other social evils such as alcoholism and hooliganism. I look to the restoration of the dignity of the Jewish people. . ."

We, the undersigned--of various political and religious beliefs--are compelled to voice our deep concern. President Johnson recently remarked that this situation constitutes "a moral and emotional barrier" between our two countries.

We call on you to face the fact that your status as a civilized society is being seriously affected.

We call on you to face the fact that there is a Jewish problem in the Soviet Union and that world opinion expects a great country such as yours to take the necessary steps to resolve that problem, namely--

1. to permit Soviet Jews to recreate all necessary facilities for the unhampered enjoyment of their cultural and religious heritage
2. to encourage the integration of the Jewish citizen into Soviet society by immediate curtailment of -
   a) subtle discrimination in education and employment
   b) public expression of spite and hatred so often revealed in the Soviet press and so-called "Scientific" atheist literature
3. to permit -
   a) the reunion of war-torn families by enabling Soviet Jews to rejoin their families outside the Soviet Union
   b) the emigration of those Jews who, culturally and religiously, cannot fit into your society.

We ask you: If other Communist countries such as Poland and Rumania can permit a Jewish communal structure and the right to emigrate, why not the Soviet Union?

We ask you: If all other groups within the USSR are permitted minimum cultural and religious rights, why not the Jews? Surely a great society is not afraid of a few hundred synagogues, elementary Jewish educational facilities, books, newspapers and theaters?

We would reason with you: Have you not enough internal and external problems? Why complicate matters for yourselves by promoting a policy that, witting or unwittingly, is conducive to the moral cancer of anti-Semitism within your society and damages its reputation in the eyes of the world?

We say to you: "The restoration of Jewish dignity" would be a superb victory for those forces which are fighting for social rationality within their societies all over the world.

APPEAL TO THE AMERICAN PUBLIC

Lord Russell's insistence that this is a "moral problem" is particularly significant coming as it does from a known friend of the USSR. Our generation suffers from a universal guilt, stemming from the horrors of the last world war and the loss of one third of our people. Any kind of further destruction of the Jewish people--whatever its form--must make the burden of that guilt a truly terrible one.

We appeal to all Americans to join our protest, through their Synagogues and Churches, their community centers and their youth groups. It is of special importance that professional, academic and student circles be alerted to these injustices.

We request that a day be fixed which will be designated by American and Canadian mayors as "A DAY OF SOLIDARITY WITH SOVIET JEWRY," a day on which hundreds of thousands throughout the land should appear in front of their City Halls to stand in a silent vigil of appeal to conscience.

This goal implies a grass roots movement and, in the coming months, important steps will have to be taken towards its realization. In line with our past activities, we are preparing ourselves for an even more significant role than hitherto.

During the past year, our two organizations have, separately and jointly, engaged in intensive campaigns of information combined with a series of public demonstrations, including the famous Jericho March around the Soviet UN Mission. Many organizations have done good work for the cause, but our are the only ones which are exclusively occupied with it. We have acquired a reputation for the solid and responsible nature of our work.

Our dedicated personnel--all volunteers--deem themselves to be highly privileged to be involved in this work of redemption and are ready to put their special experience at the disposal of groups working on Soviet Jewry programs at any level, as part of our drive to create a grass roots campaign.

With this, our goal of mass protest, we feel that there is now no alternative but to enter into a new and greatly expanded phase of activity. However, in order to continue our work and to expand it, we need money and we need volunteers.

We challenge those who consider themselves fighters for justice to give us their moral and financial support!

THE MUTUAL SAVINGS BANKS OF NEW YORK CITY

A Survey of the Exclusion of Jews at Top Management And Policy Making Levels

THE MUTUAL SAVINGS BANKS OF NEW YORK CITY

A Survey of the Exclusion of Jews at Top Management And Policy Making Levels

Introduction

"Top executive posts in business and industry today constitute almost the only sector of American industrial life from which religious and ethnic minorities remain substantially excluded." This was the major finding of a December, 1963 American Jewish Committee report on Patterns of Exclusion in the Executive Suite: The Public Utilities Industry.

The following study by AJC's New York Chapter of top management and policy making personnel in the city's mutual savings banks shows that this virtual exclusion is no less pervasive in 1965.

Findings

Eighty-two percent (82%) of New York's 50 mutual savings banks have no key Jewish officers at all, and 60% have no Jewish trustees. Less than 2.5% of the more than 400 officers and under 3.5% of the approximately 750 trustees are Jews.

Boards of Trustees

Discriminatory practice in selection of trustees is not now specifically regulated by state banking laws which set only purely formal qualifying standards of age, residence and financial responsibility. Yet the absence of Jews as trustees appears to violate the spirit of the state's general policy against discrimination and is even contrary to the explicit criteria of the Savings Bank Association of New York State governing selection of trustees.

These criteria, as expressed in the Association's recent pamphlet, Building a Base for the Future -- A Timely Savings Bank Message, asserts that:

> "In keeping with the spirit of community service in which savings banks were founded, their trustees have always been selected on the basis of proved leadership in the community and in their own fields of endeavor. They are men and sometimes women, in many walks of life: leaders in business, the professions, education, finance, and in government at all levels. Many possess business and professional skills that are directly pertinent to the management of the bank, but more important is their dedication to the community and its people whose interest the bank serves."

On the basis of similar standards, Jews have been appointed or elected to the Board of Directors of almost every non-sectarian philanthropic and community service agency in New York City. In light of the quantity and quality of Jewish participation in the city's business, professional, financial and communal life, it is hard to explain the serious absence of Jews from policy-making positions on savings bank Boards of Trustees. The evidence suggests that insensitivity and indifference, if not deliberate exclusion, have hardened over the years into de facto discrimination.

The Absence of Jews from Key Officer Positions

The same pattern of exclusion exists in the hiring of bank officers. Almost 25% of the population of New York City are Jews, as are 50% of its college graduates. This figure attests to high qualification, as a group, for executive positions. Such statistics are cited simply to indicate that there is a reservoir of available talent which is not being drawn upon. They do not suggest that any device such as a quota system is called for. On the contrary, recruitment and promotion on the basis of individual merit is the concern.

The History and Status of Savings Banks in New York City

The first mutual savings bank in New York City was founded in 1817. A historian of the industry describes its founders as "philanthropically minded people" whose purpose was to take "measures to alleviate the prevailing poverty." Early savings banks were considered to be a service for the working classes to provide the means, through encouragement of thrift, for broadening the base of participation in the capitalist economy.

Today, 50 mutual savings banks have headquarters in New York City, with a total of 215 offices and deposits of $25. billion in eight million savings accounts. The largest have assets comparable with important commercial banks; their aggregate assets equal about half of the $54. billion total for all United States mutual savings banks combined.

Savings bank funds are chiefly invested in mortgages on residential and commercial properties, in Federal, municipal and corporate bonds, and in stocks. The state's construction industry and home-owners rely heavily upon savings bank financing, as do Government and corporate borrowers. At the same time the savings banks are custodians of the savings of millions of individual depositors.

Self Perpetuation of Trustees

The trustees of New York savings banks are elected for life terms, or until they reach a mandatory retirement age stipulated in the by-laws of individual banks. Vacancies are filled by vote of the remaining trustees. There are no stockholders. Depositors have no vote. (In the case of mutual insurance companies, in the State of New Jersey, the Legislature has recognized that self-perpetuation and inadequate representation of trustees is against the public interest. The governor now appoints several trustees who represent policy holders and the public.)

Historically, founders of savings banks have been community leaders and men of substance, serving without compensation and part-time, administering the deposits of the public as a quasi-public service. As the banks grew, they hired full-time paid officers. Today, the trustees of the larger savings banks draw fees comparable to those of directors of important stock corporations.

The characteristics of a trustee are defined by William H. Kniffin in The Savings Bank and Its Practical Work:

> "The service of a trustee, therefore, is to be of a philanthropic nature, similar to that rendered by the officials of a church or a school district. The element of personal gain is foreign to the office and 'What do I get out of it?' wholly outside the vocabulary of the savings bank trustee who serves in keeping with the spirit and letter of the law."

> "No man can buy his way into trusteeship in a mutual savings bank. He can only gain this honor by so conducting his personal and business affairs that his name shall be a synonym for honesty and integrity, and thereby win for himself the right to care for other people's savings. In fact it is distinguished from other moneyed corporations where-in stock ownership carries with it voting power and voting power control. The man who > aspires to bank directorship needs only to buy enough stock, or control its voting power, to elect himself; but in the savings bank, the proposition is rather like this: Become a leading citizen and wait until they elect you!"

Exclusion as a Status Denial

Since qualifications for trusteeship are often expressed in these terms of character, prestige and community standing, the absence of Jews on savings-bank boards could be taken to suggest that they are deficient in these qualities. Furthermore, the archaic attitude that excludes Jews as savings bank trustees inevitably keeps the ratio down in top staff positions.

New York Mirrors National Picture

These facts of exclusion are most dramatic in New York City, with its large Jewish population and their great commercial achievement and prestige, but they also support findings of restrictive patterns in many financial institutions and leading corporations elsewhere in the United States. Another American Jewish Committee-sponsored study, Discrimination Without Prejudice, completed in 1965 at the Survey Research Center, University of Michigan, found that although Jews comprise 12 to 15 percent of the graduating classes of the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration -- a favorite recruiting ground for large corporations -- Jewish students receive few of the desirable job offers.

This study concluded that:

> "In the United States, Jews are no longer disadvantaged with respect to education or income. Their training and educational background are conspicuously under-utilized, however, in the executive ranks of most major corporations. The evidence need not be recapitulated here; every serious effort to collect data on this subject has yielded the same general conclusions."

Recommendations

Mutual savings banks are chartered, supervised and governed by the executive and legislative branches of state government, whose public policy is unequivocally opposed to discrimination and restrictions based upon race, creed, color or national origin. Conformance to this important policy is essential.

We call upon the trustees and officers in the mutual savings bank industry to institute a review of practices that have systematically excluded Jews from important positions. We recommend immediate initiation of a program of remedial action.

The American Jewish Committee stands ready to render whatever aid is necessary to carry out a program of change and offers its consultative services to interested banks.

HIGHLIGHTS FROM JEWISH PARTICIPATION IN THE CIVIL WAR

The Civil War Centennial throws open the treasure chest of our history. Searching it, we discover how and why the robust, indestructible roots of our Nation, sustained by the good earth of liberty, have withstood storm and stress. The Civil War was a storm that almost split the Union: Launched as a war to extend and perpetuate slavery, it was transformed into a crusade from which our Republic emerged freed of the shame and the shackles of slavery. President Abraham Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation released the Negro people and all of our country's human and natural resources for the triumph of democracy and for civic, cultural and economic growth after the war.

Americans of many origins - descendents of early settlers, immigrants from various lands, and the Negro people themselves - fought for abolition of slavery before the war and risked their lives on the battlefields in the Republic's defense.

In this panel - presented as our contribution to the celebration of the Centennial - we have selected for honor a cross-section of those Jewish men and women who contributed to the glorious heritage which inspires and guides us for the further development of democracy. They represented the majority of the Jewish people - 200,000 - in 1861.

About 25,000 Jews lived in the South. Some - Judah P. Benjamin is an example - were among the 250,000 Southern slave holders who established the Confederacy and started the Civil War. The Confederate armed forces enrolled 1,300 Jews; note, however, that 6,500 served in the Army and Navy of the Union. Hundreds attained officer rank, the highest Brevet Brigadier-General Frederick Knefler; 20 were colonels and lieutenant-colonels.

Jews backed the Government and the armed forces in innumerable ways on the home fronts: in production, in financing the war, in morale-building activities. They raised funds to aid soldiers and soldiers' families. The Jewish Hospital in New York was placed fully at the disposal of the wounded. Hundreds of Jewish women were among those who sewed, rolled bandages, and performed other needed tasks. Jewish women worked with the Sanitary Commissions that were the predecessors of the Red Cross.

At the top of this panel we honor two of the great leaders of the Negro people, Sojourner Truth and Frederick Douglass. As leaders also in the woman's suffrage movement they frequently spoke from one platform with Ernestine Rose at abolitionist and woman's suffrage meetings.

May the Centennial serve to guide and move all patriotic Americans, Negro and white together to achieve, without delay, fulfillment of our Constitution and Bill of Rights - equal opportunities for all with bigotry toward none.

Join the Youth Movement for Freedom and Equality

The Negro student movement for equal service at lunch counters of the WOOLWORTH and other chain stores in the South has become an epic struggle for freedom that has inspired youth all over the country. We welcome this glorious movement as the most precious of all the Mother's Day gifts we have received this year. Nothing can be more rewarding, bring more happiness to mothers than the realization that their children cherish the life we have given them and that they are willing to fight for their right to live in freedom and dignity.

The best of our youth are picketing, marching, speaking, singing, fearless of arrest and jail to gain their inalienable rights

TO LEARN TOGETHER • TO SIT AND EAT TOGETHER • TO USE THE LIBRARIES, MUSEUMS AND GALLERIES WITHOUT DISCRIMINATION • TO PLAY AND WORK TOGETHER

Jim Crow and anti-Semitism, discrimination against Puerto Rican and Mexican Americans, like termites in our homes, attack the very foundations of our democracy. If we have learned anything from the Hitler-nazi horror we must know that Aryanism—the theory of a superior race—drummed into the minds of the German people brutalized the youth, and was followed by destruction of democracy in Germany, the annihilation of six million Jews and the nazi war for conquest of the world.

In the United States every family has already paid a heavy price for the "legalized" practice of discrimination in the South. Through laws which limit the voting rights in their States, Southern Congressmen managed to get elected and re-elected until they have acquired the seniority which entitles them to head the most important Congressional Committees. Bills vital to the health, welfare and peace of our nation are strangled in these committees.

We Need Federal Aid for Better Schools
But the small block of entrenched Southern Congressmen, elected by a small portion of the eligible voters in their states, have prevented the passage of a bill for Federal Aid to Schools by insisting upon segregated schools.

We Need An Adequate Housing Bill
But the same Southern white-supremacists in alliance with reactionary Northern Congressmen defeated or made small change of every housing bill that has come up in Congress.

We Need A Federal Health Program
A better social security program for the aged, including medical aid. We need relief from paying ⅓ of our income for taxes.

We Need Legislation for Peace
Laws to protect children from milk poisoned by strontium 90 and others dealing with various dangers of nuclear fallout and testing. Nineteen such bills are gathering dust in committees.

The Committees are chaired by Southern and reactionary Northern Congressmen who cooperate at all times to gain each other's support for bills that benefit big business at the expense of the people.

1960 IS THE 40th ANNIVERSARY OF WOMEN'S RIGHT TO VOTE — HIGH TIME WOMEN USED THAT VOTE FOR FREEDOM, FAMILY WELFARE AND PEACE

Thanks to the wise and courageous women who fought for women's right to vote we have that inalienable right today. It is now up to us to use that vote for freedom and peace when we go to the polls next November. Measure Presidential and Congressional candidates by how they stand on the two most crucial issues of our time: FREEDOM AND PEACE. Vote only for those Presidential and Congressional candidates who agree to work and vote for all measures to:

1. STOP DISCRIMINATION AND ESTABLISH FULL EQUALITY FOR THE NEGRO PEOPLE AND ALL AMERICANS.
   - Abolish the Poll Tax.
   - Guarantee the voting rights of the Negro people in the South.
   - Desegregate the public schools (in accordance with the Supreme Court decision) and all other government and public institutions.
   - Outlaw anti-Semitic and all group libel literature.
2. STOP THE ARMS RACE, OUTLAW NUCLEAR POWER FOR WAR AND BRING PEACE TO OUR COUNTRY AND THE WORLD.

THE NAZI-AMERICAN ALLIANCE - B E T R A Y A L

1. While our soldiers were fighting the nazis, while the millions of Jews, resistance fighters, radical christians were being cremated; behind our President's back, Dulles was negotiating with Nazis in Switzerland...

2. Hitler's intelligence agent, Reinhard Gehlen, was hired(1945) immediately by the U.S. and is today our chief agent in Europe. With his help and 6,000 SS men, the groundwork was laid for our Central Intelligence Agency.

3. The Nazi geo-political strategists, heirs to the pan German tradition of world conquest, were hired by the U.S. to work with our State Department and Pentagon in Washington...General Heusinger, for one...who was retired with honors only two years ago on April Fools Day and is now in Bonn building a three million man army.

4. The Nazi Geo-Political Center in Madrid has designed the blueprint for international fascism and the destructionof the United States..through its agents in our government, through its scientists in our country, through its ecclesiastical representatives in the U.S., it has managed to wield power through our greatest ethnic group, the German Americans, who are dedicated to Germany's revival and to the manipulation of the U.S.racist and economic power.....

5. The aims of pan Germanism are to divert and weaken U.S. power, by deploying it around the world, particularly in a remote Asian war, while draining our economy to build their own country so they can peacefully pursue markets in Africa, Latin America and Europe..with an eye to a temporary rapprochement with the Soviet Union . In addition, their theories of racial supremacy are used to encourage the fascist elements in the U.S. so that our country is divided and in turmoil for a rightist takeover.

6. The powerful German lobbyists, with vast sums of money are able to support these ventures in a country that is historically more racist than Germany itself.

7. The Nazi genocidal techniques have been integrated into our war making machine, into our universities, into our mass media propaganda and have gained acceptance as we have avoided ratifying the genocide treaty created by the United Nations.

8. Rather than expelling Nazis from our country we encourage them to immigrate here so that they can organize among our people...Among the nazi collaborators on our soil is one Sigmund Von Braun, who was kicked out of England for his Nazi associations and is now the permanent observer for West Germany at the United Nations. We should demand that this racist be bounced from the U.S! If England can do it, so can we...and this could be the beginning of a campaign to rid our country of these German Nazis who lend encouragement to our native nazi movment.

9. An expose should be made about the silence of the major Jewish organizations around the subject of German rearmament, the hiring of Nazi strategists in our own government..vis a vis the State Department bribe to Adenauer to pay Israel and give some of those funds to Jewish organizations in the U.S. This blood money silenced what might have been an effective opposition to the fascist devalopments were seeing today.

Documentation for these statements can be found in the works of T.H.Tetens, the author of "The New Germany and The Old Nazis" (Random House), "Germany Plots with the Kremlin", Mr.Tetens was born in Germany, escaped from a concentration camp and was brought to the U.S. by FDR in 1938. He became an adviser to Bernard Baruch and was given a wing in the Department of the Interior under Harold Ickes and worked on the U.S.War Crimes Commission

Dear Mr. Schaefer:

Your letter of October 25 has been discussed with the members of the labor-management committee.

The committee reaffirms its readiness to meet with a committee of CORE to discuss the meaningful solutions which the hotel industry and the union have worked out jointly to deal with the problems of discrimination and the steps taken to implement these solutions.

We still feel, as we said at our last meeting, that our discussion could be most profitable if CORE was represented by authoritative spokesmen for the organization and not by persons working in the industry whose approach is likely to be conditioned by subjective factors. We have no objection to such persons being present as observers.

For your information we wish to record that our joint committee is working energetically to break down barriers to full integration in the hotel industry.

However, it needs to be understood that the situation in the ho tels is different from that prevailing in many other industries. Negroes and Puerto Ricans make up a large percentage of the present work force in hotels. They constitute two-thirds of the crews in the housekeeping department. They are represented in varying degrees in the kitchen, mechanical, dining room, bar, banquet, front service and clerical departments.

The joint committee agrees that one of our major and immediate objectives must be to stimulate the promotion to better jobs of Negroes and Puerto Ricans presently employed, with emphasis on those departments where integration has lagged.

By action of management and the union, application forms have been circulated among the workers, with special attention to Negroes and Puerto Ricans, on which they are asked to register their desire to move into other jobs of their choice.

To overcome reluctance or doubt meetings are being held with these workers in the hotels to encourage them to apply, and steps are being taken to create on the job training opportunities to qualify them where necessary.

To intensify this program management and union have jointly set aside the month of November 20-December 20 for an "Equal Opportunity Survey" of the union's entire membership. The purposes are, first, to impress on all hotel employees the desirability of providing equal employment opportunities in the hotel industry, regardless of race, creed or color; second, to encourage workers from minority groups to apply for training and advancement, and, third, to ascertain exactly how many of these minority group workers are employed in each department of each hotel.

We set forth these facts as a background for what we hope will be fruitful discussions with CORE on a common objective. We feel that this letter will be of interest to the Board of CORE and have taken the liberty of sending a copy to each member listed on your letterhead.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Chapter Chairmen

November 27, 1963

FROM: James Farmer, National Director

CORE members throughout the nation were shocked, angered and saddened by the untimely death of President John F. Kennedy. We were disturbed by the murder of the man charged with the assassination. The entire nation has been shaken by these events. This period of mourning calls for calmness and dignified resolution in pressing for the passage of the civil rights bill which was originally introduced by the late President.

President Johnson has indicated publicly and in a telephone call to my home the evening of Sunday, November 24, that he intends to "pick up the ball" and work forthrightly for the pending civil rights legislation. Mr. Johnson deserves the support of all of us as he assumes the difficult responsibilities of carrying out the late President's programs. I have pledged him my support, as have the other civil rights leaders, in working toward the goal of full equality.

Even as we mourn the tragic death of Mr. Kennedy, we must not cease in our efforts to insure equality in the North and in the South. We must continue our programs in each local community and we must expand our efforts in the months to come. The job has just begun.

Our CORE chapters felt it inappropriate to engage in direct action projects immediately in the wake of the President's death. I concurred in that feeling. Now, during the period of mourning, each local community will have to decide on the basis of the situation in its own locale whether or not--and what kind of--an action program is appropriate.

One thing is clear, however. It is of the greatest importance that in the immediate future any CORE demonstrations be carried out with the utmost dignity and discipline and adherence to the CORE Rules for Action. The sad events of the past weekend are at least in part the result of the climate of hatred and violence generated throughout the southland by the Barnetts, the Wallaces and the ex-general Walkers. The violence recently encountered in Dallas by Adlai Stevenson had prompted him to caution President Kennedy against going there.

In this climate of opinion, it is urgent that CORE groups across the country rededicate themselves to nonviolence. I urge that all chapters during the month of December initiate special workshops stressing the practice of nonviolence in all phases of CORE activity.

It would, of course, not be appropriate at the present time for CORE chapters to launch attacks on the policies of the late President or of the new Administration. I would, likewise, strongly urge that CORE not engage in projects which involve civil disobedience before Christmas. At this particular time, as the entire nation calls out for a return to law and order, it would be extremely difficult to interpret to the public acts of civil disobedience--even though civil disobedience can in no way be equated with lawlessness.

Dear Mr. President:

I understand that the position of Special Assistant for Equal Employment Opportunity in the office of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy is vacant and that it is being held in an interim capacity by Mr. Girard Clark. I should like you to know that I consider Mr. Clark to be a most capable person. We feel that the position is of the utmost importance and would look favorably upon Mr. Clark's appointment.

Your administration and that of the late President Kennedy have made great strides toward equal opportunity within the government and within the society. It is imperative that men dedicated to these goals be placed in positions of importance. I trust that you will not consider this an impudence. Because of your keen interest in this problem, I thought that our views might be welcome.

Respectfully yours,

Dear Mr. Farmer:

I am sure you do not remember me. I was chairman of the Seattle CORE chapter during the year 1963. We met briefly one day when you stayed at our house while filling a speaking engagement here.

At present, I am working for the Navy Department in the equal employment opportunity program relating to government contractors. The program has great possibilities but these have not yet been realized because of the tendency on the part of high echelon personnel to staff key positions with political appointees who are not always knowledgeable in the area of human relations.

Recently, a vacancy was created in the office of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy; that of Special Assistant for Equal Employment Opportunity. For about one year that position was held by Mr. Edwin Byles who I believe was backed by the then Vice President. Mr. Byles resigned rather suddenly about three weeks ago. The job, which entails directing the entire Navy civil rights program, is now being held by Mr. Girard Clark in an acting capacity. Mr. Clark was formerly Mr. Byles' principal assistant.

Mr. Clark understandably wants the job on a permanent basis and I believe he would be an excellent selection for President Johnson to make. Mr. Clark has the backing of Mr. Kenneth BeLieu, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, who has ultimate responsibility for the Navy program.

Jerry is extremely intelligent and resourceful. He is a rarity among government civil rights workers in that he is sympathetic to and understands our organization, CORE. He was formerly administrative assistant to Senator Proxmire, and before that a CIO administrator.

He has really carried the program for the Navy, to date, and I frankly hate to think who might get the job if Jerry does not. (There are all kinds of folks looking for a $17,000 job)!!

I am writing to ask if you would consider endorsing Mr. Clark for the position of Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of the Navy (Equal Employment Opportunity).

The best thing I can say for him by way of summary is: He is a CORE sympathizer! I hope you will write President Johnson in his behalf.

Yours sincerely,

Reginald Alleyne

Dear Jim:

I am enclosing a Brochure on Shaw University as it prepares for a second century of service. During 1965 the college will celebrate 100 years of special service to our state, region and nation. Shaw is the nation's first college founded primarily for the benefit of Negro boys and girls. It now has a distinguished century contribution to the Great Society. Shaw now needs new resources and added impetus for enlarging its service to the fulfillment of the nations goals. The college indeed lives on a firing line of critical importance to overcoming human impoverishment.

Dr. James E. Cheek, President of the school has asked President Johnson to deliver the keynote address on any date convenient to him during the 1965-66 academic year. Since Shaw will be the first of several centennials for Negro colleges, I appeal to you to use your good offices in encouraging Mr. Johnson to use this unique occasion for voicing his ideals and hopes. He will spur educational enthusiasm among Negro youth throughout the country. He will add impetus to the growth of all institutions serving Negro youth.

Shaw hopes to have the honor of conferring a Doctor of Humanities on the President. Your help will be deeply appreciated and richly rewarding.

Sincerely,

John W. Winters

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE March 25, 1965

Office of the White House Press Secretary

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT TO THE CABINET

I want to make one thing unmistakably and indeliby clear to every Department, every Agency, every office and every employee of the Government of the United States.

The Federal service must never be either the active or passive ally of any who flout the Constitution of the United States.

Regional custom, local tradition, personal prejudice or predilection are no excuses, no justification, no defense in this regard.

Where there is an office or an officer of this Government, there must be equal treatment, equal respect, equal service -- and equal support -- for all American citizens, regardless of race, or sex, or region, or religion.

Public service is a public trust. I would call upon every Federal civilian employee to remember that he bears a high and solemn trust to the Constitution under which he serves. If all about him -- neighbors, friends, fellow townsmen, even family -- falter or fail in respect for the Constitutional rights of others, the public servant in the service of his country has a duty to protect, defend and uphold those rights by word and deed.

The Federal service asks no conformity -- no uniformity of thought and no unanimity of vote. But where Constitutional rights are concerned, the country can ask no more -- and accept no less -- than uncompromising devotion to the Constitution itself.

I am asking the heads of each Department and Agency to communicate this to every office and officer, whatever their rank or position, of the Federal service and to take all appropriate measures to assure full compliance with the spirit of the law that governs and guards us all.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE MARCH 26, 1965

OFFICE OF THE WHITE HOUSE PRESS SECRETARY

THE WHITE HOUSE

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT

TO THE PRESS

IN

(AS DELIVERED)

(12:40 PM EST)

THE PRESIDENT: My fellow Americans. In this historic room where just a few minutes ago we honored brave men and great American achievements we have come now to talk about a tragedy and a stain on our American society.

I am certain by now that all of you know of the horrible crime which was committed last night between Selma and Montgomery, Alabama. I have been in constant touch with the Attorney General and the Director of the FBI, Mr. J. Edgar Hoover throughout the night on this matter.

Due to the very fast and the always efficient work of the special agents of the FBI who worked all night long, starting immediately after the tragic death of Mrs. Viola Liuzzo on a lonely road between Selma and Montgomery, Alabama, arrests were made a few minutes ago of four Ku Klux Klan members in Birmingham, Alabama, charging them with conspiracy to violate the civil rights of the murdered woman.

Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, our honored public servant who is standing here by me has advised that the identities of the men charged with this heinous crime are as follows: Eugene Thomas, age 43, of Bessemer; William Orville Eaton, age 41, also of Bessemer; Gary Thomas Rowe, Jr., age 31, of Birmingham; and Collie Leroy Wilkins, Jr., age 21, of Fairfield, Alabama.

I cannot express myself too strongly in praising Mr. Hoover and the men of the FBI for their prompt and expeditious and very excellent performance in handling this investigation. It is in keeping with the dedicated approach that this organization has shown throughout the turbulent era of civil rights controversies. This nation and the President are very grateful for the highly intelligent and tireless effort of the distinguished Attorney General, Nicholas Katzenbach and his many associates who have carried the Government's fight to insure the rights of all citizens is guaranteed to them by the Constitution.

The four members of the United Klans of America, Inc., Knights of the Ku Klux Klan will of course be arraigned immediately. They will later stand trial.

Mrs. Liuzzo went to Alabama to serve the struggle for justice. She was murdured by the enemies of justice who for decades have used the rope and the gun and the tar and the feathers to terrorize their neighbors. They struck by night as they generally do, for their purpose cannot stand the light of day.

My father fought them many long years ago in Texas and I have fought them all my life because I believe them to threaten the peace of every community where they exist. I shall continue to fight them because I know their loyalty is not to the United States of America but instead to a hooded society of bigots. Men and women have stood against the clan at times and at places where to do so required a continuous act of courage. So if Klansmen hear my voice today, let it be both an appeal and a warning to get out of the Ku Klux Klan now and return to a decent society before it is too late. I call on every law enforcement officer in America to insist on obedience to the law and to insist on respect for justice. No nation can long endure either in history's judgment or in its own national conscience, if hoodlums or bigots can defy the law and can get away with it. Justice must be done in the largest cities as well as the smallest village, on the dirt road or on the interstate highway. We will not be intimidated by the terrorists of the Ku Klux Klan any more than we will be intimidated by the terrorists in North Viet Nam. We will reduce the sacrifices of those who suffer now in a society free of the Klan and those who support its vicious work.

I am asking and directing Attorney General Katzenbach to proceed at the earliest possible date to develop legislation that will bring the activities of the Klan under effective control of the law, and I am hopeful that legislation can be submitted just as soon as we can get the present voters' rights legislation through the Congress. And in connection with new legislation Congressional Committees may wish to investigate the activities of such organizations and the part that they play in instigating violence and I hope that if the Congressional Committees do decide to proceed forthwith, they can be assured of the cooperation of all patriotic Americans and certainly we will make all the resources of the Federal Government, the Justice Department and FBI available to them.

Dear Mr. Farmer:

I have been asked to acknowledge your letter of April 16th to the President in which you mentioned your interest in the invitation extended to the President by Shaw University to speak there in connection with its centennial celebration sometime during this academic year.

The President was most appreciative of this cordial and appealing invitation. However, after careful consideration in the light of the number of college and university commitments already made for the year, he reluctantly concluded that it would not be feasible to make this addition to his calendar. We wrote Dr. Cheek to express his regrets on April 8th.

The President thanks you for your interest, and is sincerely sorry the reply could not be a favorable one.

Dear Mr. President:

As I am sure you know, June 21st marks the first anniversary of the killing of James Chaney, Andrew Goodman and Michael Schwerner. A number of memorial events are being planned, the largest of which will be CORE's Gandhi Award service to be held at 8:00 PM on the evening of June 21st at the Ethical Cultural Society, 2 West 64th Street, New York, New York.

The Gandhi Award which CORE makes yearly for the most outstanding contribution to the non-violent civil rights movement will be given posthumously to these three young men. The families involved, Dean Pollak of Yale Law School, other distinguished civil rights advocates and I will be in attendance. I would personally be very grateful, as would the families of the young men, if you could arrange to be there or send an emmisary. In any case, we would very much appreciate a message from you to be read during these services.

I would also like to ask your advice as to the feasibility of your announcing a memorial week, June 21 through June 28th and/or your announcing a national committment to one minute of silence at 11AM on the morning of June 21st in memoriam for all the civil rights martyrs of recent years. This, of course, could be appropriately coordinated through all the families and organizations involved.

Thirdly, I would also appreciate it if you could issue a statement or proclamation through your offices regarding either the one minute of silence, one week memorial, or a general statement commemorating the anniversary.

For your information, we are asking the State of New York and the local Board of Education to issue such proclamations, attend the service, and institute the one minute of silence. Governor Rockefeller has already indicated warm interest.

I regret very much having to burden you with these problems, however, I think you can fully understand the emotional and historical significance of these requests to our nation.

My warmest regards to your family and I look forward to seeing you or hearing from you.

Dear Senator Sparkman:

Today I have sent the following telegram to the President:

However, we wish to indicate our strong support for amendments proposed by nine Senators on April 9, 1965 before the House Subcommittee of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. We are particularly concerned that the bill contain provisions for rent subsidies for low income families affected by government programs, and further that provisions are included which encourage rehabilitation of existing housing for use of low income families. We urge your vigorous support of these provisions.

Dear Mr. President:

I have just wired you as follows: "Commend your top priority for strong civil rights law since this the all-important moral issue of utmost consequence for the reputation both of yourself and of our country. Good wishes."

I emphasize that the civil rights bill now in the Rules Committee of the House is the minimum worth while bill and that it should be out of the question to water it down by compromise as occurred with the 1960 legislation. Rather than that, it would be better, I believe, to enact no civil rights legislation at all and let the struggle for real racial justice be fought out to a finish as a matter of principle involving the moral integrity of our people.

I wish you well and am, with great respect,

CORE INCREASES PRESSURE IN JONESBORO, LOUISIANA

Jonesboro, La., March 24, 1965--Three hundred fifty students marched to the office of the school board here today, lead by Glen Johnson, a student leader, to protest inadequate courses in the Negro schools.

The demonstration, organized by CORE, centered around demands for classes in foreign languages at the secondary level and improvement in curriculum. The Superintendent of the School Board stated that he would have a reply for the students and CORE tomorrow. In the meantime, 250 students are picketing the office of the school board.

The demonstration was part of the stepped-up activity in the Jonesboro area by CORE, particularly in response to the "blockading" of the Negro area by the local police. During the past week, Negroes have not been allowed to leave the area in which they live. The blockade has been lifted, but intimidation has been continued on the part of the whites in Jonesboro.

James Farmer, the National Director of CORE, organized a march yesterday and spoke at a mass rally in the roller-skate arena, with 1,000 persons attending and the crowd overflowing onto the sidewalks. Jonesboro has a total population of 8,000.

As part of the demonstrations, four Negroes attempted to be served at the Blue Grill Restaurant in a test of local compliance to the Civil Rights Act. They were refused service and arrested on a charge of disturbing the peace. Twenty-five dollars bond was required but the charge was later dropped. The four were Mrs. Queenie Esther Thompson, 22, Mr. Freeman Scott, 17, Miss Brenda Barrett, 17, and Mr. Willard Roff, 19.

James Farmer also sent a telegram to Postmaster General John A. Gronouski protesting discriminatory policies by the local post office in Jonesboro, which will not deliver mail to Negroes. Negro residents are forced to rent a post office box or stop by the post office for their mail, even when they live on the same street as the white residents, whose mail is delivered. The Postmaster General has initiated an investigation.

Dear Mr. Farmer:

Further reference is made to my telegram of March 24, 1965 regarding delivery service at the Jonesboro, Louisiana Post Office.

Investigation reveals that the area in question does not have delivery service because it fails to meet postal criteria for either city delivery service or rural delivery service.

Please be assured that race is not a factor insofar as the Post Office Department is concerned.

The establishment of city delivery service in this area would require the erection of street signs at each intersection where they do not presently exist and the assignment of house numbers, both of which are the responsibility of the local municipal governing body. The extension of rural delivery service would necessitate the erection of approved rural mail boxes by each patron.

It is our understanding that street signs in other areas of the city are being purchased and erected by civic organizations. We, therefore, mention the possibility of some organization in the Jonesboro community undertaking the procurement of street signs in the subject area as a local project. Insofar as the postal service is concerned it would be entirely satisfactory if the residents, with the concurrence of city officials, procure and erect the necessary signs. It is understood that the Mayor stated that he would assign the house numbers.

If the patrons prefer that rural service be extended, which will not require the assignment of house numbers and the erection of street signs, but only the erection of approved rural mail boxes, we are prepared to extend rural service to the area at an early date.

Mr. Richard Haley, CORE's Southern Director in New Orleans, Louisiana, has been furnished this information.

Your interest in the postal service and cooperation in this matter are greatly appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

John A. Gronouski

Dear Mr. Farmer:

On March 24, 1965, the Postmaster General sent a telegram in reply to your telegram of March 24, concerning alleged discrimination in mail service at Jonesboro, Louisiana. At that time, he stated that he would "advise you immediately upon completion of this inquiry."

The Regional Director, Dallas, Texas, has reported the following as being the latest development in the matter:

> "The postmaster advises that city delivery service has been extended to the subdivision having approximately 75% Negro families. Street signs have been erected and house numbers have been assigned. The postmaster advises that only about 15 residents have taken advantage of the service at this time. He is conducting a campaign to advise the patrons of the service that is available. An information sheet will be furnished to each resident of the area pointing out the steps that will be necessary for them to take advantage of the service that is now available."

There is, however, a problem which still exists in the delivery of mail to the Negro community of Jonesboro. Many of the homes are not equipped with mail receptacle which are a necessary part of mail delivery. We would appreciate your urging the Negro residents of Jonesboro to equip their homes with the necessary mail receptacle.

We hope that the results of our inquiry meet with your approval as our service to the public is without favoritism or discrimination.

We greatly appreciate your interest in the matter.

Sincerely yours,

July 7, 1964 - Ronnie Moore and Mike Lesser were driving from Jonesboro to Monroe when three cars of whites tried to detain them on the highway. Moore was driving and was able to get away from the three cars by making a u-turn and slightly knocked against one of the other cars. Then there was a chase back to Jonesboro at 105 mph. Moore and Lesser got to where the CORE workers were staying at Jonesboro. The three cars passed back and forth in front of the house. The Chief of Police was called along with the Sheriff but they did not respond until the FBI was contacted through Marvin Rich in New York. Then the Sheriff's deputies arrived along with the Chief of Police. The next day in Monroe, James O. Smith filed a warrant for Moore's arrest on the charge of reckless driving and hit-and-run. Moore later filed the same against James O. Smith.

July 10, 1964 - While canvassing Talbot Street in Jonesboro, threats of intimidation from the Sheriff's deputy and construction workers who told CORE workers to abandon work on voter registration in that area.

July 11, 1964 - Cathy Patterson, Robert Weaver, Bill Yates, Calvin Williams, Fred Brooks, and a local worker Doris Davis were apprehended by three Jackson Parish Deputies, one Lincoln Parish Chief Deputy, and one Louisiana State Trooper on U. S. Highway 167 and held for approximately two hours. They were made to pose for pictures taken by one of the officers, while standing outside of their car which was impounded by Jackson Parish Sheriff, although the incidents occurred in Lincoln Parish. The group received threats from these authorities when they refused to cooperate. Workers, Yates and Miss Davis were held under arrest by Jackson Parish authorities pending investigation of their identification, but were released without charge.

July 13, 1964 - Three white youths stopped at the Freedom House and engaged in a conversation with CORE workers and policemen. Upon becoming rude they were asked to leave, but only after they had made threats on the lives of the occupants of the Freedom House and Robert Weaver in particular.

July 30, 1964 - The KKK members burned crosses throughout Jackson Parish and nearly 50 or more Klansmen marched through the Negro section of Jonesboro, Louisiana holding burning torches in their hands lead by a sheriff's patrol car. The Negro section witnessed this and organized a group called the Deacons of the Defense of Justice.

November 30, 1964 - A cross was burned about two blocks from the Freedom House Saturday morning at 2 o'clock and five shots were fired around the House. Reports were made to the FBI. An investigation was made by the FBI and the Justice Department, Thursday evening.

In Early December - Jackson Parish library system was desegregated.

Dear Faculty Member:

A project has recently been introduced on campus by a group of students which deals with raising funds to aid in the rebuilding of two churches in Jonesboro, Louisiana. If you are not familiar with this issue, these churches were burned as a result of their being used for meetings connected with the Civil Rights effort in that area. There is already some effort being made at Southern University and other colleges in the Louisiana area to rebuild these churches. To this effort, the above mentioned group of students and their faculty sponsors are attempting to lend as much support as possible.

This issue is one that is typical of others in the South today. We feel that this is an excellent chance to exert some influence within the sphere of situations such as these. We are sure that there are few among us who feel positively toward such activities as church-burning and the destroying of unity in a small and relatively underpriviledged community. However, with small bits of communication filtering in through the Northern newspapers and other media, we are apt to feel very far away from these incidents.

Here, then, is a chance to shorten the distance between Syracuse and places like Jonesboro, Louisiana, and to feel an active involvement in the struggle for human rights. This project has a much broader scope than the scattered demonstrations throughout the country with which you may or may not agree. None of the negative aspects of the Civil Rights issue can be applied here. It is a simple question of human survival and it is on this basis that we ask you for a contribution.

It would help us if you would please acknowledge this letter in some way, and let us know of your intentions.

Thank you very much for your attention.

Very truly yours,

Nina Adams

PRESENT POSITION OF THE ACLU ON DISCRIMINATORY JURY SELECTION METHODS

Every defendant, in state and federal courts alike, has the right to be tried by an impartial jury which represents a cross-section of the community and which does not intentially or systematically exclude persons of his own color, race, economic class, or sex.

In the particularly critical area of the exclusion of Negroes from jury service, the Attorney General should be empowered to bring injunctive suits against the offending officials. Because the Attorney General is in a better position than are the private attorneys of Negro defendants to obtain the witnesses and records necessary to prove systematic exclusion, and because even frequent reversals of the criminal convictions of Negro defendants on the ground of exclusion of Negroes from the jury may not result in abandonment of this practice, direct use of the resources of the federal government ought to remedy the situation far more rapidly than private action.

PRELIMINARY WORKING PAPER ON FAIR JURY SELECTION

I. Introduction

Unfair jury selection methods have at last come under scrutiny in high places as a result of recent trials in Alabama and Georgia. Until now, the Government's interest in fair selection practices has not reached so far as the enforcement stage; Congress has been content to gradually improve its jury selection laws (see Appendix I for present Federal jury law). But this week, the President asked the Attorney General to write a law to insure fair jury selection methods.

Of the three principal ways that can now be used against systematic exclusion of minority groups from juries, only one requires government initiative. Section 243 of the Criminal Code making it a crime to exclude jurors on account of race or color has never been used in the twentieth century. Nor does it seem the most realistic remedy without the wholesale jury reform that would be necessary to get convictions.

The other two remedies against segregated juries require litigant initiative. The most familiar and often used is the challenge to the grand or petit jury by a defendant in a criminal case because of the systematic exclusion of members of his race. Although the litigant's interest in the criminal trial situation is great enough to insure this kind of challenge today, the Civil Rights Commission has pointed out that "it is a case-by-case method that can have only a remote effect upon the over-all problem" of segregated juries. (Justice, p. 100 (1961).)

The third and least used method is a suit under 42 U.S.C. 1983, which allows an excluded minority to seek injunctive relief from the Federal District Court. The low self-interest inherent in such a suit when coupled with the court and attorney costs probably accounts for the infrequent use of Sec. 1983 in this connection; there is only one reported case.

Even if the three existing remedies are improved, new approaches must be tried to insure systematic reform. This memorandum suggests a number of methods for consideration. Although they are widely varied and far from equally likely to be enacted into law, they have in common the introduction of an approach scaled at the system of racially segregated juries instead of at the particular case.

II. Fair Federal Juries

Fair jury selection has been a matter of national policy since June, 1948, when the Federal jury law was reformed. Yet the practice of excluding Negroes from Southern juries continues unreformed. Even Federal courts use selection methods that lend themselves to manipulation, including the gathering of names from state jury lists and from stalwart figures in the community.

The chasm between policy and practice does not, however, flow from an equivocal or unclear statute; 28 U.S.C. §1861 prescribes:

> "Any citizen of the United States who has attained the age of twenty-one years and who has resided for a period of one year within the judicial district, is competent to serve as a grand or petit juror unless—

(1) He has been convicted in a State of Federal court of record of a crime punishable by imprisonment for more than one year and his civil rights have not been restored by pardon or amnesty.

(2) He is unable to read, write, speak, and understand the English language.

(3) He is incapable, by reason of mental or physical infirmities to render efficient jury service. As amended Sept. 9, 1957, Pub. L. 85-315, Part V, §152, 71 Stat. 638."

Nor can the failure to implement clear statutory policy be assigned to a failure to keep current the specifics of what constitutes fairness in jury selection. Among the recommendations of the Judicial Conference in September, 1960 are these three rather unexceptionable suggestions:

"I. In order that grand and petit jurors who serve in United States district courts may be truly representative of the community, the sources from which they are selected should include all economic and social groups of the community. The jury list should represent as high a degree of intelligence, morality, integrity, and common sense as possible.

"II. The choice of specific sources from which names of prospective jurors are selected must be entrusted to the clerk and jury commissioner, acting under the direction of the district judge, but should be controlled by the following considerations: (1) the sources should be coordinated to include all groups in the community; (2) economic and social status including race and color should be considered for the sole purpose of preventing discrimination or quota selection; (3) women are now eligible by law for jury service in federal courts and they should be selected and called to serve without discrimination on account of sex; (4) political affiliation should be ignored; (5) generally speaking, unsolicited requests of persons who seek to have their names placed upon jury lists should be denied and unsolicited recommendations of names should not be recognized; and, (6) in determining the parts of the district from which jurors are to be drawn, the courts should bear in mind the desirability of conserving the time of jurors and preventing exorbitant travel expense to the government.

> "III. The statutory requirement that federal courts must observe the qualifications and exemptions prescribed for jurors in the state courts has been abandoned, and jurors should now be called without regard to state qualifications."

With all of the effort of the Judicial Conference to coax the adoption of uniform standards where matters of common fairness are concerned, former Assistant Attorney General Burke Marshall reported this year that: "A Justice Department survey in 1961 showed that 92 Federal district courts had 92 different systems of selecting juries." The key then to a fair federal jury system lies in a more rigorous standardizing of policy throughout the several districts and a more conscientious policing of those standards.

Only the enactment of regulations pursuant to Sec. 1861 can assure fair standards throughout the country in the selection of federal juries. Ironically, although the Judicial Conference has proposed uniform standards and statutes of ever greater specificity, it took the position in its 1960 Report that: "It still does not seem feasible or desirable to draft detailed regulations to cover the preparation of jury lists throughout the United States, considering the great diversity of local economic and social conditions found in the several districts." (Pp. 25-6.) Yet there is no evidence from the Committee's report of any disadvantage that would come from uniform regulations. The indication is quite the opposite, as the Committee notes time and again the multiple failure to comply with Committee recommendations.

III. Enforcement Measures Applicable to Federal and State Courts

To avoid a piecemeal approach, to insure that the job is done most efficiently, and to effectively root out discrimination, a national approach to the problems raised by unfair jury selection is necessary. Indeed, a national approach seems to be particularly appropriate in the national system of courts, where prior attempts at uniformity such as the rules of civil and criminal procedure have long been heralded as promoting justice.

In the federal system, jury reform can be approached keeping in mind only the promotion of justice, of efficiency, and other considerations based on improving quality, since the power of Congress, the Supreme Court, and the Justice Department to affect the operation of the federal courts in their several aspects is clear. Some constitutional and comity problems are suggested in the reform of state jury selection practices; but the equal protection and due process clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment and the Sixth Amendment guarantee of an impartial jury trial provide the basis for the enactment of federal statutes to correct discriminatory abuses of the right to jury trial where it exists in the state courts. It is difficult to find affirmative power for laying down uniform qualifications for state juries, since the states have the power to enact constitutional qualifications and standards for juries in their own courts; but this does not leave the Federal Government without power to act to end discrimination in state courts any more than the government had to abide school segregation in state public schools when the states themselves failed to act. (See Title IV, Sec. 407 of the 1964 Civil Rights Act empowering the Attorney General to initiate suits on complaint to end school segregation.) Among the approaches noted below are some which can be used against discriminatory jury practices in the state as well as the federal courts.

A. National Jury Commission:

1. Federal Courts

The administrative process is particularly adapted to problems where some continuing oversight is desirable. Whether or not it is desirable to erect a special new structure to handle jury problems is a question to be considered. Certainly the complexity of the problem and the large number of courts--whether federal alone or both federal and state--are enough to justify a separate body. In addition, there are mounting political problems in the enforcement of civil rights laws that a separate commission might circumvent.

The federal government's regular law enforcing arm, the Justice Department, has not been particularly dynamic in initiating court proceedings or other remedies to end segregation. The rather generalized anguish among civil rights forces at the slow pace of Department-initiated school desegregation efforts is a recent example. So is the call for the Attorney General to dispense more federal voting registrars to the South. Justice Department-initiated suits to end segregated practices in assembling juries will be discussed as an alternative enforcement method later. Still it should be noted that the Department has not in the past carried out its statutory mandate in civil rights with the zeal of the kind Federal Regulatory Commission proposed here.

A National Jury Commission would have the advantage of exclusive concern with jury problems, unhampered by the large number of diverse statutes under which a government department works. The need for a commission with this exclusive focus is apparent from the work of the Judicial Conference Committee on the Operation of the Jury System. The Committee has no official status but operates as an advisory body only. Yet the problems it deals with are so fundamental and ongoing that the Committee has been retained by the Judicial Conference ever since 1943, although originally formed only as an ad hoc committee. Its scope has been similarly enlarged from the task of studying the methods of selecting jurors to include all matters relating to the operation of the jury system in the federal courts. Section 1861 was passed as a result of the Committee's 1943 study, and such uniformity as exists in federal jury selection and operation methods results mostly from the prestige that the Judicial Conference enjoys.

Nevertheless, the Conference acknowledged in the 1960 Report of its Jury Committee that despite obvious progress, "much remains to be done." A Committee that undertakes an investigation of the jury system once in seventeen years cannot do the extensive job of oversight that "remains to be done". A Committee without statutory significance cannot discourage old abuses that go as deep as racial segregation does in the South. A Committee without enforcement power cannot affect the extended reform that is necessary if Negroes are to serve on Southern juries in the near future.

A National Jury Commission would promulgate rules and regulations under an enabling statute and the present jury selection statute, Title 28, 1861-1871.

The jury commission would have its own independent staff, including its own lawyers, who could initiate suit to compel compliance with law or with commission rules and regulations. Such a commission might be expected to bring more suits and otherwise pursue enforcement more vigorously than the Attorney General, considering the commission's singular focus and accumulating expertise.

2. State Courts

The jury commission might have a state as well as a federal section. The state section would, of course, have a more limited jurisdiction and enforcement power than the national selection. For example, the state section could not affirmatively set general standards and enforce them, but it might well draw up and circulate a model jury selection law. More important, however, would be its function in bringing suit where it found unconstitutional jury practices in the states, such as exclusion on account of race. The state section would also have broad investigation and subpoena powers.

B. Suits initiated by the Attorney General:

Justice Department-initiated suits are especially popular in the 1964 Civil Rights Act. In one form or the other, the Attorney General may sue to secure voting rights, to enjoin discrimination in public accommodations, to desegregate public education or to stop discriminatory employment practices. These suits lend government money and experience to enforcement efforts and take the expense and sometimes the initiative and fear of intimidation off of the individual litigant.

Recently, however, the Attorney General and the President have been criticized from every corner of the civil rights movement for government laxity in enforcing the new civil rights laws. The Attorney General has come under particular attack for the results of his school desegregation efforts. Civil Rights groups have gathered large numbers of complaints from all over the South. The N.A.A.C.P. Legal Defense and Educational Fund recently published a particularly critical report. Further, the Attorney General has been loudly criticized for his cautious use of his discretion to send federal voting registrars into the South. Still the Attorney General route has the advantage of having already been sanctioned into law in prior acts and must be considered as a serious alternative approach.

Title III of the 1964 Civil Rights Act authorizing suits to desegregate public facilities might be a model for a provision to desegregate juries. Some additional features are proposed: That in addition to moving on receipt of a complaint, the Attorney General be able to initiate investigation and complaints on his own. This addition seems appropriate because Justice Department lawyers are in and out of courts, and of their own knowledge might well know or hear of discriminatory jury practices. The Attorney General should be empowered to move against segregated jury patterns in state as well as federal courts. In addition, he should be able to act without investigating the need of the litigant or the interest of other groups in the case--both of which necessitate delays not well founded in light of the national interest in more rapid integration. A proposed statute might read:

(a) Whenever the Attorney General receives a complaint in writing signed by an individual to the effect that he is being deprived of his right to the equal protection of the laws,on account of his race, color, religion,or national origin, by being denied an equal opportunity to serve on a jury in a state or federal court, or whenever the Attorney General otherwise reasonably believes an unfair pattern of jury selection is being used in a state or federal court, and that the institution of an action will materially further the orderly progress of desegregation of juries, the Attorney General is authorized to institute for or in the name of the United States a civil action in any appropriate district court of the United States against such parties and for such relief as may be appropriate, and such court shall have and shall exercise jurisdiction of proceedings instituted pursuant to this section. The Attorney General may implead as defendants such additional parties as are or become necessary to the grant of effective relief hereunder.

(b) In any action or proceeding under this title the United States shall be liable for costs, including a reasonable attorney's fee, the same as a private person.

(c) Nothing in this title shall affect adversely the right of any person to sue for or obtain relief in any court against discrimination in any facility covered by this title.

C. CORE Plan for federal jury registrars analogous to the present federal voting registrars.

Carl Rachlin, the General Counsel for CORE, has gotten a good response from Leadership Conference members to his proposal for federal jury registrars. There is presently no legal memorandum available; but a jury registrar statute would work like the present voting registrar statute. Carl Rachlin says that Assistant Attorney General John Doar likes the idea and presumably will air it among Justice Department officials presently working on a jury selection law.

Applied to jury selection, the proposal would mean that federal registrars would be empowered to place on federal, state and county jury rolls all those eligible to serve. As with the Voting Rights Act, a jury law would not preempt state jurisdiction but would merely suspend certain juror qualifications for such time as they might be used to violate constitutional rights. We might do well to suggest that in order to avoid exclusive reliance on the Attorney General, the federal courts might also be empowered to send in juror registrars, or a National Jury Commission might do so.

D. Supervision by law by the United States Supreme Court or Judicial Conference.

An alternative way of assuring surveillance of the jury system in the federal courts is through the Supreme Court in the same way as the Court now promulgates federal rules of procedure. Or the Judicial Conference Committee on the Operation of the Jury System might be given official standing to do the job. The disadvantage of using either of these bodies is the attendance to detail that is required because of the number of courts and the statistical problems that are raised. A staff might well attend to details with the necessary competence, however, leaving either judicial body as the ultimate decision-maker. In any case, only the federal courts would be covered.

IV. The Random Sample Method as Applied to Juror Selection.

Charles Morgan has proposed and in the minds of the public, the ACLU has become identified with a random sample approach to the selection of jurors. That technique, according to an expert, John F. Kraft of New York City, is practical; can be used without the aid of computer machines, technical equipment or technical know-how; can be taught to a person of ordinary intelligence once the system is set up; can be set up by a Bureau of Labor Statistics, a Chamber of Commerce, or comparable public and private organizations found in every state; and is the only method in general use that can obtain the "truly representative"cross section of an entire community recommended by the Judicial Conference Committee on the Operation of the Jury System. No known list or combination of lists can produce a representative cross section of a population in Mr. Kraft's expert opinion.

Mr. Kraft described the system and evaluated its potential in jury selection in his deposition as follows:

Q. Can you briefly describe the method by which you undertake a poll ....?

A. ... [w]e could decide that 100 interviewing points at which ten interviews were to be done -- at each of which ten interviews were to be done, that is -- would produce an accurate cross section of the entire voting population.

We would then allocate those interviewing points of ten interviews each to counties within a state at random and proportionate to the size of those counties.

Now, if more than one point were to fall within a larger county, we would then allocate these points at random, proportionate to the size of population within the county.

At a given interviewing point, we would specify to an interviewer that he or she must begin at a given point -- that is, a given point which had previously been randomly selected -- and he would be directed to begin at the third household at the northeast corner, for instance, interviewing at every fifth household around the block or down the street or all along the rural route -- whichever was relevant to the local situation.

Q. What is the degree of accuracy with respect to the entire population with which you are concerned of the information which you obtain through investigation of randomly selected cross sections of the population?

A. The accuracy can vary, depending upon how intensively you sample a particular population or universe. That is to say, a national cross section of 2000 interviews on such a question as, "Would you vote for Johnson or Goldwater?" could be expected to produce an accurate prediction, so to speak, within 2 or 3 per cent.

This has been the kind of experience that Gallup has demonstrated during the last several presidential elections.

A more intensive sample, that is to say, sampling of one out of every ten people rather than one out of every ten million people, will of course, be much more accurate.

However, there is no magic in doubling, tripling or quintupling the sample size in the sense that accuracy does not increase in direct proportion to the increase in sample size.

Q. In your professional opinion and experience, Mr. Kraft, have you been satisfied that the results of random sampling techniques are, in fact, very accurately reflective of the particular kind of information which you may be seeking in a particular poll?

A. Not only are we satisfied but we have found, in hundreds of studies, that the sampling techniques I have been describing here are really the only way to do a proper job of producing the kind of cross section that is needed in one situation or another.

Q. I take it that, given these scientific random sampling techniques, it is possible to investigate any particular cross section of the population which would be relevant to the study you are conducting?

A. Yes.

Q. So you would describe, then, the random sampling technique as a precise and scientific method for obtaining information of a great variety of sorts?

A. It's indeed precise, within some of the limits I have suggested -- the one or 2 or 3 per cent error -- and it's scientific because it removes the human element from deciding whom to interview or what the universe may be. It is impersonal.

Q. If I put to you an example of this kind: Let us assume there is a county in the State of Alabama which has a population of approximately 15,000, which consists of a Negro population of approximately 12,500 and a white population of 3000, and assume further that, as in any representative community, there is not only the description of population by race, but also by age, education and economic status. And if I were to ask you whether it would be possible to apply random sampling techniques in order to obtain a very accurate cross section of this particular community, in order to assure that an accurate cross section of the community were available for service on juries, would the techniques you have described be applicable to this problem?

A. There is no reason why they could not or would not be.

* * * * * * * * * *

Q. Do you mean that there isn't any question that it could be?

A. I mean there is no question that it could be done.

* * * * * * * * * *

Q. In other words, the technique is transferrable to this particular situation?

A. Not only that, but it would be easier than some of the problems I have described to you earlier.

* * * * * * * * * *

Q. Why do you say that?

A. The information on the population of a county in Alabama is much more complete in terms of sex, age, economic level, race, average rental and other kinds of information than it is for any other universe or kind of population I have discussed before.

There is really no census material on who used Pyrex. There is inadequate information on who owns new Ramblers, and there is not much information on who switched from Marboros to L & Ms last week.

Q. But the kind of characteristics which I have described are -- I assume what you are saying is that they are readily identifiable?

A. That is right.

Q. Could you describe how the random sampling technique could be adapted to the selection within Lowndes County, for example, of a cross-sectional list of prospective jurors?

A. I would assume that the kind of county you are talking about, as would be true of any other county, would have the same Bureau of the Census information on enumeration districts, census tract or block statistics as any census would.

* * * * * * * * * *

Q. You are referring, I assume, to the Federal decennial census.

A. That's right. And in using this information, you should select at random and impartially a relevant number of enumeration districts which would be designed to provide the number of jurors which might be needed.

For example, in that county you might pick forty blocks, or forty enumeration districts, depending upon the characteristics of the county, and within each of those randomly selected blocks do what in effect would be a census of every fifth household in those blocks, and within those households make a random selection of citizens eligible to serve on juries -- that is to say, men and women over 21, upper income and lower income people, whites and Negroes, and so on.

Q. And it wouldn't affect your judgment, would it, if, as in Alabama, women are restricted from jury service? Your technique would be adapted to that fact, would it not?

A. Well, there would be two approaches we would consider. We could automatically eliminate, again, in scientific fashion, the women from such a sampling or, on the other hand, they could be included in a sampling, which would necessarily be a larger sampling, in anticipation of most of these women expressing a disinclination to serve on a jury.

Q. Would it be very difficult to set up the mechanics of operating a jury selection system on a random sampling basis?

A. I assume you mean from the point of view of a local --

* * * * * * * * * *

Q. Could a local resident of Lowndes County, of common intelligence and average education, do whatever would be necessary in order to set up and administer such a jury selection system?

A. Yes, but with this qualification:

The sampling approach I have been talking about would have to be summarized for that local person to put into action.

The summarization could be simple and quite straightforward, perhaps adding up to a page or two or three of directions specifying such things as, "Go to the corner of Maple and Ash Streets and get the names of the people in every third household," as I have described the procedure earlier.

* * * * * * * * * *

Q. So this initial preparation would have to be done by experts, but it could be implemented with easily-understood instructions?

A. Yes, but the experts would not have to take a great deal of time to set up such a system.

For someone trained in the business of sample selection, it would be a relatively straightforward and simple operation provided the kind of census material I have talked about were made available.

It could be done, for example, I am sure, by people in the Bureau of Labor Statistics within a state, or a Chamber of Commerce, or comparable organizations with census material available.

Q. Do you know of any other system of selection which might achieve the same accurate cross-sectional results in the jury selection process as the random sampling technique you have described?

A. No. There is none that we have heard of and none that we have been able to discover.

* * * * * * * * * *

Q. As you no doubt know, there are a variety of selection techniques used in drawing jurors around the country, not including the random sampling techniques but rather using such devices as telephone directories or property tax rolls or gas and electric company records or voting records.

Do you have an opinion about the cross-sectional accuracies of those kinds of lists?

A. Yes. And let me take up a couple of them.

You mentioned telephone listings. In some sections of the country, for example in New York City, there are as many as 400,000 unlisted telephones, so that any survey sample is going to omit representation of the kinds of people who do not want their telephones listed in New York City.

For quite different reasons, there are many unlisted telephone numbers in a city like Houston.

Secondly, where telephones are concerned, this is an expense, so that resorting to telephone listings would automatically exclude from any sound sampling procedure those people who are too poor, or consider themselves to be too poor, to have a telephone in the home.

In other words, you would have a bias in the direction of upper income people by going to the telephone listings in this situation.

Taking the example of the utilities, in many rural areas there are a great many people who still rely on coal, kerosene, candlelight and just plain daylight, and resorting to such lists would, again, automatically exclude people who were too poor, or too far down the economic ladder, to afford utility service.

You mentioned voter lists. There are wild variations in this area because a great many people in a great many counties are unregistered, or just do not vote or, in fact, in counties or states where there is a large transient population, inevitably an effort to use voting lists may omit as many as 15 to 25 per cent of the resident population.

You also mentioned using property tax rolls. Again, this strikes against lower income people, whether they be people with large families, people who are sporadically employed, or what have you.

Q. Is there any kind of list, except census material, which can be used to get a representative cross-section of a given population?

A. Not if you are undertaking to do a survey, for example, for a political client, or for a client who has a product which is in general use throughout a county, a state or a region.

* * * * * * * * * *

Q. In your opinion, Mr. Kraft, what would be the cross-sectional accuracy of a list of jurors selected by jury commissioners, for example, on the basis of their personal acquaintances or by their writing large numbers of letters to different groups of people, or even to individuals within a community?

A. Well, if they were to communicate with their friends and acquaintances, they just conceivably might be reproducing a cross-section of their friends and acquaintances, but they certainly wouldn't be reproducing a cross-section of a total population in an area because it is an incredibly rare person who has an acquaintanceship with a representative cross-section of an entire population.

With regard to writing letters to large numbers of people, first we have to face the problem of whether or not mail delivery is available to all of the people in the population, whether addresses are correct and whether in fact his signature will spur or discourage response to his letter.

So the two examples you ask about seem to me to insure unrepresentativeness, quite the opposite from a representative cross-section.

Q. In the random sampling selection technique of jurors which you have described, is there any room whatsoever for the exercise of subjective discretion in the selection of jurors by the persons administering the selection process?

That is to say, do the personal preferences of the person administering this random sample jury selection technique enter into the selection process at all?

A. Not the process we have been describing, not in any way.

Let me explain it this way: The whole focus of our approach is to remove human discretion from scientific sampling, to remove the possibility of bias in selecting the sample, and the kind of sample selection I have been describing here is one which will effectively do that, and I believe it is really the only way to insure selecting a random representative cross-section of a given population and be totally unbiased.

* * * * * * * * *

Q. In conclusion, do you know of any system other than the random sampling system based upon Federal census material that can produce the same highly accurate cross-section of a population?

A. There would be no other material available as of right now to produce a better approach.

* * * * * * * * *

The courts have in the past condoned varied kinds of lists where defendants have tried to reverse their convictions on grounds of exclusion of their race from juries. Taxable property lists (Brown v. Allen, 344 U.S. 443, 474 fn 109 (1953) and voter registration lists (Florida, Mississippi, and South Carolina use such lists) have been sanctioned. While the exclusion that results from the use of such lists does not involve a specific intent to exclude those who do not belong to the group listed, the exclusion is no less systematic. Legislation prescribing the use of a random sample method would eliminate the wholesale systematic exclusion that results. Moreover, if the expert testimony is accepted, state as well as federal courts would have to use the random sample method to avoid unconstitutional systematic exclusion.

V. Critique of Selected Judicial Conference Recommendations on Jury Selection in the Federal Courts

The well-publicized call for federal legislation to protect civil rights workers cannot result in an improved quality of Southern justice if federal jury selection methods leave room for racially selected juries of the kind who now unfairly fail to convict in the state courts. The kind and degree of surveillance that juries in federal courts need is indicated by the 151-page Report of the Judicial Conference Committee on the Operation of the Jury System, issued in 1960. This report used as its model the so-called Knox Report on jury selection methods, the first study of federal juries, issued in 1942. Although the 1960 Report enlarged on its 1942 predecessor by covering the entire jury system, the bulk of the report dealt with the troublesome area of jury selection. Both studies compiled statistics with the help of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts. Personal interviews and field investigations supplemented questionnaires.

The Committee has through its studies and its prestige secured improved legislation. Although the Judicial Conference Committee is a standing committee to which legislation respecting juries is referred, it is, after all, a committee of judges, and time pressures have undoubtedly been responsible for its failure to publish more than two studies in 17 years. This committee is, however, the only body presently keeping any kind of coordinated surveillance over the jury operations in the federal courts.

The following list and critique of relevant recommendations from the Conference Committee study has three purposes. In the first place, the Committee recommendations give the best concise idea of the present state of jury selection methods in the federal courts. Second, while many of the recommendations would obviously improve jury selection from the viewpoint of fiarness, many would simply sustain a system that has lent itself to racial discrimination and ought to be criticized as such. Finally, since the federal courts are at bottom a unit, they are more easily reformed at the national level, thereby affording the Union an opportunity to suggest ways to avoid discriminatory practices.

1. The Committee comes out against uniform and detailed regulations "to cover the preparation of jury lists throughout the country", on grounds of the "great diversity" within the districts. Uniform regulations to insure fairness would not, however, deny the individuality of conditions in the districts. Only those matters would be subject to uniform regulation which relate to general fairness, a standard which ought not to differ from district to district.

2. The scope and method of distribution of the questionnaire the Committee would leave to the local clerk and jury commissioner, because, for example, a more lengthy questionnaire might be necessary where personal interviews are impossible. This clearly leaves too much discretion to jury officials and assures highly varied standards for jury service in the districts.

3. The Committee recommends omitting questions that would indicate race, religion, political beliefs, ownership of property, outstanding judgments and their nature, prior rejection for cause from jury service, and participation in private suits. These questions are so highly prejudicial that their omission should be a matter of uniform regulation.

4. The Committee confirms its 1942 recommendation that "the problem of geographical representation . . . is one for the unfettered discretion of each court." (Emphasis added) This recommendation is disastrous when it is considered that whole counties whose population is predominantely Negro may be thus easily excluded on the ground, for example, of the expense that the district would incur in having to pay mileage. The random sample method is cut out to deal with the problem of geographical distribution.

5. The Committee condones the three principal methods by which the names of jurors are secured, namely, "key-men" or organizations, various public lists such as "public directories, tax rolls, or voter lists (the three principal lists used in most districts); and "the clerks or jury commissioners or recommendations of their friends or acquaintances". Even if great care is used, as the Committee recommends, none of these methods or combination of methods can yield representative juror lists. All have been specifically condemned as unfair by John Kraft, an expert on the random sample method.

6. State jury lists are not to be used in the view of the Committee, a recommendation that follows present law inasmuch as state exemptions are no longer recognized in federal courts. (See Sec. 1861 as amended September 9, 1957, Pub. L. ¶5-315, Part V, ¶152, 71 Stat. 638.) The Committee found, however, that state lists are still being used in at least 16 districts, and in 3, only state lists are used. The Committee's recommendation against the use of state jury lists is a particularly apt example of one that should be a matter of uniform regulation pursuant to Sec. 1861, especially given the present incidence of non-compliance.

7. The Committee disapproves the present practice of interviewing some groups but not others. If interviews are used, clearly all prospective jurors should be subject to them,or discrimination cannot be avoided.

8. The Committee's recommendation that the final choice of the means of selecting jurors rest with district judges does not of itself insure fair selection. District judges are notoriously busy and cannot be expected to always give the requisite attention to juror selection. Ultimate supervision by the district judge is desirable, but his surveillance cannot realistically be a catch-all to insure fairness.

9. A $10 fee instead of the present $7 fee for juror service is recommended by the Committee. Some unions have bargained for a formula that requires employers to pay the difference between the jury fee and the juror's wage at his regular occupation. This formula would go far toward insuring better cross-sectional representation on juries, especially since many people cannot afford even short periods of jury service and will not be able to do so even if the proposed $10 rate is enacted into law.

10. Although the committee does not comment, long jury service periods for each juror, such as six-week intervals, do not seem compatible with encouraging the greatest willingness to serve, especially at the present rate of pay for jurors. With shorter jury periods, more people would find it possible to serve, thus encouraging fairer representation on juries. Considering that each federal court usually covers an entire section of a state or, in some instances, an entire state, the federal courts can probably afford to allow shorter periods of service because of the large numbers of jurors potentially available to them. A two-week limit seems reasonable.

11. Finding that entire groups have been excused from jury service for hardship without official court order, the Committee recommends that greater care be used in excusing groups and that such excuses be by formal written court order only.

12. The Committee recommends that voir dire examination of jurors be done by the judge in order to save time in those districts where it is done in the judge's presence. The voir dire examination has been subject to abuse, where, for example, all Negroes are challenged preemptorily. Great diversity on voir dire is found in the districts, with 51 having judges doing all of the voir dire, 22 having both judge and counsel on voir dire, 12 having counsel only, one having the judge and occasionally a deputy clerk, and one having the judge in criminal cases and counsel in civil cases. Clearly the safest way to avoid abuse of voir dire is to have the judge conduct it with the aid of counsel. If differing conditions, work loads, and time factors make judge participation impossible in the districts, judges should nevertheless be available to rule when any counsel objects that voir dire is not being used for its constitutional purpose of insuring an "impartial jury".

(2) He is unable to read, write, speak, and understand the English language.

(3) He is incapable, by reason of mental or physical infirmities to render efficient jury service. As amended Sept. 9, 1957, Pub. L. 85-315, Part V, § 152, 71 Stat. 638.

§1862. EXEMPTIONS

The following persons shall be exempt from jury service:

(1) Members in active service in the armed forces of the United States.

(2) Members of the Fire or Police departments of any State, District, Territory, Possession or subdivision thereof.

§1863. EXCLUSION OR EXCUSE FROM SERVICE

(a) A district judge for good cause may excuse or exclude from jury service any person called as a juror.

(b) Any class or group of persons may, for the public interest, be excluded from the jury panel or excused from service as jurors by order of the district judge based on a finding that such jury service would entail undue hardship, extreme inconvenience or serious obstruction or delay in the fair and impartial administration of justice.

(c) No citizen shall be excluded from service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States on account of race or color. June 25, 1948, c. 646, 62 Stat. 952.

The names of grand and petit jurors shall be publicly drawn from a box containing the names of not less than three hundred qualified persons at the time of each drawing.

The jury box shall from time to time be refilled by the clerk of court, or his deputy, and a jury commissioner, appointed by the court.

Such jury commissioner shall be a citizen of good standing, residing in the district and a well known member of the principal political party in the district, opposing that to which the clerk, or his deputy then acting, may belong. He shall receive $5 per day for each day necessarily employed in the performance of his duties.

The jury commissioner and the clerk, or his deputy, shall alternately place one name in the jury box without reference to party affiliations, until the box shall contain at least 300 names or such larger number as the court determines.

To this end the court may direct the maintenance of separate jury boxes for some or all of the places for holding court in the district and may appoint a jury commissioner for each such place.

(b) Grand or petit jurors summoned for service at one place for holding court in a district may, if the public convenience so requires and the jurors will not be unduly burdened thereby, be directed to serve at another place in the same district. June 25, 1948, c. 646, 62 Stat. 952.

§1866. SPECIAL PETIT JURIES; TALESMEN FROM BYSTANDERS

(a) Whenever sufficient petit jurors are not available, the court may require the United States marshal to summon a sufficient number of talesmen from the bystanders.

(b) When a special jury is ordered by a district court, it shall be returned by the marshal in the same manner and form as is required in such case by the law of the State in which such district court sits. June 25, 1948, c. 646, 62 Stat. 952, amended May 24, 1949, c. 139, §96, 63 Stat. 103.

§1870. CHALLENGES

In civil cases, each party shall be entitled to three peremptory challenges. Several defendants or several plaintiffs may be considered as a single party for the purposes of making challanges, or the court may allow additional peremptory challenges and permit them to be exercised separately or jointly.

All challenges for cause or favor, whether to the array or panel or to individual jurors, shall be determined by the court. As amended Sept. 16, 1959, Pub. L. 86-282, 73 Stat. 565.

Grand and petit jurors in district courts or before United States commissioners shall receive the following fees, except as otherwise expressly provided by law:

For actual attendance at the place of trial or hearing and for the time necessarily occupied in going to and from such place at the beginning and end of such service or at any time during the same, $7 per day, except that any juror required to attend more than thirty days in hearing one case may be paid in the discretion and upon the certification of the trial judge a per diem fee not exceeding $10 for each day in excess of thirty days he is required to hear such case.

For the distance necessarily traveled to and from a juror's residence by the shortest practicable route in going to and returning from the place of service at the beginning and at the end of the term of service and for all additional necessary daily transportation expense, 10 cents per mile except that if daily travel appears impracticable, subsistence of $7 per day shall be allowed. Whenever in any case the jury is ordered to be kept together and not to separate, the cost of subsistence during such period shall be paid by the United States marshall upon the order of the court in lieu of the foregoing subsistence allowance..

Jury fees and travel and subsistence allowances provided by this section shall be paid by the United States marshal on the certificate of the clerk of the court, and in the case of jury fees in excess of $7 per diem, when allowed as hereinabove provided, on the certificate of the trial judge. 1864. Jury commission; duties, compensation, and methods of selecting and drawing jurors.

§1864. Jury commission; duties, compensation, and methods of selecting and drawing jurors.

(a) APPOINTMENT. - A jury commission shall be established in each judicial district, consisting of the clerk of the court and one or more jury commissioners, appointed by the district court. The jury commissioner shall be a citizen of the United States of good character residing in the district of appointment who, at the time of his appointment, shall not be a member of the same race, sex, political party, or religious affiliation as the clerk of the court or a duly qualified deputy clerk acting for the clerk. If more than one jury commissioner is appointed, each may be designated to serve in one or more of the places where court is held, and the clerk and the jury commissioner so designated shall constitute the jury commission for that part of the district. In the event that a jury commissioner is unable for any reason to perform his duties, another jury commissioner may be appointed, as provided herein, to act in his place until he is able to resume his duties.

Jury commissioners shall be appointed to serve on a full-time basis.

(b) DUTIES. - In the performance of all its duties the jury commission shall act under the direction and supervision of the chief judge of the district.

The sources of names and the methods to be used by the jury commission in selecting the names of persons who may be called for grand or petit jury service shall be:

(1) The jury commission shall ascertain the characteristics of the population in the district or part of the district for which it is constituted. The characteristics of the population shall be derived from the decenniel report of the Bureau of the Census, the compilation of which next preceded the selection of names.

(2) The jury commission shall then proceed by canvass utilizing random selection techniques approved by the Judicial Conference of the United States to select the names of persons who may be called for grand or petit jury service.

(3) Prior to placing the names of qualified persons in the jury box, wheel or similar device the jury commission shall ascertain that the list is, in fact, a cross-section of the population of the district or part of the district for which the jury commission is constituted. The jury commission shall make the finding that the list represents a cross-section of the population by selecting, at random and systematically a sampling of the list of names of persons selected determining their race, sex, political and religious affiliation and economic and social status by canvass and by additional means, if any, approved by the Judicial Conference of the United States. The statistical findings of the jury commission shall be announced by the Chief Judge of the district in open court.

(4) The procedures employed by the jury commission in selecting the names of qualified persons to be placed in the jury box, wheel, or similar device, shall not systematically or deliberately exclude any group from the jury panel on account of race, sex, political, or religious affiliation, or economic or social status.

(5) In determining whether persons are qualified as jurors under section 1861 of this title, the jury commission shall use questionnaires.

The names of jurors shall be publicly drawn by chance from a jury box, wheel, or similar device, which contains at the commencement of each drawing the names of not less than three hundred qualified persons selected by the jury commission in accordance with the provisions of this subsection.

The jury commission shall keep records of the names of persons placed in the jury box, wheel, or similar device, the questionnaires returned by said persons, the names of the persons who are selected for jury service, the dates of service, and all other records pertaining to the selection of the names for a period of not less than ten years. With the approval of the chief judge, the jury commission may designate deputy clerks and other employees in the office of the clerk of the court to assist the commission in the performance of its duties and to perform under its direction such of the detailed duties of the commission as in the opinion of the chief judge can be assigned to them.

(c) COMPENSATION. - Each jury commissioner shall receive a salary to be fixed from time to time by the Judicial Conference of the United States at a rate which in the opinion of the Judicial Conference corresponds to that provided by the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, for positions in the executive branch with comparable responsibilities.

Each jury commissioner shall receive his traveling and subsistence expenses within the limitations prescribed for clerks of district courts while absent from his designated post of duty on official business.

(d) Any of the powers or duties conferred upon the chief judge under this section may be delegated by him to another judge of the district: Provided, however, That where part of a district by agreement or order of court is assigned to one particular judge and he customarily holds court there, as to such part of the district he shall perform the functions and fulfill the duties conferred upon the chief judge in this section.

(e) This section shall not apply to the District of Columbia.

(a) Grand and petit jurors shall from time to time be selected from such parts of the district as the court directs so as to be most favorable to an impartial trial, and not to incur unnecessary expense or unduly burden the citizens of any part of the district with jury service. To this end the court may direct the maintenance of separate jury boxes for some or all of the places for holding court in the district.

(b) Grand or petit jurors summoned for service at one place for holding court in a district may, if the public convenience so requires and the jurors will not be unduly burdened thereby, be directed to serve at another place in the same district.

Dear Miss McWilliams:

Enclosed you will find a press release issued by CORE shortly after the tragic assassination of President Kennedy. I believe that this release and statement from Mr. Farmer accurately reflects the views of the entire CORE organization.

Mr. Farmer's position was not as indicated in your letter of September 23. As you know, the press is often not too accurate. We have taken the position from the beginning that the murder of the four youngsters in Birmingham was the responsibility of Governor Wallace and the social system of the South.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Farmer:

The New York Times of this day gives a different interpretation of the statements attributed to you as of yesterday at Foley Square. If in their report as of this day, you are reported correctly, then there is variance in the report over the radio and todays paper.

Firstly, I do not share your condemnation of the President, in that you were reported as having said, he bore responsibility for the murder of our youngsters in Birmingham. I think the blame is where all decent people has put it, on Wallace, and the social structure of this nation. Less we as Negroes forget, our President has done more for the Negroes than any other President in history- I would not include Lincoln in this estimation. I will state that Eisenhower did absolutely nothing to further the cause of the Negro, nor did he support the Supreme Court's Decision of 1954. Had he done so, many of us firmly believe that the situation would not be as diastrous as it is at this time. Less we Negroes forget, the President was born in this situation as you and I was, and I firmly believe that he is trying his damdest to remedy the situa - tion. He, nor you can solve it- there is no absolutism, this you know. I am not going to be the one to rub President's nose in manure. I resent anyone who does so, or try to do so.

As to the coming election, and your statement that the President, if he does nothing would be removed. I as a Negro, cannot say he has done nothing, nor do I believe that troops should be sent to Birmingham. I wonder aloud if you have counted the cost of removing someone sympathetic to our cause, and getting a Goldwater, a racist, or Rockefeller, the man of high morals, or have the election thrown in the House of Representatives where Southern bigots would have a field day. You can be sure that the Republican Party, now courting and wooing the Southern bigots, both Republicans and Democrats, the "Lily White" trend would continue on. I hold no brief for either Party in the South. I am a Southerner, and the worst treatment ever afforded me was from my home State of Virginia, Norfolk, ,to be exact.

I have supported CORE since its inception-many of their activities I have not gone along with, but I cannot continue to support CORE, if you are going to make state- ments attributed to you on radio, also in the NY Times. Perhaps you may feel that I do not matter, but I do Mr. Farmer. I have worked religiously for our casuse, and know what it is to pay Poll Taxes in a cubby hole, to have had epithets thrown at my parents, and me. Have not begun to suffer as you have-there is no comparison.

Let me concede that President Kennedy has not done enough, but I cannot go along with this bloody guilt accusation. Wallace is the Pontius Pilate, and with every effort of the President, he cannot resolve this problem alone, and the Republicans have been VERY VERY silent.

As for Friday at Town Hall, when we as Negroes curry the favor of types as those who almost caused a shouting meeting, I was under the impression we came to memoralize the murder of these youngsters, and as a Negro myself, I was sad for Mrs. McNair and her husband- I expected a memorial the type of the one held for Mrs. Roosevelt- I did not expect rabble rousing, the clapping of hands and the shouting as was heard.

In conclusion, let me please ask that we bend every effort to pass the President's Civil Rights Bill, Mrs. Murphy's clause included. As you know Mr. Farmer, the Goldwaters and the Dirksens are trying to beat the hell out of the President for every attempt he has made towards a better economy, which would benefit us, towards cutting taxes, which would benefit us. From here on in, I expect the Southerners to try every trick in the trade to defeat every bill he has proposed. I am not forgetting the Northern Conservative Republicans.

I thank you for listening, and may I reiterate I cannot support CORE, if you are going to make statements as you did Sunday. Perhaps as I aforementioned, I do not matter to you.

Very truly yours,

P. McWilliams

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

CORE Suspends Action Till Thanksgiving

New York, N.Y., Nov. 27: In respect for the late President Kennedy, CORE advised all its affiliates across the country to suspend action from the day of the assassination until Thanksgiving.

The major action to be cancelled was a March on Levittown (Maryland) in which CORE demonstrators from the northeast area were to protest the segregation policy of William Levitt at his newest, giant housing project.. The demonstration, set for November 23, the day after the assassination, has been rescheduled for December 7.

While advising the groups of the temporary suspension of activity, CORE National Director James Farmer urged them to "rededicate themselves to nonviolence." and to "throughout the Christmas month initiate special workshops stressing the practice of nonviolence in all phases of activity."

His statement pointed out" "The sad events of the past weekend are at least in part the result of the climate of hatred and violence generated throughout the southland by the Barnett's, the Wallace's and the ex-general Walker's. The violence recently encountered in Dallas by Adlai Stevenson had prompted him to caution President Kennedy against going there. The ruthless act of violence against the President was compounded by the murder of the alleged assassin."

In a public statement issued on November 22, Farmer said:

> "The assassination of the President is a tragedy not only for his family but for all Americans. We share Mrs. Kennedy's grief and anguish. We believe that this assassination was the result of the President's efforts to bring about a more democratic America and we hope that this nation will rededicate itself to those ideals of his. Our prayers go out to Lyndon Johnson in the difficult days ahead."

RACISM WITHIN ORGANIZED LABOR: A REPORT OF FIVE YEARS OF THE AFL-CIO 1955 — 1960

This is a staff report reviewing conditions previously cited by the NAACP, but summarized here at the end of five years of the merged AFL-CIO. Delivered by Herbert Hill NAACP Labor Secretary at the Association's Annual Meeting, January 3, 1961, New York City.

LABOR DEPARTMENT

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE
20 West 40th Street New York 18, N.Y.

The elimination of racism within trade unions was one of the major goals for organized labor announced at the merger convention of the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations in December, 1955. This was welcomed by many civil rights agencies and especially by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People which offered its full support to the labor movement.

Today, five years after the AFL-CIO merger, the national labor organization has failed to eliminate the broad pattern of racial discrimination and segregation in many important affiliated unions. Trade union activity in the civil rights field since the merger has not been marked by a systematic and coordinated effort by the national labor federation to eliminate discrimination and segregation within local unions. This is especially true of the craft unions in the building and construction trades where the traditional anti-Negro practices basically remain in effect.

Efforts to eliminate discriminatory practices within trade unions have been piecemeal and inadequate and usually the result of protest by civil rights agencies acting on behalf of Negro workers. The National AFL-CIO has repeatedly refused to take action on its own initiative. In too many cases years have elapsed between the filing of a complaint by an aggrieved worker and acknowledgment and investigation by the Federation, if indeed there is any action at all.

Discriminatory racial practices by trade unions are not simply isolated or occasional expressions of local bias against colored workers, but rather, as the record indicates, a continuation of the institutionalized pattern of anti-Negro employment practices that is traditional with large sections of organized labor and industrial management.

The pattern of union responsibility for job discrimination against Negroes is not limited to any one area of the country or to some few industries or union jurisdictions but involves many unions in a wide variety of occupations in manufacturing industries, skilled crafts, railroads and maritime trades as for example, the Seafarers International Union which operates union-controlled hiring halls on Great Lakes ports such as Duluth, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland and Buffalo. As a systematic practice this union will dispatch only Negro workers for menial jobs as messmen in the galley departments of ships operating under S.I.U. collective bargaining agreements. Over the years Negro members of the Seafarers International Union have repeatedly protested this practice, but to no avail as the union continues discriminatory job assignments in its hiring halls.

On occasion one or two Negroes have been admitted into an all-white local union as token compliance with a state or municipal fair employment practice law as with the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers in Cleveland; the Bricklayers in Milwaukee and the Railway Clerks in Minneapolis, but this is essentially a limited and strategic adjustment to community pressure and represents very dubious "progress."

Certainly the token admission of a few Negroes into an electrical workers union in Cleveland can no more be regarded as integration than can the token admission of two or three Negro children into a southern public school. There are also many instances where unions have removed the "lily-white" exclusion clause from their constitutions as public relations gestures but continued to exclude Negroes from membership by tacit consent.

As long as union membership remains a condition of employment in the building trades, on the railroads and elsewhere and qualified Negroes are barred from union membership solely because of their color, then trade union discrimination is the decisive factor in determining whether Negro workers in a given industry shall have an opportunity to earn a living for themselves and their families. This is especially true in the construction industry where AFL-CIO building trades unions exercise a high degree of control over access to employment.

AFL-CIO affiliated unions are today guilty of discriminatory racial practices in four categories: outright exclusion of Negroes, segregated locals, separate racial seniority lines in collective bargaining agreements and exclusion of Negroes from apprenticeship training programs controlled by labor unions.

As for the Federation's Civil Rights Department, its performance would seem to indicate that its major function is to create a "liberal" public relations image rather than to attack the broad pattern of anti-Negro practices within affiliated unions. The Civil Rights Committee of the AFL-CIO is the only standing committee in the Federation whose chairman is not a member of the Federation's Executive Council and/or the president of an international union. The rigid protocol of the national labor federation indicates that such a person is not in a position to impose a policy upon an international or local union but must confine himself to issuing declarations and to exercising such persuasion as he can muster. More often than not, his efforts are fruitless.

ORGANIZED LABOR IN THE SOUTH

The threat of several local unions in the South to organize a Southern Federation of Labor has clearly not materialized, however, one is forced to note that the White Citizens Councils began taking control of some local AFL-CIO affiliates soon after the Supreme Court decision of 1954 in the school segregation cases. Because the national leadership of organized labor has made it a practice to avoid as much internal conflict on racial issues as possible, the Ku Klux Klan and White Citizens Council forces, especially in Alabama, have moved into many local unions and made them, in effect, virtual extensions of segregationist organizations.

As a result, Negro workers throughout the South are experiencing an acute sense of alienation and rejection from organized labor. This becomes increasingly evident in an analysis of Negro voting behavior in union certification elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board. Although it is not possible to get an official breakdown of election results by Board regions, election results are known and are discussed in union circles.

At the South Wire Company, Carrollton, Georgia, where several hundred workers were involved, the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Union recently lost an NLRB election by eight votes. It has been stated by the union organizers that the decisive vote was cast by the forty-five Negroes in the election who voted against the IBEW.

Early in 1960 an election was held in Aiken, South Carolina at the Savannah River Atomic Energy Project with seventeen unions of the Metal Trades Department of the AFL-CIO seeking certification by the NLRB as bargaining agent. Thirty-one hundred workers were involved. Six hundred of these were Negroes. It was stated by union organizers that the six hundred Negroes voted almost as a solid bloc against the union and the election was lost.

The active recruitment of trade union members for White Citizens Councils, Ku Klux Klan and other segregationist organizations accounts for much of the loss of influence that the AFL-CIO has suffered among Negro workers throughout the South. News of this activity has come not alone through word of mouth but frequently from newspaper advertising in local communities plainly to be seen by Negro workers themselves.

In a number of localities such as Savannah, Georgia, public notices have appeared stating that the Ku Klux Klan or the White Citizens Council will hold a meeting in a union hall. Newspapers have also printed reports and pictures of union officials speaking at such meetings and the point has not been lost on the Negro worker. Moreover, they are aware that the National AFL-CIO has permitted its civil rights declarations to be ignored by many affiliated unions.

The correction of this mutually damaging situation would seem to demand action directly by the AFL-CIO leadership and by the international unions involved. At the very least what is required is that AFL-CIO members and local affiliates not be active participants in segregationist attacks upon the Negro's struggle for basic citizenship rights.

SEGREGATED LOCAL UNIONS

The Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks which maintains many segregated local lodges in northern as well as southern cities is among the important international unions which maintain a broad national pattern of segregation. In the Brotherhood the existence of more than 150 segregated all-Negro locals with separate racial seniority rosters limits job mobility and violates the seniority rights of thousands of Negro union members.

This union has persisted in its racist practices despite repeated protests from Negro workers and community organizations. On April 30, 1957, the New York State Commission Against Discrimination ordered the merger of the "lily-white" George N. Harrison Lodge (783) and the all-Negro Friendship Lodge (6118). The white union refused to comply and the local lodges remain segregated to this day. Similar situations exist in Chicago where Negro workers are in segregated local lodge 6132 and in Tulsa, Oklahoma, where they are in local 6257. In East St. Louis and St. Louis there are 14 all-colored lodges and 14 all-white lodges which function through segregated joint councils.

The practice of segregation is so well institutionalized in this union that the designation of the Negro lodges all over the country begins with the numeral "6." It is ironic to note that the president of the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, George M. Harrison, is a member of the Civil Rights Committee of the AFL-CIO and a Federation Vice President.

The Brotherhood or Railway Carmen of America maintains segregated locals in California, Florida and in many other states. Recently Negro workers filed charges jointly against this Union and the Santa Fe Railroad with the California Fair Employment Practices Commission. The Commission has announced that it will conduct a public hearing on January 9 on complaints that the company and the union have acted in collusion to discriminate against Negro workers.

In Jacksonville, Florida, Negro workers employed on the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad belong to Local 690, a segregated all-Negro unit, while white workers employed on the same line hold membership in Local 509, an all-white unit of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen. In addition the white local prevents the all-colored local from participating in negotiations with management and insists that it "represents" the colored local. Similar practices occur in other cities where this union operates segregated locals.

Racially segregated locals are today characteristic of many building trades unions in the North as well as in the South. The United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners is quite typical of building trades unions in its treatment of the Negro worker. This union, for over a half-century has been among the most important of all the building trades unions, and, with very few exceptions, organizes Negroes and whites into separate locals insofar as it permits Negroes to join the union at all. In the South there seems to be no exception to this rule and it is most often followed in northern cities as well.

The white locals are in control of the union hiring hall and, because of frequent arrangements with municipal and county political machines, all hiring for major public as well as private construction projects is done through the "lily-white" union hiring hall. In many instances, the white local will import white workers from other cities rather than allow local Negro members to share in attractive work opportunities.

Quite frequently Negroes are excluded altogether from work in white neighborhoods. This means that Negro carpenters are restricted to marginal maintainence and repair work within the Negro community and that they seldom are permitted to work on the larger construction projects. The same practices are true for other building trades unions in many cities throughout the country.

The Hod Carriers, Building and Common Laborers Union is currently defendant in a suit brought by Negro construction workers in Chicago, charging that the Hod Carriers Union bars them from desirable jobs within this union's jurisdiction. In other cities Negro workers charge that white locals controlling job assignments in federal construction projects refuse to accept "travelling cards" issued by colored locals.

The International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers has agreed not to issue any new charters to segregated local unions and has indicated that action will be taken to merge segregated locals wherever possible, as well as to eliminate separate racial seniority lines in collective bargaining agreements. This occurred after representatives of the NAACP appeared before the Union's General Executive Board and made a presentation on behalf of Negro union members.

Unfortunately, the United Papermakers and Paperworkers Union refused the request of the NAACP Executive Secretary to confer with the Executive Board of the Papermakers Union regarding the matter of segregated locals and separate racial seniority lines in union contracts.

On the positive side we note that the American Federation of Musicians has merged segregated locals in some 16 cities and that the International Ladies Garment Workers Union with the requested assistance of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People merged separate white and Negro sections of the Atlanta local into one unit.

RACIAL EXCLUSION PRACTICES

Today in virtually every large urban center in the United States Negro workers are denied employment in the major industrial and residential construction projects because they are, with some few exceptions, barred from membership in the building trades craft unions. This includes the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, the Operating Engineers, Iron and Structural Steel Workers, Plumbers and Pipe Fitters Union, Plasterers and Lathers, the Sheet Metal Workers Union, the Boiler Makers, etc.

The basic fact of craft unions in the building trades industry is that they control access to employment by virtue of their rigid control of the hiring process. In this industry unions perform certain managerial functions, especially the assignment of union members to jobs. The refusal to admit Negroes into membership simply denies Negro workers opportunities to secure employment.

This is true in many cities across the country such as Terre Haute, Indiana; Washington, D.C.; St. Louis, Mo.; Dallas, Texas; Cleveland, Ohio; East St. Louis, Ill. and Dade County, Florida, etc. (Chicago, Ill., appears to be a partial exception, perhaps because of the Negro's effective use of his growing political power.) Because the National Labor Relations Board has done little to enforce the anti-closed shop provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, building trades unions affiliated to the AFL-CIO in most instances are closed unions operating closed shops.

Local 26 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers in Washington, D.C. is a typical example of how union power is used to completely exclude Negro workers from securing employment in vast federal construction projects. For many years Negro workers have been attempting to secure admission into Local 26, which controls all hiring for electrical installation work in the nation's capital. They have filed complaints with the President's Committee on Government Contracts which over three years ago brought this matter to the attention of the National AFL-CIO.

As of January 1, 1960, there were still no Negroes admitted into membership in Local 26. However, after the Justice Department threatened action and as a concession to pressure from other government agencies and to protests from Negro civil rights organizations, one Negro electrician, James Holland, was reluctantly permitted by the union to work in a government installation.

Soon after the merger in 1955 two international unions were admitted into the Federation with "lily-white" exclusion clauses in their constitutions although this action was clearly in violation of the policies announced at the time of the merger agreement between the AFL and the CIO. They were the International Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

Since then the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen has removed the "Caucasian Only Clause" from its constitution but in November, 1958, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen successfully defended its exclusion of Negroes from union membership in a suit brought by Negro firemen in the Federal District Court in Cincinnati, Ohio. Despite many appeals the National AFL-CIO refused to intervene or make any public comment and this union continues to exclude all Negroes from membership.

For almost a generation qualified Negro plumbers have been attacking the racial exclusion practices of the Plumbers Union (United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL-CIO). On December 4, 1958, Frank T. Lyerson submitted an affidavit to the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department charging that Local 630 of the Plumbers Union in East St. Louis, Illinois refused membership to him and other qualified Negroes. Although Local 630 limits membership to white persons exclusively, the National AFL-CIO has not taken any action on this or on other complaints against the Plumbers Union.

The practices of other building trades unions in the St. Louis-East St. Louis area are typical of the racial exclusion practices of many old-line craft unions. At the present time qualified Negro workers are barred from securing employment in the large harbor improvement project in St. Louis as well as in the vast federally-financed construction programs in East St. Louis because of the exclusionist practices of unions affiliated to the Building Trades Council of the AFL-CIO.

Local 309 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO, in East St. Louis is an all-white local and has consistently refused to admit qualified Negroes, including Jethro Smith who filed an affidavit with the National AFL-CIO. Henry Densmore filed a similar affidavit against the Operative Plasterers and Cement Masons Association, Local 90, which also maintains a rigid policy of excluding Negroes from membership.

Negro firemen for the first time were admitted into the International Fire Fighters Association, AFL-CIO, Local 734 in Baltimore, Maryland, during 1959. This occurred after action by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in support of Negro firemen who filed a complaint with the Baltimore Fair Employment Opportunity Commission against the union. However, Negro firemen who applied for admission into the Fire Fighters Union in Washington, D.C. during November, 1960, were refused admission into the "lily-white" Association of Fire Fighters in the nation's capital.

At its 1958 convention, the National Transport Association amended its constitution to admit Negroes and since then has enrolled some Negro workers within its jurisdiction in several states.

SEPARATE RACIAL SENIORITY LINES IN COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENTS

Many major unions affiliated to the AFL-CIO have negotiated into their collective bargaining agreements separate lines of seniority promotion. These limit Negro employment to unskilled or menial labor classifications which deny Negro workers equal seniority and other rights and prevent them from developing job skills which permit employment in more desirable classifications.

Although some few isolated actions can be reported as having eliminated separate seniority lines such as that of the United Automobile Workers of America at the General Motors Fisher Body plant in St. Louis, Missouri (UAW Local 25), the action of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers Union at the Magnolia Refining Corp., Beaumont, Texas, and at the Phillips Petroleum Corporation in Kansas City, Missouri, as well as the limited action by the United Steelworkers of America in response to a law suit filed by Negro members at the Sheffield Steel Company in Houston, Texas, the pattern of such discrimination remains practically intact in southern industrial operations where trade unions hold collective bargaining agreements.

At present, many thousands of Negro workers who are members of AFL-CIO unions in southern paper mills, chemical plants, pulp works and oil refineries as well as steel plants and in the textile industry suffer the acute disadvantages of separate lines of progression for Negro and white workers in union contracts.

Examples of trade unions that have entered into collusion with management to deny Negro workers equal seniority rights in the paper manufacturing and pulp and sulphite industry in the South are to be found at the Union Bag-Camp Paper Corp., Savannah, Georgia, where all the Negro workers are limited to membership in two segregated locals, Local 601 and 615, affiliated to the International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers.

All white workers hold membership in Local 388 and 435 of the same union and Local 408 of the United Papermakers and Paperworkers Union. Similar conditions exist at the Crown Zellerbach Corp., Bogalusa, Louisiana; Hudson Pulp and Paper Company, Palatka, Florida; and at International Paper Company plants in Mobile, Alabama; Georgetown, South Carolina; Moss Point and Natchez, Mississippi and Bastrop, Louisiana.

In these and many other paper mills throughout the South these two unions hold joint collective bargaining agreements and maintain a rigid pattern of racially segregated local unions with separate seniority lines limiting Negro employment to laborer classifications.

At the American Viscose Corporation plant in Front Royal, Virginia, where the Textile Workers Union is the collective bargaining agent, the union has approved a supplemental agreement to the contract which limits Negro employees to unskilled and menial job classifications that violate their basic seniority rights.

A similar condition exists at the Atlantic Steel Company plant in Atlanta, Georgia where after years of protest by Negro union members, the United Steelworkers Union has only partially eliminated those seniority provisions which limit Negroes, no matter how well qualified, to common laborer classifications.

A typical example of how separate seniority lines based on race in collective bargaining agreements prevent Negro workers from bidding for more desirable job occupations is to be found at the United States Phosphoric Company in Tampa, Florida. Over 200 Negro workers have repeatedly complained to the President of the International Chemical Workers Union, AFL-CIO, regarding the supplemental agreement to the union contract which contains rigid promotional lines for white and Negro workers limiting Negro workers to undesirable menial job classifications and preventing upgrading into production classifications.

The International Union of Operating Engineers, the Lake Charles, (La.) and the Galveston (Texas) AFL-CIO Metal Trades Councils hold collective bargaining agreements in several large oil refineries and chemical plants in the Gulf area. These union contracts contain provisions limiting Negro employment to some few menial jobs, a wage differential based upon race, and separate lines of seniority progression for white and colored workers.

APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING

The continued exclusion of Negroes from apprenticeship training is particularly disturbing because of rapid technological changes in the nation's economy. Because of the disproportionate concentration of Negroes in the unskilled sections of the labor force there has already been a disproportionate displacement of Negroes as a result of technological change. Continued exclusion of Negro youth from major apprenticeship training programs in the North as well as in the South endangers the future economic well-being of the entire Negro community.

It is important to note that in the ten-year period from 1950-1960, in the State of New York, the increase of Negro participation in building trades apprenticeship training programs rose only from 1.5% to 2%. In most of these programs the role of the labor union is decisive because the trade union usually determines who is admitted into the training programs and, therefore, who is admitted into the union.

Recent studies clearly indicate that no large scale significant advances have been made by Negroes into those craft union apprenticeship programs which have historically excluded non-whites.* The railroad craft unions as well as the railroad operating Brotherhoods remain adamant in their opposition to Negro craftsmen and bar apprenticeship opportunities to Negro youth.

Almost equally exclusive are the printing trades unions with exceptions being found in some areas of the Assistant Printing Pressmen Union and the Lithographers Union. Open access to plumbing and pipe fitting apprenticeships controlled by the Plumbers Union is a rare experience for a young Negro in the North as well as in the South. Similarly Negro youth are almost completely excluded from apprenticeship programs operated by the Sheet Metal Workers Union, the Ornamental and Structural Iron Workers, the Glass Workers, the Tile Setters, the Machinists or the Bricklayers Union.

The NAACP secured the admission of a Negro for the first time into the Sheet Metal apprenticeship training program in St. Louis, Missouri. In an unusual procedure the Association secured certification from the Bureau of Apprenticeship of the U.S. Department of Labor for a non-union firm owned by a Negro after Local 36 of the Sheet Metal Workers International Association had refused to admit Negro applicants into its apprenticeship training program and had refused to permit the participation of the Negro-owned company in training programs conducted by the union. The owner of Kennedy and Sons Sheet Metal Shops offered to have his employees join Local 36 of the Sheet Metal Workers Union but the membership applications of the Negro workers were refused by the all-white local affiliate of the AFL-CIO.

Recent action by the New York State Attorney General acting at the request of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People made possible the admission of the first Negro into the apprenticeship training program operated by the Plumbers Union in the State of New York.

A sustained program of activity by the Oregon Fair Employment Practices Commission and the State Apprenticeship Council resulted in the admission of Negroes for the first time into various apprenticeship programs conducted by unions affiliated to the Oregon AFL-CIO Building Trades and the Metal Trades Councils. These isolated actions, however, are completely inadequate as they do not eliminate the broad national pattern of Negro exclusion from apprenticeship training programs.

Increasingly, apprenticeship and other forms of technical training become the heart of fair employment practices. The continued exclusion of Negro youth from such programs, especially those controlled by AFL-CIO craft unions in the printing industry, the building and metal trades and in other craft jurisdictions prevents thousands of young persons from realizing their human potential and dooms them and their families to a marginal economic existence. It is in this area that the disparity between the public relations pronouncements of the AFL-CIO on civil rights and the day-to-day reality for Negro workers is most sharply outlined.

Many traditional sources of Negro employment (the nation's railroads and mass-production industries, for example), are rapidly drying up as a result of automation and other technological changes in the economy. Today the status of the Negro wage earner is characterized by drastic change and crisis. Thus, the virtual exclusion of Negroes from apprenticeship and other training programs forces them to remain as marginal employees in the economy. They are the ones who are hired last and who can be dispensed with easily with the added advantage that their displacement can be rationalized in terms of lower attainments in craft skills.

In addition, the appreciable lack of skilled Negro craftsmen directly affects the economic well-being of the entire Negro population as it removes potential sources of high income occupations from the group. The devices outlined briefly in this report operate effectively to concentrate Negro wage earners in those jobs which suffer the highest instances of unemployment.

The concentration of unskilled, low-paying jobs with a lack of employment stability together with other income limitations such as denial of access to union hiring halls in the building trades, and separate racial lines of seniority promotion in collective bargaining agreements all contribute to an explanation of why Negroes constitute a permanently depressed economic group in American society.

Dear Mr. Farmer:

For some time I have been discussing with our mutual friend, Mr. Arthur Chapin, the minority rights aspects of labor standards, an area of effort for which I am responsible here in the Department of Labor.

In order to help me in dealing with this issue, as well as to review various other subjects of mutual concern, I would like you and two or three other interested persons to join me at lunch in my hotel in New York some day during the week of July 8. I shall have my secretary call your office to find a mutually agreeable date for such a meeting.

Need I add my assurance that I will be very appreciative of your willingness, during these trying times, to spend the time with me? I trust that we will both find it useful.

Secretary Wirtz Urges Building & Construction Trades to Face Their Civil Rights Responsibilities

Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, speaking to the AFL-CIO Building and Construction Trades Department convention held in New York City said:

"It is important and meaningful that the American labor movement, no less than the civil rights groups, and along with the Administration support vigorously and without reservation a Federal Fair Employment Practices Act.

"It is also essential that it be recognized that many of the criticisms of the building and construction trades' membership policies have been grievously unfair, in their generalization, to those unions which have either traditionally or more recently eliminated every vestige of racial discrimination.

"I respectfully urge your recognition of what I think are fair protests against the slow rate of progress in implementing the policies which have been adopted, and fair objections to some of the positions which have been taken in defense of the present situation.

"There are two large building trades locals here in New York City, with a total membership of about 4,500, and with no Negro members. A question exists as to whether another local with a membership of 3,300 has any Negro members. There are comparable situations in most other cities. The very different kind of record in other building trades locals does not answer the fair charge that in too many locals the announced policy of this Department and of the International Unions is not a reality in fact.

"A survey conducted earlier this year of Federal construction projects in some 50 cities showed that on most of these projects there were no Negroes employed, either as journeymen or as apprentices, in a majority of the skilled trades.

"It is no answer to this that a comparable situation exists in skilled occupations in other industries. We face, as a nation, the obligation to correct an acknowledged wrong; and a clear consensus has been reached that we are going to do it.

"The important questions are of ways and means.

"Some proposed short cuts are, as most of us view it, wrong.

"It is clear that quotas are wrong. No one in Government has proposed them.

"It is clear that the opening of trades and apprenticeship programs to all alike, without regard to their race, in no way implies or warrants reducing the skill levels of the crafts.

"There is argument about whether preferential hiring of Negroes, to counter-act the effect of previous discrimination against them, is now in order. I think it is not--if for no other reason than that such a policy will, as a practical matter, create opposition which will retard the over-all process.

"But I am equally clear that where there are apprenticeship lists that contain no Negro names because they knew they didn't have a chance, those lists should be opened up on a fair basis. The argument that it is "just too bad" if Negroes didn't apply, is not a fair argument. And the claim that this will prevent the following of father-and-son practices that have a justification we all recognize is a false argument, for there are few if any situations in which the necessary adjustments cannot be made to serve all interests involved if there is the sincere purpose to do so.

"There has been the suggestion that the Government's program for promoting sound apprenticeship systems cannot properly be used to foster nondiscriminatory programs, and there is criticism of the insistence that Federal construction projects be carried out on an equal opportunity basis. Yet it must be recognized--not only as a matter of law but of fundamental principle--that the Government is the agent of all Americans and cannot properly favor any above any others.

"I want to return, finally, to the earlier suggestion that there is a close relationship between "fair employment" and "full employment." I think there would be in this country today almost complete acceptance in practice of the fair employment principle if there were in fact full employment.

"It may very well be that the present problem is substantially mis-stated when we put it in terms of racial discrimination. I have the strong impression that there are today very few Americans--some, but very few-- who object to working with someone of a different race. It is not that an American worker says today 'I don't want a Negro to get a job working with me.' What he says is 'I don't want anybody to get my job.'"

PREFACE

The requirement of the Manpower Development and Training Act of 1962 that the Secretary of Labor report annually on the use of the Nation's manpower has stimulated new interest in problems related to the utilization of our human resources. This interest has given new impetus to a further analysis of manpower utilization. And, as a result, a new perspective has been gained about the characteristics and implications of data on employment, unemployment, and labor force participation which heretofore have not been fully explored. This new perspective relates primarily to the significant number of male workers in the central working ages who, for a variety of reasons, are not participating in economic activity. This bulletin discusses the trend of male non-labor force participation, indicates important differences in these rates by color and age, and examines some of the reasons why these disparities may exist.

The purpose of this report is to indicate the economic loss suffered by the Nation when substantial numbers of adult men are not participating in economic activity. A second objective is to stimulate thinking about how these persons can be brought into the labor force so that they can achieve the dignity associated with work by becoming productive contributors to society.

This bulletin was prepared by Richard G. Seefer and Alexander A. Fourtune under the direction of Joseph B. Epstein, of the Office of Research, Office of Manpower, Automation and Training.

INTRODUCTION

The Employment Act of 1946 constituted the first legislative affirmation in this country of a policy of utilizing in our economy all persons able, willing, and seeking to work. The act acknowledged the Government's responsibility with respect to employment and represented a first step in the development of an active manpower policy.

Although almost two decades have passed, the full objective of the act has yet to be attained. In October 1965, the unemployment rate was at an 8-year low, less than 4-1/2 percent. Despite the fact that the economy was entering its 56th month of expansion--the longest peacetime period of uninterrupted growth in our history--some 2.8 million men, women and teenagers were unemployed.

The unemployment rate--the proportion in the labor force looking for work--provides the best single measure of the extent to which our economy is failing to utilize its human resources. But it is not a complete measure of that failure. For, in addition to the unemployed, there is another manpower resource that fails to contribute to the Nation's production of goods and services. This consists of a large number of persons of working ages in the civilian noninstitutional population who are classed as "not in the labor force"--who are neither employed nor looking for work. These people, together with those who are unemployed, comprise the part of the population that can be viewed as "not utilized."

The reasons why persons are not in the job market and the conditions under which they might enter it are complex and difficult to assess. Yet, for certain groups the reasons are fairly obvious. Some, for example, may never be able to work because of incurable mental and physical disabilities. Most teenagers are not in the labor force on a full-time basis since their chief responsibility is acquiring an education. A majority of mothers spend full time taking care of home and children. And many married women do not work simply because their husbands' earnings provide an adequate standard of living. Not all persons of working age, therefore, should or could be expected to work or look for work.

In order to rule out as many of these limiting factors as possible, this report focuses on the utilization--that is, the employment--of men between the ages of 25 and 64. Not only do these men constitute the major component of the work force, but nearly all are likely to be employed or looking for work because of their heavy responsibilities. They have families to support; many have children to raise and educate; and most of them provide the bulk of family income. Hence, changes in the economic utilization of adult men may have far greater economic and social implications than for any other group.

The measure of utilization of adult men, as developed in this report, is based on an analysis of changes in employment, unemployment, and participation in the labor force since 1951-53. The utilization of men is identified by color for the following age groups: 25-44, 45-54, and 55-64.

The years 1951-53 were chosen as the basis for comparison not only because unemployment was then at record lows for the post-World War II period, but also because participation of men in the labor force was at near peak rates. (For nonwhites, labor force participation rates during 1951-53 were higher than for any other subsequent year; participation rates for white men, however, in some years were occasionally higher than the base period.)

Thus, the early 1950's provide a pragmatic basis for the analysis of labor force behavior under conditions of relatively full employment and its variations since then.[1/] The selection of the base period, which included the Korean conflict, does not imply, however, that partial mobilization is necessary for high utilization of this country's manpower. But it does indicate the effect of increased spending, both public and private, in generating and making available jobs for all those willing and able to work.

1/ Because basic data relating to population, employment and unemployment within the base period and between 1951-53 and subsequent years are not strictly comparable, three adjustments were made in the series: (1) Base year data were revised to reflect differences in population estimates arising from the 1950 Census; (2) civilian labor force levels for 1951-53 were raised to take into account the increased numbers of adult men going into the Armed Forces during this period; and (3) employment and unemployment data for 1951-56 were adjusted to make them comparable with data for later years as a result of changes in definitions put into effect in 1957.

The base period 1951-53 was chosen not only because it was the most recent period in which the national unemployment rate approximated 3 percent, but also because utilization differentials between white and nonwhite manpower were less than for any subsequent year with relatively low unemployment. For example, in 1956 the unemployment rate was 4.2 percent--the lowest since 1951-53--but the labor force behavior of nonwhites had worsened relative to whites; nonwhite unemployment rates had risen and participation in the labor force had declined. (See appendix table A-1.)

The labor force, employment, and unemployment data are derived from sample surveys of households and are subject to sampling variability. For a discussion of statistical reliability, see pages 2E-5E of Employment and Earnings of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Utilization Rates and Employment Gap

In order to gain a better understanding of the changes that have taken place, two measures of utilization have been developed. The first indicates the rate at which manpower is being utilized (or not utilized) per thousand men in the civilian noninstitutional population, according to age and color, and changes over time. The second is a measure of a gap in employment of men 25 to 64 defined as the difference between the actual number employed and the number which would have been employed if manpower were utilized at the same rates as were white men in 1951-53. The gap can also be described as the increase in employment--consisting of the reduction in the unemployed and those not in the labor force--required each year to achieve the unemployment rates and the proportion not in the labor force that prevailed for white men in the base period.

It should be stressed that the employment gap relates only to changes in the proportions unemployed and not in the labor force since 1951-53. For example, the portion of the employment gap attributed to increased nonparticipation in the labor force consists only of the number needed to achieve parity with the base period rates. Parity, however, does not imply 100 percent participation in the labor force, either now or in the 1951-53 base period.

The labor force behavior of white males in the base period for each age group was used as the standard for comparing the utilization of whites in subsequent years and of nonwhites both in the base period and following years. The white men's rates were used because in the base period their employment and labor force rates were higher and their unemployment rates lower than for nonwhites. In a democratic society this disparity cannot and must not be accepted as inherent.

This report shows that sharp disparities exist in the pattern of utilization among different population groups. It is clear that a more precise measurement of full or optimum utilization of manpower must await more detailed information on labor force behavior. However, the data available do indicate, even without further refinement, that a significant number of men are not in the labor force because they are discouraged or inhibited from finding or seeking the jobs in which they can make their maximum contribution. This withdrawal from the labor force reflects the effect of many barriers such as lack of employment opportunities, discrimination, mental or physical disabilities, and cultural and educational handicaps--the elimination of which is a prerequisite for the full utilization of the Nation's manpower.

SUMMARY OF FINDINGS

Despite record peaks in employment and production, the economy is failing to fully utilize the potential of its manpower resources, as compared with the early 1950's. In 1965:[2]

1. Employment of men 25 to 64 years old would have been about 700,000 higher if they had worked at the rate which existed for white men in 1951-53. (See chart 1.)

2. The lack of these jobs--that is, the gap[3] between actual and potential employment--represented a loss of almost $7 billion in gross national product.

3. Over three-fifths of the employment gap--450,000--was due to a higher proportion of men outside the labor force. The rest--255,000--reflected higher unemployment.

4. The decline in the utilization of nonwhite manpower has been especially severe, and has pervaded all age groups. Matching the white standard reference rate of the early 1950's would have required the employment of 300,000 more nonwhites in 1965. (See chart 2.)

5. Older men--white and nonwhite between the ages of 55 and 64--accounted for 255,000 or over one-third of the total employment gap. Increased withdrawal from the labor force, most notable among this group, totaled 228,000, of which only a small proportion can be attributed to reasons of personal preference.

2/ Data for 1965 are based on preliminary estimated annual averages of population, employment and unemployment, as provided by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

3/ The 1965 employment gap reflects an increase of almost one-third in the proportion of men not utilized--to 83 per thousand population--when measured against the standard rate for white males in the 1951-53 base period (63 per thousand). Conversely, the proportion of men who were utilized--that is, the employed--declined from the white standard rate of 937 per thousand to an average level of 917 per thousand in 1965.

TRENDS IN MANPOWER UTILIZATION

The employment gap was greatest in the recession years of 1958 and 1961--about 1.4 million in both years--and was due almost entirely to higher unemployment than in the base period. Since 1961 there has been a marked improvement, with the employment gap narrowing to 705,000 by 1965. Nonetheless, the absence of these jobs in 1965 is costing the economy between $15 and $20 million a day in terms of lost output of goods and services, equivalent to almost $7 billion in gross national product.

Although the employment gap in recent years has been reduced, all of the improvement has been due to lower unemployment. At the same time, the number of men leaving the job market appears to have accelerated. For example, from 1954 to 1959 those outside the labor force on the average accounted for 9 percent of the employment gap. Since then, their share has gone up--from 215,000 or 21 percent of the total gap in 1960 to 377,000 or 46 percent in 1964. And in 1965 the portion of those not in the job market rose further--to 450,000--and for the first time constituted a majority (64 percent) of the gap. (See chart 3.)

Of the total employment gap in 1965, nonwhites accounted for 300,000--43 percent--even though they comprised only 10 percent of the adult male population. (See table 1.) Moreover, it should be noted that even in the 1951-53 base period a gap of 120,000 jobs existed, all of which reflected the significantly higher rates of unemployment and lesser participation of nonwhites in the labor force.

The employment gap among nonwhites, already a serious problem during the late 1950's, reached a peak of 470,000 jobs in 1961. This was evidenced in both high unemployment and less participation in the labor force. During the past 4 years, the employment gap has narrowed substantially and by 1965 the proportion of nonwhite men who held jobs--862 per thousand--was the highest since 1957. Yet, despite this improvement, sharp differences persist between the utilization of white and nonwhite manpower. Nonwhite unemployment is currently twice as great and nonparticipation is 60 percent higher than among whites.

Of even greater significance is the fact that since the early 1950's these differentials have been increasing, with the greatest disparity developing in the proportions not in the labor force. The nonwhite withdrawal fromsthe labor force is particularly significant because it has occurred among all age groups--younger as well as older men. The rates are about the same, however, for married men, both white and nonwhite. The overall differential between whites and nonwhites reflects the larger proportion of nonwhite men who are not married.

On the other hand, labor force participation rates of white men between 25 and 54 did not change appreciably. Most of the white men who left the job market were older workers, 55 to 64 years old. Although some of the decline in the participation rates of older workers undoubtedly reflects increased availability of early retirement opportunities, for many their withdrawal is involuntary and represents a loss of potential manpower.

MORE OLDER MEN LEAVING LABOR FORCE

Of all age groups covered in this report, white and nonwhite men between the ages of 55 and 64 experienced the most rapid decline in utilization--their combined employment rate dropping from 853 per thousand in 1951-53 to 823 in 1965. In 1965 employment would have had to be increased by 255,000 for men of these ages in order to achieve the 1951-53 standard rate for white men. (See chart 4.)

Most of the decline in employment of older workers has been due not to mounting unemployment (from which many are protected by seniority) but to increasing proportions not in the labor force. For example, between 1951-53 and 1960 the number of men withdrawing from the job market rose from 122 to 132 per thousand. Since then this rate has accelerated, rising to 150 per thousand in 1965. In other words, over three-fifths of the increase in the proportion of older men outside the labor force has taken place during the past 5 years alone.

Although labor force participation rates of both whites and nonwhites declined, the reduction was much greater among nonwhites as the number withdrawing from the labor force rose by 68 to 207 per thousand in 1965. This was about three times the rise in the nonparticipation rate of white men, which rose by 23 to 144 per thousand. The generally low levels of education of older nonwhites and their concentration in unskilled jobs, many of which require vigorous health, apparently make them less adaptable to changing demands of the job market. Moreover, premature loss of work is likely to impose much greater economic hardships on older nonwhite breadwinners because of financial vulnerability due to their low income. For example, in March 1965, 30 percent of employed nonwhite male breadwinners, 55 to 64 years old, lived in families with less than $3,000 income in 1964. By contrast, only 11 percent of the white men had families with such low income. Furthermore, the median income of nonwhite families was only $4,370--less than 60 percent of the corresponding white family income.

As indicated above, between 1951-53 and 1965 most of the reduction in employment rates of older men has been accounted for by decreasing participation in the labor force, which has been particularly pronounced during the 1960's. At the same time, the unemployment situation among older workers has improved markedly. For white men this was reflected in a drop in unemployment from 47 per thousand in 1961 to 26 per thousand in 1965. This reduction, however, has not been accompanied by an increase in employment rates. The fact that the proportion employed has remained virtually the same during the past 4 years, despite reductions in unemployment, suggests that many white men on balance are no longer looking for work and are leaving the work force altogether.

On the other hand, about two-fifths of the reduction in unemployment among older nonwhites during the past 4 years has been reflected in a rise in employment. The reasons why recent employment rates of nonwhites have risen and those of whites have not are not clear, but it may be that the jobs which were available for nonwhites were ones which whites were generally unwilling to accept. In addition, the current economic expansion may also have resulted in the creation of relatively more employment opportunities for older nonwhites than were previously available. However, the nonwhite unemployment rate, estimated at 44 per thousand in 1965, is still disproportionately high compared with 26 per thousand for white workers.

The lower utilization rates of nonwhites as compared to those of whites reflect the combined effects of many inequities; among these are discrimination, poor health, lack of job opportunities, and inadequate education. Because many nonwhites have traditionally been employed in jobs requiring heavy manual labor, they have probably been more subject to forced "retirement" for reason of health. In addition, it is these jobs which have been among those hardest hit by increasing mechanization.

For both white and nonwhite older men, some of the decline in participation rates undoubtedly reflects the rising incidence of early retirement. From 1961 to 1965, for example, about 1-1/4 million men between the ages of 62 and 64 have taken advantage of the amendments to the Social Security Act which permitted early retirement with reduced benefits. While it is difficult to assess the net effect of this development on manpower utilization--because it is not known how many have voluntarily taken advantage of early retirement--it appears likely that many older men are being forced out of the job market because of lack of employment opportunities, lack of skills or education, inability to meet the physical demands of the job, unwillingness to relocate, or discriminatory hiring practices.

For example, only 1 out of 10 men 62-64 years old receiving Social Security benefits in 1963 had retired because of preference for leisure. Two out of five had done so at the employer's decision, predominantly because of poor health or layoffs.[4] About three-fifths of the 62- to 64-year-old men who filed for old-age insurance benefits in 1962 were not employed at the time. About half of these had been out of work for more than 6 months and a fourth for 2 years or more.[5]

On the other hand, many men who retire early--voluntarily or involuntarily--have no intention of stopping work. For example, a survey of civil service retirees who left their jobs between the ages of 55 and 60 showed that 59 percent returned to work.[6] And a 1963 study sponsored by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare found that nearly half of a group of involuntary early retirees looked for work after retirement.[7] The recent report of the Secretary of Labor on the problems of the older worker points out that: "Repeatedly the majority of retirees who have returned to work or wanted to return to work, give lack of adequate income as their reason."[8]

Changing attitudes toward early retirement and increasing retirement benefits may in time act as a strong inducement for men under 65 to retire. At present, available information is inadequate to establish conclusively the extent to which older men are retiring voluntarily, especially those who hold regular jobs, because they prefer leisure and can live comfortably under current benefit levels. At this point, the bulk of the evidence appears consistent with the hypothesis that most early retirement is not voluntary.

DECLINING UTILIZATION OF MEN, 25 TO 54

Men between 25 and 54 years of age have the highest participation rates of any age group because it is during these ages that their economic and family needs are greatest. Most are heads of households who must have steady employment with adequate income to provide the goods and services required for the rearing of children, household maintenance, and to meet other major responsibilities during the course of a lifetime. However, even within this age bracket, there is a clear pattern of decreasing utilization associated with increasing age.

Although not as hard hit as men aged 55 to 64, the utilization of those 45 to 54 years old has also deteriorated significantly since 1951-53. By 1965 their average employment rates had fallen from 943 to 931 per thousand population. In terms of the white male reference rate of the early 1950's, the decline in utilization represented an employment gap of 153,000 jobs.

Men in this age group and their families usually suffer more economic hardships from the loss of employment than older men, since they seldom have recourse to retirement benefits if age or other discriminatory hiring practices or lack of skills prevent them from obtaining employment. As a result, some may be forced to live with or depend on relatives; others may have to rely on various other types of assistance with attendant loss of self-respect.

Consistent with their generally lower pattern of utilization, employment of nonwhite men 45-54 dropped more than for white men. Although nonwhites constitute less than 10 percent of all men in this age group, they accounted for 46 percent of the 1965 employment gap for these ages. Over half of the gap among nonwhite men was attributable to withdrawal from the labor force. (See chart 5.) By contrast, unemployment among whites in most years has constituted the bulk of their gap.

During the past 4 years, however, employment of men in this age group has improved, due principally to reductions in unemployment. Among nonwhites the proportion unemployed fell from 94 per thousand in 1961 to 50 per thousand in 1965, while among whites their corresponding rate dropped from 42 to 21 per thousand; for both groups their rates in 1965 were the lowest since 1951-53. On the other hand, there has not been much change since 1961 in the proportion outside the labor force, which appears to have stabilized at about 41 per thousand for whites and 76 per thousand for nonwhites, both of which are substantially above base period rates.

Utilization rates of younger men, white and nonwhite combined, aged 25 to 44, are the highest of the age groups covered in this report. Nevertheless, the same pattern of increasing nonparticipation that prevails among the older nonwhite age groups also applies to younger nonwhites. (See chart 6.) Their proportion outside the labor force rose from 32 per thousand in 1951-53 to 52 per thousand in 1965. In addition, unemployment of younger nonwhites increased by 11 per thousand to 55 per thousand. These increases--in both nonparticipation and unemployment--mean that employment of nonwhite males aged 25 to 44 would have to be raised by 151,000 in 1965 to match the white standard rate for the same ages in the early 1950's. These data reflect the frustrations and barriers that inhibit normal participation by nonwhites in the labor force.

In sharp contrast, the pattern of utilization for white men of these ages was characterized by a virtually stable rate of labor force participation. Of the 146,000 employment gap in 1965 attributed to the 25-44 white male population, almost three-fourths reflected an increase in unemployment.

As a result of these differences in utilization, nonwhites 25 to 44 years old, as in the other age groups, account for a disproportionate share of the employment gap. Although nonwhites represent only 10 percent of the male population in this group, they comprise over 60 percent of the gap attributed to lower labor force participation and over 40 percent attributed to higher unemployment.

Since 1961, employment of men in these central age groups has also increased, with nonwhites showing a much faster rate of growth than whites. The improvement in the nonwhite employment rate, however, was less than the accompanying decline in unemployment, with the difference reflected in a rise in those outside the labor force. Among whites, their increased employment rate was due almost entirely to reduced unemployment.

EDUCATION AND MANPOWER UTILIZATION

The close relationship between low levels of educational attainment and high unemployment is well known and has been demonstrated in numerous studies. Less generally known is the substantial impact that inadequate education has on reduced labor force participation. While the correlation between limited education and low levels of utilization is not perfect, it is clear that the most educated are most fully utilized, and those with the least education suffer from the highest unemployment and they participate least in the job market.

Moreover, at all levels of educational attainment, except the lowest, proportionately fewer nonwhites were employed than whites. For example, in March 1964, among white men between the ages of 25 and 64, those with 8 years schooling were employed at the rate of 874 per thousand--50 per thousand more than for nonwhites. (See table 2.) And even among college graduates, relatively more whites had jobs than nonwhites. Their utilization rates were 961 and 934 per thousand, respectively.

Despite the evidence that increased educational attainment is clearly associated with higher rates of employment for both whites and nonwhites, there are some noticeable deviations from this pattern which are difficult to assess. Among men who had the least amount of schooling--those with 4 years or less of education--the proportion of employed nonwhites was actually higher than for whites. Not only were relatively fewer nonwhites unemployed than whites (69 compared to 75 per thousand) but their proportion outside the labor force--166 per thousand--was also significantly lower than for whites--205 per thousand.

While proportionately more white men had jobs than nonwhites, among those who had only 5 to 7 years education these differences were relatively small--only 12 per thousand. On the other hand, the greatest difference in white-nonwhite utilization rates was among those with a grammar school education and those with a high school background. Apart from those with the lowest educational achievement, it is only among nonwhites with college experience that utilization rates approached those of white men with similar years of schooling.

In order to explain these variations in the patterns of labor force behavior associated with education, considerably more information is needed. The data suggest, however, that educational differences are one of many factors involved in the utilization of manpower. The fact that among men with 0-4 years of education relatively more nonwhites were employed than whites may reflect different living and working environments such as the concentration of nonwhites in rural and farm work which is characterized more by part-time or underemployment rather than regular full-time employment. Conversely, the sharply lower employment rates of nonwhite high school graduates as compared to white graduates may result more from discriminatory hiring practices rather than rural-urban differences.

Despite these essentially non-educational factors, data suggest that poorly educated workers will have even greater difficulty as the educational level of the labor force continues to rise and as technology reaches new levels of complexity. The prospect is not only that the number of jobs requiring little or no education will continue to decline but that nearly all jobs will require higher level skills and more education.

IMPLICATIONS FOR NEEDED ACTION

The Employment Act of 1946 was in large measure prompted by a concern over the possibility of sharp increases in unemployment following the demobilization of millions of military personnel and the discharge of war production workers at the end of World War II. The act thus laid the foundation for the establishment of an active manpower policy aimed at the maintenance of high employment consistent with price stability.

Two decades later the Nation is still concerned with problems of manpower--employment and unemployment--despite an impressive record of economic and social gains. Since 1961, the Government has undertaken a number of fiscal and monetary actions as well as education and training programs directed at solving specific manpower problems. Over the past 4 years the economy has made great strides in providing jobs for a growing labor force and in reducing unemployment.

As efforts to bring the country closer to full employment become increasingly effective, more attention will have to be given to how full or optimum utilization of total manpower resources can be achieved. The analysis of labor force participation data--which has been primarily concerned with those at work or looking for work--suggests that those in positions of policy should expand their thinking beyond traditional concepts. More consideration should be given to the development of programs to reach people not currently counted in the labor force--those in the working age population who may have given up the search for work or have never even looked for work.

Within the concept of manpower utilization, consideration should be given to economic and social programs designed to best serve the goals of manpower policy as well as individual needs. To this end, it is vital that economic and social policies be adopted and appropriate programs be developed for those outside the labor force. The experience gained under the Experimental and Demonstration projects sponsored by the Manpower Administration is already beginning to show the benefits of proper encouragement, counseling, education and training in helping persons with difficult employment problems to enter or re-enter the world of work.9/

9/ For example, see William F. Brazziel, Factors in Workers' Decisions to Forego Retraining Under the Manpower Development and Training Act (Washington: Norfolk Division, Virginia State College in cooperation with the U.S. Department of Labor, Manpower Administration, Office of Manpower, Automation and Training, June 1964).

While the primary objective of a policy of optimum manpower utilization would, in most instances, be a higher rate of labor force participation and employment, realization of this goal implies a recognition that some persons currently in the labor force--for example, housewives, mothers and students--would at the same time be freed from the economic necessity of working and be able to turn their efforts and attention to other activities.

This report has shown that up to 1961 the greatest impediment to full manpower utilization had been increased unemployment. Since 1961, there has been a substantial narrowing of the employment gap, all due to reductions in unemployment. But as unemployment has been reduced, nonparticipation in the labor force has assumed greater significance, absolutely as well as relatively. As a result of these developments, over 60 percent of the employment gap in 1965 can be attributed to reduced labor force participation.

Thus, manpower policy must always be alert to the maximum possible reduction in unemployment--especially among those groups which have not shared in the general improvement. But this is not sufficient. Action should now be directed to persons outside the job market to enable and encourage them to enter the mainstream of the American economy. Achievement of both these goals requires the elimination of many barriers. One of these is discrimination, the evidence of which has been amply demonstrated by the falling utilization rates for older men and for nonwhites. As the provisions of the Civil Rights Act become fully effective, the situation of nonwhite men should improve.

The problem of the older worker calls for additional action and attention. Since one of the purposes of the Social Security Act is to provide workers with a free choice between retirement and work, it is ironic that early retirement at reduced benefits has been a last resort for many older men. Hiring restrictions based on age must be eliminated so that more displaced older workers can be helped.

A variety of other measures may be required to achieve full utilization. For workers who have given up the search for employment in the belief that no jobs are available, consideration should be given to training such as that supplied under the Manpower Development and Training Act. Such training could be used as an instrument for restoring many workers who are old, disabled, or in poor health to an active and productive role in society.

The evidence of reduced labor force participation by some groups of men suggests the existence of serious economic, social and psychological and health problems which have not been fully delineated. At present it is not known to what extent the labor force behavior or the work experience of individuals are influenced by these factors. The policy approach, therefore, must be flexible and be responsive to new information relating to specific causes for individuals' decisions not to participate in the labor force. The research staff of the Manpower Administration and other Bureaus in the Department of Labor are developing more information which will shed light on these and other aspects of labor force behavior.

The objective of a free industrialized society must include comprehensive programs to evoke the full utilization of not only those who are willing and able to pursue economic activities but, also, of those who presently do not participate in work life because of remediable ills, disabilities, or lack of motivation. This is necessary not only to maximize production for the benefit of the population as a whole, but also to develop each individual's contribution as a means of enhancing individual worth. Any concept of full utilization, therefore, must pay particular attention to groups in the population which have not yet fully shared nor have been given the opportunity to make their rightful contribution to the Nation's economic and social well-being.

Data on utilization were derived from the population and labor force statistics as provided in the sample survey of households, collected and tabulated by the Census Bureau for the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and published in the Monthly Report on the Labor Force.

Note: Data for 1965 are based on estimated annual averages of population, employment and unemployment, as provided by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

1/ This table shows changes in the "employment gap" which represents the difference between actual levels of unemployment and nonparticipation (not in the labor force) and those which would have occurred if the pattern of labor force behavior of white men in 1951-53 had prevailed. These differences are derived by applying the base period pattern for each age group to the appropriate age and color groups in the population in subsequent years. It should be noted that the total employment gap for white men in some years is less than that due to unemployment and results from negative entries for those "not in the labor force." This reflects the fact that in these years labor force participation rates of white men were somewhat higher than they were in the 1951-53 base period. The effect of this development resulted in fewer numbers of men outside the labor force than that which would have been expected based on the standard of the early 1950's.

Invitation to a Conference of Negro Leaders from A. Philip Randolph

The Civil Rights Revolution has entered a new period. Following increasing pressure from our movement, expressed in direct action and demonstrations culminating in the historic March on Washington, Congress finally passed the landmark Civil Rights Act of 1964. Yet, in the midst of this victory, we are conscious of problems more complex and acute than perhaps any we have faced before.

The time has come for those who believe in the struggle for racial equality and integration through democratic and nonviolent means to come together to analyze, interpret and evaluate the forces and direction of the Civil Rights Revolution in the year 1965.

At its Fourth Annual Convention, the Negro American Labor Council asked me to issue a call for such a conference and to invite representatives of Negro civil rights organizations, churches, fraternal groups, women's groups, etc. In keeping with that earnest request I have called such a conference.

The Conference will convene on Saturday morning, January 30, 1965 at 10:00 A.M., and will conclude on the following Sunday afternoon at 5:00 P.M. It will be held at the headquarters of the National Council of Churches, 475 Riverside Drive, New York City.

Your organization is invited to designate or send not more than 3 delegate(s). I believe that it would be little short of criminal to urge you to attend this conference if it were to result in no more than another exchange of views. At the same time, it would be misleading to suggest that we hope to come out of it with a new Grand Strategy, to which everybody will have to be committed.

Our purpose, instead, is to examine the principal areas of goals and strategies to which the Negro community is, or should be, devoted for the year ahead; and to clarify the alternatives we face, so that those who must choose alternatives can do so with the assurance that others in the community understand where they are heading. In other words, we do not seek a surface "unity" where none is feasible (or desirable); we do expect to make various courses of action possible in an atmosphere of mutual confidence rather than suspicion.

Shortly, I will be sending you an outline of the Conference program. There will be a few brief presentations by persons in a position, we hope, to set facts before us in succinct and objective fashion; followed by intensive discussion whose results will be summarized at a final session.

No working press will be admitted to the Conference. The Conference itself will decide at its conclusion whether there will be an official statement to the press.

The number of persons invited will be kept small enough to be manageable while still being representative. We do not anticipate that there will be more than sixty conferees all told. Invitation is by organization, and the number of organizational representatives is strictly limited to the figure given on the first page.

In order to cover the Conference expenses, we are asking each delegate to pay a $5.00 registration fee. Each participant will provide for his own meals and housing.

Thank you for your interest. I hope to see you on January 30.

NEGROES AND ORGANIZED LABOR

HERMAN D. BLOCH

The purpose of this paper is to reveal that organized labor's economic philosophy—a limited job market—creates a vicious employment circle for Negroes. A limited job market is based on restriction of membership, and Negroes are usually barred from craft union membership. Nonacceptance or token acceptance of Negroes by craft unions means that Negroes are barred from the apprenticeship system; the latter is the main source of union recruitment. The apprenticeship system is substantially based on a father-son relationship. Although heavy stress will be given to the period 1866 to 1950, unions preceding the National Labor Union and the AFL actually laid the foundation for the vicious circle. The historical acceptance of Negroes as inferior made it impossible for liberal members of both the National Labor Union and the AFL to change craft union admission policies to a more democratic one.

Beginnings of the Vicious Circle

The advent of organized labor in the United States saw craftsmen seeking to protect their indifferent ways.[1] Accepting the prevailing atmosphere of race prejudice,[2] white unionists barred Negroes from craft jobs in order to "restrict competition and to safeguard their job monopoly."[3] Early in the eighteenth century, many local trade societies tacitly or explicitly excluded Negroes from union membership: the Caulkers of Boston in 1724,[4] the Shipwrights of New York in 1803, the Carpenters of New York in 1806, the New York Typographical Society in 1817, to mention but a few. Early in American history Negro exclusion from trade societies and unions had become an integral part of the mores. Since amalgamated organizations like the Workingmen's Convention meeting in New York in 1830, the General Trades Union of New York City meeting in 1833, and the National Trades Union meeting in 1835, without question, barred Negroes from their organizations. The organization of modern national unions beginning with the Journeymen Printers in 1852,[5] the Iron Workers in 1858, and the Iron Moulders and Machinists in 1859, these organizations no longer questioned the propriety of Negroes being excluded from their unions. Various unions established after the Civil War as the railway unions, masons union, etc., had accepted exclusion of Negroes from membership as a modus vivendi.

At the close of the 1860's McNeill estimated that there existed at least thirty-two unions, and their records showed that most of them refused Negroes admission to their organizations. The means used varied from outright exclusion to the Caucasian Clause or tacit consent.[6]

Negroes and the National Labor Union

This long-standing attitude of organized labor towards Negroes was so ingrained in the minds of craftsmen that it was official union policy long before the National Labor Congress met in Baltimore in 1866. The National Labor Union's delegates asserted their position on the question of Negro membership when they emphasized the scarcity of work principle. Race prejudice they declared was not the issue; rather the concept of a limited market and industrialization. After all, race prejudice existed long before the factory system and collective bargaining became an integral part of our economic way of life; therefore, unions did not invent discrimination, rather unions took over what was traditionally part of our social and economic mores. A rationalization based on the historical accident that Negroes made their appearance as chattel and this made them inferior persons.

A. C. Cameron,[7] a close friend of William Sylvis, the latter president of two powerful organizations, Molders Union and the National Labor Union, were members of the avant garde—both persons advocated complete acceptance of Negroes into the organized labor movement. At the 1866 Convention of the National Labor Congress, Cameron maneuvered inclusion of the Negro question on the agenda. Also, he was appointed chairman of the Congress' first Negro Labor Committee. After investigating the problem, their report included the following:

> His [Negro's] interest as a workingman and especially the part he is to take in advancing the cause of labor, has as yet, received no consideration. . . . the Committee feels that it would be sad dereliction to pass it by unacted.

> What is wanted for them is for every union to help to inculcate the... idea that the interests of labor are one; that there should be no distinction of race or nationality;... that there is but one dividing line which separates mankind into two great classes....The interest of all on our side of the line is the same. and should we be misled by prejudice or passion as to refuse to aid the spread of union principles among our fellow toilers, we would be untrue to them... to ourselves....If these general principles be correct, we must seek cooperation of the African race in America.[8]

The Committee's report perceived the acute need for group unity amongst workers. It penetrated to the crux of the problem in the following: "...the question to be decided is, shall we make them our friends, or shall capital be allowed to turn them as an engine against us? Indeed a practical illustration... is afforded in the recent importation of colored Caulkers from Portsmouth, Virginia, to Boston, Massachusetts, during the struggle on the eight hour question."[9]

Cameron and other members of his Committee thought that they had laid the proper foundation for organized labor's acceptance of Negroes into the labor movement at the close of the 1866 convention. So convinced were the members of the Committee that they thought it expedient to have future conventions decide when the period of cooperation should take place. "The time when such cooperation should take effect we leave to the decision and wisdom of the next congress... we believe that such enlightened action will be developed as to resound to the best and most lasting interests of all concerned."[10]

The next convention was held the following year in Chicago, Illinois. A Mr. Phelps was elected chairman of the Negro Labor Committee. Mr. Phelps was a member of the Carpenters and Joiners Union of New Haven, Connecticut—a craft union known for its anti-Negro sentiment. The second Committee's report gave a view antithetical to that of its predecessor. The Chicago Committee stated that "while we ...realize the danger in the future competition in mechanical Negro labor, yet, we find the subject so involved in so much mystery, ...and so wide a diversity of opinion amongst our members, ...that it is inexpedient to take action on the subject during this National Congress."[11] Perhaps it was "inexpedient to take action on the subject" of

Negroes, since the Cigar Makers during their 1868 convention decided to renew limitation on membership to white male journeymen only.[12]

Antithetical to the above comments was a report attributed to a New York Times correspondent following the 1869 convention. This reporter stated that Negroes had gained full recognition.

> To any one who has watched the deliberations of this Congress of artisans and workingmen, one peculiar fact stands out in bold relief, viz., that the barriers of class and caste have been broken down, so far as the laboring classes of the country are concerned, if we take the solemnly avowed sentiments of this body as indicative of the feelings that exist among the constituencies therein represented. For the first time in the history of this nation a convention has been held in which workingmen and workingwomen, white and black, loyalists and ex-rebels, have met together upon terms of perfect equality, for the purpose of taking deliberative action on vital questions affecting equally the interests of all.[13]

Since none of the official proceedings of the National Labor Union bear out this optimistic view, it is rather difficult to find the source used by this correspondent for his views.[14] Furthermore, it is hard to conceive of so radical a change in views on the part of craft unions, since the year before the Cigar Makers National Union led by many socialists reaffirmed limiting membership to white males only. In addition, contemporary newspaper accounts and other reports for that year indicate a contrary view. Another New York Times correspondent[15] just a few months prior to the publication of this optimistic article, refuted completely the meeting of whites and Negroes "upon equal terms of perfect equality." Reference is made to a field study conducted by the reporter in which he reported "the most startling evidences of powerful effects of prejudice." The Negro was the last hired and the first fired, frequently Negroes were the victims of physical violence. Many white unionists refused outright to work side by side with Negroes. One group of Irish workers threatened to strike unless their employer discharged all Negroes on the job. Negro apprenticeship sponsored by unions was unheard of, and the lack of entry into the craft trades forced Negroes to accept menial occupations. Another reporter, this time connected with the New York Tribune,[16] reaffirmed the findings of his fellow reporter—Negroes faced a vicious circle in the employment field.

The early 1870' saw a continuation of craft union exclusion. In 1870, the International Typographical Union's proceedings stated that it is regrettable that the Negro question was again raised, and again referred the question of Negro admission back to its locals.[17] The following year, 1871, the Bricklayers National Union also referred the matter back to its locals.[18] Still another instance was that of the Carpenters and Joiners Union where the issue was raised but deferred back to its locals.[19] Negro exclusion from the craft unions was the general practice—and adding to the list of unions excluding Negroes would only accent the obvious.

A study conducted by the National Urban League on American Labor Unions[20] reaffirms our report on the National Labor Union. The latter was "no more than a benevolent gesture with only moral force at its back that might easily be disregarded and nullified by either a national or local union opposed to Negro admission to their union." In summation, the question of union admission was always left to the discretion of individual national unions and their locals. Unions' general policy on the question of Negro admission was either complete exclusion or placing him in the category of "mechanical labor"—a category outside the jurisdiction of craft unions. Power-wise the National Labor Union ceased to function about 1872, and the panic of 1873 decimated what was left of existing craft unions.

The Knights of Labor

In juxtaposition to the National Labor Union existed the Knights of Labor. The Knights opened its rolls to union membership in 1867. Initially, it was Uriah Stephens who established the policy of the Knights towards Negro admission. He stated: "I can see ahead of me an organization that... will include men and women of every craft, creed and color...."[21] Terrence V. Powderly, successor to Stephens, accepted his predecessor's labor philosophy but on economic grounds rather than religious ones. He reasoned in terms of economics and sociology. On economic grounds Powderly thought that the free Negro would be used to keep wages down unless "both [white and black] mechanics were to sink differences... since no human eye can detect a difference between the article manufactured by the black mechanic and that manufactured by the white mechanic."[22] At least in the North there is some evidence that this philosophy had filtered down to the levels of both the District Assembly and the rank and file. An example of acceptance was the election of F. J. Ferrel, a member of New York Assembly District Assembly #359 as a delegate to the national convention. The national convention was to be held in Richmond, Virginia, and hotel accommodations had been made in advance for all the delegates. When Ferrel tried to register at the hotel the management refused to accommodate him. Ferrel was a Negro. In protest, to a man, the New York contingent cancelled their reservations and sought accommodations where Ferrel would be accepted.[23] Belief in social equality was demonstrated at this convention when it was arranged to have Ferrel introduce T. V. Powderly as chairman of the convention.[24] In turn, Powderly was to introduce the Mayor of Richmond, Virginia, as one of the principal speakers. To impress the audience with the social policy of the Knights, Powderly stated: "one of the [social] objects of our Order is the abolition of these distinctions which are maintained by creed or color..."[25]

Contemporary newspapers of the period estimated the Knights' Negro membership at 95,000 with over 400 all-Negro locals and "they [Negro locals] are growing at a rate out of proportion to the increase of white members."[26]

The American Federation of Labor

The decline of the Knights of Labor began in May 1866 following the loss of the Southwest strike, the failure of the eight-hour movement, the Haymarket bomb, and the growing dissatisfaction of the trade unions.[27] After 1886 the AFL became the official spokesman for the oganized labor movement. Although no specific reference was made to Negroes in the 1886 Constitution of the AFL, officials did require a pledge from all national and international unions seeking affiliation never to discriminate against a fellow worker on account of color, creed, or nationality. Gompers, like his predecessors in the labor movement, Cameron and Powderly, recognized the need for unity to preserve economic strength. "If we don't make friends of the colored man, they will of necessity be justified in proving themselves our enemies, [strikebreakers], and they will be utilized upon every occasion to frustrate our every effort for economic, social, and political improvement."[28]

After the National Association of Machinists had been organized in 1890 with a constitution containing a Caucasian Clause, Lennon of the AFL suggested that the AFL is opposed to any trade union that has provisions which exclude from membership persons on account of race or color," and that "the National Machinists' Union remove from their constitution such conditions, so that all machinists shall be eligible for membership."[29] A year later, 1891, Gompers issued a strong statement on the official attitude of the AFL's stand on the Negro question: ". . .organized labor. . . is decidedly in favor of maintaining and encouraging the recognition of the equality between colored and white laborers," and to this purpose the "Federation will call for a convention of all machinists' unions for the purpose of forming a national union which shall recognize no color line."[30] Both the IAM and the International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths were threatened with rival unionism unless they expunged the Caucasian Clause from their constitutions. Coercion failed to influence either of these two unions. Despite failure to influence these national unions, the sentiment at the 1897 AFL Convention reaffirmed its welcome to all ranks of labor "without regard to creed, color, sex, or nationality."[31]

It was during the one year that Gompers was not re-elected president of the AFL that the International Association of Machinists was accepted for membership. In 1894 McBride was elected president, took ill, and James Duncan became acting president. The latter made a distinction between national union's constitution and the practices of it locals which permitted the national union to eliminate the "lily-white" clause without in the least affecting discrimination against Negroes. Duncan made the point that as "long as you have the word "white" establishing the color line as part of your constitution either your action must be changed or your lodges and your national body must stand debarred from all affiliation with us. . . . yours is the only national union that at present, has the color line as distinctly formed, while at the same time many crafts refuse to admit a colored man without having such provision in their constitution, the matter being left absolutely with the local unions as to whether or not they admit colored applicants."[32] The International Association of Machinists recognized the full meaning of the casuistry by substituting ritual for the "lily-white" clause.[33] The Blacksmiths Union was admitted when it set up segregated locals; in essence it accomplished the same thing as the Caucasian Clause. After 1895 the officials of the AFL had rationalized their failure to enforce nondiscrimination and after 1896 began to accept national unions whose constitutions excluded Negroes.[34]

Gompers recognized that he was fighting a losing battle on the Negro question, still he refused to give up the fight completely. Race prejudice did exist despite his exhortations, but the AFL needed to increase its membership and to prevent a schism in the labor movement a new way out had to be found.[35] First Gompers took the position that the AFL did not compel its affiliates to accept colored workmen, but insisted that they should not be excluded from the labor movement because of accidental birth. Later he even admitted that Negroes should not be accepted into the crafts because of their strikebreaking activities.[36] (Gompers seemed to have forgotten his earlier statements on the subject which prophesied this very thing and the cause of strikebreaking on the part of Negroes was a direct outcrop of exclusion from the labor movement.)

Two alternatives were used by the AFL and its affiliates to overcome white craftsmen's antagonism towards Negroes. The first was the segregated local,[37] more often than not an auxiliary local wherein the Negro had no voice in the internal democracy of the union's operation. The second was the Federal Labor Union to be directly chartered by the Federation since the latter barred exclusion solely on the basis of race. Federal Labor Unions were first mentioned in the AFL's 1887 Convention Proceedings;[38] these affiliates would organize workers not within the present jurisdiction of existing national or international unions. This was an attempt to overcome the AFL's structural weakness in enforcing nondiscrimination amongst its affiliates. The Federal Labor Union could only offer Negroes uncertain and temporary entry into the labor movement and was widely used by the Federation after 1900. Federal Labor Unions are temporary in nature since they form the nuclei of new internationals, and once the latter is formed the direct relationship with the Federation would be terminated. Should the national craft union accept Negroes it would be in the form of an auxiliary or segregated union. This would still leave Negroes outside of the official family except in name.[39]

In spite of the AFL's long official stand on the race question,[40] by 1950 there still existed many wayward affiliates. Craft unions upholding this attitude toward the Negro are best exemplified by an editorial in the Electrical World, official organ of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers: "We do not want the Negro in the IBEW, but we think that they should be organized in locals of their own, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor as that organization knows no creed or color. . . ."[41]

Relatively recent racial union policies which completely restrict or offer "token" membership to Negroes include six AFL craft affiliates and some six unaffiliated unions who practice exclusion through the Caucasian Clause or ritual. The Caucasian Clause is perhaps one of the oldest and most blatant measures of discrimination. The Constitution of the American Railway Association, for instance, reveals that membership is limited to "any regular male railway clerk. . . . who is of the Caucasian race or a native American Indian. . . ."[42] Many unions, however, use more refined means of excluding Negroes. While they do not explicitly include a "restrictive" clause in their constitutions, their discrimination is no less complete. More sophisticated in their discrimination they employ an indirect, noncommittal means known as tacit consent. In other words, it is understood amongst the membership that Negroes have no place in their union. What is so nefarious about this practice is that the fact of exclusion is never mentioned in writing. In many instances discrimination takes refuge in certain technicalities relating to apprenticeship and licensing regulations, thus keeping Negroes at a distance. "The Plumbers and Steamfitters through a father-son apprenticeship system and a municipal licensing law have been able to exclude Negroes almost entirely from their unions."[43] A New York Times news release of 1936[44] affords a good example of "tacit consent" discrimination involving Local 3 of the IBEW. Following a successful strike at the Standard Equipment Company of Long Island City and a favorable union settlement, the Urban League of Greater New York charged Local 3 with refusal to accept as members Negroes who had joined the union's picket line. These craftsmen were requested to join the picket line and promised membership after the strike. The attorney for these Negroes contended that letters were sent to both the National Headquarters in Washington, D. C. and to Local 3 in New York requesting information as to why these Negroes were refused union membership. The president of Local 3 acknowledged receipt of such a letter and explained it away by saying that he had turned the matter over to the local's business agent. The latter thought it best to ignore it.

A logical consequence of union exclusion is to keep Negroes from jobs that would mean close contact between whites and Negroes even though a particular union may have no jurisdiction over these jobs. A case in point is that of G. A. Weston, referred to the Oil Transfer Company by the War Manpower Commission, (WMC) as a sea cook. Weston had some twenty-one years cooking experience at sea at the time of referral. He passed the company's physical examination and was told to report to the captain of the tugboat on which he was to work. After being refused permission to start his assignment, Weston reported back to the WMC, and the latter filed a complaint with the FEPC charging the company with discrimination in hiring. On February 14, 1945, the personnel manager of the Oil Transfer Company telephoned the FEPC's investigator and disclaimed any company responsibility for charges filed. Management reported that the captain of the tugboat was informed to place the new Negro cook. On the day Weston was hired, Captain Bradley, President of the International Longshoremen's Association, Marine Division, telephoned the company's personnel manager and specifically told him that the white crew would leave the boat if a Negro cook were imposed upon them.[45] There are at least five AFL craft unions which fall into the category of "Partial Restriction in Employment." Some of these unions have separate auxiliaries based on their by-laws, and others, like the Boilermakers, have separate auxiliaries for Negroes though no provision for this is made in their constitution. Two unions having separate auxiliaries in accord with their by-laws are (1) the International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Dropforgers, and Helpers Union,[46]

(2) the International Association of Sheet Metal Workers.[47] Article 28 of the Blacksmith's Constitution reads:

> Sec. 1. Where there are sufficient colored helpers an auxiliary is to be set up under the jurisdiction of a white local.
> Sec. 3. Members of auxiliary locals composed of colored helpers shall not transfer, except to another auxiliary local composed of colored members, and colored helpers will not be promoted to blacksmiths or helpers' apprentices and will not be permitted to shops where white helpers are not employed.[48]

An explicit example of a union which practices discrimination and yet has no constitutional provision providing for it is the Seafarers' International Union of North America. As late as 1944 this union maintained two hiring halls, one for Negroes and the other for whites.[49] Although one hiring hall is used now, Negroes are restricted to two occupations, that of fireman and steward. Firemen are restricted to coal burning vessels and stewards to all Negro sculleries.

Many statements attributed to John Hawk, secretary-treasurer of the SIU reveal partial restriction of Negro employment. Some of his alleged cases were found in a letter sent to C. S. Vincent, New York Regional Representative of the Recruitment and Manning operations of the War Shipping Administration (RMO) to the Washington Chief of RMO. A few pertinent sections from Mr. Vincent's letter to his superior are reproduced:

> On several occasions Mr. Hawk has called me to object to our policy of referring Negroes. . . .
> The SIU maintains in the port of New York, a separate department and dispatcher for Negro seamen. Negroes are assigned to ships by this union only in the Steward's Department, although only a fraction of the total number of ships for which they hold contracts carry an all-Negro Stewards department.
> On January 30, 1943, Mr. Hawk called me and stated: You are interfering with our hiring hall. . . . Mr. Hawk [also] stated that [neither] the President [of the United States] nor anyone else is going to tell men with whom they are going to live and to a seaman a ship is his home. . . .[50]

There is good reason to believe that no collusion between the union and various shipping concerns exists since there are at least ten letters on file sent to the union specifically stating that all hiring will be solely on the basis of qualifications, not color.[51]

There are several unions claiming Full Acceptance of Negro Membership, which on investigation were found to practice Preferential Placement in Employment of whites. One union segregated Negroes by circumscribing their employment opportunities to a fixed geoographic area. These procedures make full acceptance into the union nominal. In this category (Full Acceptance) there is a high correlation between hiring and refusal to upgrade. Thus Negroes are given openings but with qualifications that make them, in fact, an "inside outsider."

The Garage Car Washers and Cleaners Union as well as the Motion Picture Projectionists Union, Local 306, maintain a mixed membership with supposedly "equal occupational status" for all their members. Yet officials of the Car Washers Union were charged with consistently refusing to send out an unemployed Negro car washer on a job as long as any white union member was unemployed. This policy was followed regardless of Negroes' seniority on the union's job waiting list.[52] In 1938 the Motion Picture Projectionists Union Local 306 refused to accept qualified Negro projectionists seeking union membership. Persistent demands on the part of Negro union members finally brought a partial change in the official policy toward Negro membership. At that time fifteen nonunion projectionists, all employed in Harlem, sought membership in the union. Nine were accepted on the condition that three of them relinquish their jobs to white men. If the proposal were accepted, out of the fifteen Negroes applying, nine would be without jobs, since nine would acquire membership, but three of the nine would give up jobs and the other six would be left without jobs or union affiliation.[53]

In addition to preferential placement of whites the Motion Picture Projectionists Union permits segregation in employment, all their Negro members being restricted to Harlem.[54] Two other unions practice this type of segregation by sanctioning separate locals for white and colored. These are the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America and the International Longshoremen's Association.

When first organized, shortly after World War I, Local 1888 of the Carpenters Union contained a mixed membership. Shortly after its inception all white members of this local transferred to other white locals in the city, creating an all-Negro local. To maintain this segregated local, all Negroes applying to the Brotherhood of Carpenters are referred to Local 1888.[55] Each local's members depend upon employment in the area assigned to them by the New York Carpenters District Council. All New York locals must belong.[56] Since Local 1888 is in Harlem and its geographic jurisdiction is confined to this area, Negroes must be content with whatever employment this area affords them. (There is one exception—other locals can call upon Local 1888 if there is a shortage of mechanics in their local). F. Peterson sums up the general attitude of the carpenters towards Negro employment in the following: "The carpenters and painters usually admit them [Negroes] into separate locals and sometimes allow them to accept employment only under Negro contractors."[57]

Following the 1899 waterfront strike, the Italian local of the ILA began to accept Negroes into the union.[58] This did not mean that Negroes were to obtain equal opportunity in employment—assignment to specific wharves as is the accepted practice.[59] E. F. Frazier[60] stresses this point, and as recently as 1945 the problem continued to exist. In 1944 Northrup disclosed that the ILS's Constitution made no mention of spatial limitation with respect to the employment of Negroes on the waterfront; still the bulk of colored longshoremen are confined to one Brooklyn local. Although union officials are on record as opposed to discrimination in employment based on color, there is no evidence that they have taken steps to remedy the situation.[61]

At this point in our story, 1945, it may be expedient to summarize union racial policies in outline form including locals that practiced discrimination against Negroes:

A. Unions excluding Negroes by constitutional provision:[62]

1. A. F. of L. Affiliates:
   American Railway Association; Commercial Telegraphers Union, Local 16, Brokers Division, Marine Division, Telegraph Division; National Organization of Masters, Mates, Pilots, Local 88; Order of Switchmen's Union of North America, Railroad Telegraphers; Wire Weavers Protective Association.

2. Unaffiliated Organizations:
   Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood Railroad Trainsmen, Brotherhood of Railway Conductors, Order of Train Dispatchers' Association, American Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, International Association of Machinists—District 15; Brooklyn Metal Trades Council, Local 132; Field Constuction Lodge, Local 295.[63] Marine Firemen, Oilers and Water Tenders, and Wipers Association of the Pacific.[64]

B. Unions excluding Negroes by tacit consent:

1. A. F. of L. Affiliates:
   Asbestos Workers, Heat and Frost Insulators, Local 12; International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 3 and Local 277; Marine Electrical Workers; Plumbers and Steamfitters, Locals 1, and 2 and Local 374; Brooklyn and Queens County Plumbers Apprentices, Local 638; Enterprise Association of Steamfitters, Local 639; Steamfitters' Helpers' Local 711 of the Brooklyn Navy Yard; Sheet Metal Workers, Local 28.

C. Unions affording Negroes only segregated or auxiliary status:

1. A. F. of L. Affiliates:
   Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Dropforgers and Helpters, Local 639; Steamfitters' Helpers, Local 711 of Shipbuilders, Welders and Helpers, Locals 2, 21, 43, and 200.[65] Seafarers' International Union of North America; Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees; Brotherhood of Express Division and New York Central System; Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees.

D. Unions nominally affording Negroes "equal status":

1. A. F. of L. Affiliates:
   Motion Picture Projectionists, Local 306; Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America; International Association of Longshoremen; International Ladies Garment Workers, Local 10.[66]

Of course there are many other AFL craft unions that do grant equal status and opportunity in employment to Negroes. Some unions impose a fine of one hundred dollars on any member who violates this principle. Two examples of unions whose constitutions contain such a clause are the Bricklayers, Masons, and Plasterers' Union, and the Operative Plasterers and Cement Finishers' Union.[67] Generally speaking, CIO affiliates are more considerate towards Negroes in the field of equal employment opportunity, since they are developed more along the lines of industrial unionism and frequently accept the philosophy of "social unionism."[68]

Summing up the over-all situation we find that prior to the formation of national labor unions, Negro economic mobility was mainly limited by public and employer prejudice. After the formation of national unions and the subsequent formation into one federation, conscious steps were taken by the unions to institutionalize Negro subordination. To reiterate: These unions were not acting with any special malice toward Negroes; they merely accepted and helped to crystallize social subordination as an economic weapon to maintain and raise their members' economic security and general socioeconomic status in society. They transferred societal prejudice and restricted social status to the industrial sphere limiting Negroes' occupational status to conform to their social status in society. This was economic preservation in a society beset with cyclical fluctuations. Fewer eligibles for the upper occupational strata make for greater bargaining power with respect to wages,[69] and also more regular work for the elite. Union discriminatory measures consistently prevent the Negro from acquiring the requisite skill to compete for mechanics' jobs. Ultimately low occupational status acts to reinforce the white man's rationalized superiority.

Were Negroes for one reason or another able to acquire some skill, even then they are barred from employment by use of the closed shop, and their failure to obtain a license bars them from going into business for themselves. The threat to liberal employers that white co-workers would leave their benches again closes the door to Negroes seeking to learn an apprenticeship trade. Constantly harassed by union subordination, Negroes remain outsiders in the craft labor movement. Although time has brought some amelioration, it is superficial, since Negroes are granted only auxiliary status, again manifesting and maintaining existing social prejudice. The AFL's failure to deal with the problem was recently told by George Meany, President of the AFL-CIO, when he requested a United States Fair Employment Law to deal with the problem.[70] Correspondingly, Negroes' wages are commensurate with their occupational status and a direct counterpart of their social position in the occupational hierarchy. Together, lowest wages and the lowest occupational status constantly remind them of their general status in society.

Is Labor Color-Blind?

by HARRY FLEISCHMAN

"WHO THE HELL appointed you the guardian of all the Negroes in America?" This outraged shout from George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, expressed his resentment recently over repeated attempts by A. Philip Randolph, the merged labor movement's only Negro vice-president, to speed all phases of the campaign to end discrimination in AFL-CIO unions. But the acrimonious debates on the issue (there were three at the San Francisco convention) do not mean that the AFL-CIO will go slow on ending Jim Crow practices. The pressure generated there will instead keep the drive alive.

Meany's denunciation of Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, followed Randolph's insistence that the AFL-CIO should not permit the continued existence of long-established segregated locals, even where Negro members wanted to keep them. It was not logical, insisted the Porters' president, to allow AFL-CIO unions to maintain Jim Crow locals "merely because the members want it" any more than it would be permissible to keep in the AFL-CIO communist-dominated unions or unions under gangster influence if the members wanted such unions.

First blood on the issue was drawn when Randolph urged that the return of the International Longshoremen's Association to the AFL-CIO should be conditioned on the elimination of alleged discriminatory practices against Negro and Puerto Rican workers on the New York waterfront. While Joe Curran of the National Maritime Union and Paul Hall of the Seafarers disputed Randolph's charges, they pledged full cooperation in ending any discrimination that may still remain.

Randolph's resolution to oust the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen unless they eliminate their constitutional bans on Negro members within six months provided the next test. The resolutions committee proposed a substitute which acknowledged the failure of the two unions concerned to live up to their pledges to eliminate the color bar. It ordered the executive council to keep pressing the unions to erase their color bars, but set no time limit.

Randolph made a brilliant speech in which he stressed that it was inconsistent to expel the Teamsters for corruption while keeping unions that violated the AFL-CIO's own constitutional ban on racial discrimination. The color bar in any union, he contended, was a symbol of second-class citizenship which made a mockery of trade union morality.

Meany replied with a conciliatory but strong defense of the AFL-CIO's record in removing discriminatory practices. In the twenty years since he had become secretary-treasurer of the old AFL, he noted, the number of unions with color bars had dropped from twenty to three.

For the first time at an AFL-CIO convention, the presidents of the two rail unions, William P. Kennedy of the Trainmen and H. E. Gilbert of the Firemen and Enginemen, pledged to bend every effort to eliminate the color line in their unions. The resolutions committee report was adopted.

At a post-convention meeting, the AFL-CIO executive council acted to heal the stings left by the debates. James B. Carey, president of the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, who had supported Meany in the debate against expelling the rail unions, proposed that the compliance subcommittee of the AFL-CIO's Civil Rights Committee—which polices the constitutional anti-bias guarantees—be made up exclusively of AFL-CIO vice presidents to give its recommendations greater weight. Meany promised to consider ways of strengthening the enforcement arm.

HARRY FLEISCHMAN, director of the National Labor Service, is co-author of a recent study of racial discrimination in the trade union movement.

Randolph, whose earlier success in winning a wartime Fair Employment Practices Commission from President Roosevelt was the result of the same bulldog determination, courage, and pressure, voiced confidence after the council meeting that the AFL-CIO would now proceed more vigorously in wiping out racial discrimination. He emphasized that there was no difference between him and Meany on "ultimate objectives" but solely on the pace of the anti-bias fight.

How fast has that pace been and how fast is it now likely to change? The answer depends on one's vantage point. Certainly labor has made enormous strides in breaking down many of the barriers to job equality of workers of all races, creeds and national origins. And, just as certainly, labor still has a long way to go before full equality prevails in all unions.

Ever since the first national labor federation was founded in 1866, racial equality has been official policy as the top level of organized labor. But policy is not practice, and until the 1930's, discrimination against Negroes by individual unions and by rank-and-file members was the rule rather than the exception. As late as 1928 the National Urban League reported only 86,000 Negro members in 75 unions.

While the prejudice that prevailed in many skilled craft unions spilled over into the mass production industries, the insatiable demand of these industries for more and more labor at the cheapest possible price led them to open the gates, first for immigrant groups and then for Negro workers. Unions organizing industries on an industrial basis soon recognized the need to win these workers in order to create effective collective bargaining muscle. Thus, when the Congress of Industrial Organizations was formed in 1935 to stimulate industrial unionism, it welcomed into membership workers of every creed, color, and nationality on the nation's assembly lines.

The combination of the Wagner Act of 1935 and the formation of the CIO led to sensational gains for labor and a doubling and redoubling of labor's membership within ten years. The CIO welcomed Negroes on organizing committees, as picket line captains, and in leadership positions. Sons of Negro steel men who had been strikebreakers in 1918 became volunteer union organizers in 1936. Many AFL unions, witnessing the victorious surge of industrial unionism, adopted the same techniques. Negro membership in the unions zoomed to between one and a half and two millions.

FEPC and the need for full production in World War II's manpower crisis gave additional stimulus to making increased use of Negro workers and eased their entrance into unions as well as defense factories.

At the AFL-CIO merger convention in 1955, the delegates unanimously adopted a resolution for "equal rights for all, regardless of race, color, creed, or national origin." A Civil Rights Committee was set up to implement this policy. Affiliated unions were urged to include anti-discrimination clauses in every collective bargaining agreement, safeguarding workers against discrimination in hiring, upgrading, layoffs, promotions, training, apprenticeship, and transfers.

But official policies of top bodies are not necessarily transformed into local action. Democratic and Republican national conventions have repeatedly gone on record for Fair Employment Practice laws, yet no such bill has been passed. All the major religious denominations inveigh strongly against segregation, yet many a minister ruefully concedes that eleven o'clock Sunday morning is the nation's most segregated hour of the week. Unions, too, are faced with the problem of closing the gap between policies and practices.

In many instances Southern labor has been a victim of the tensions generated by race conflict. Many Southern employers, eager to keep their white workers out of unions, frequently manipulate the race issue in a variety of ways. If the union comes in, they say, whites will lose jobs to Negroes. The appeal of one "Loyal Employes Committee" neatly combines sexual and economic fears:

"We do not believe in mixing the races. We would hate to see colored supervisors and foremen over white girls in Southern plants. We would hate to see ten per cent of the present Chicopee employees fired and their places filled with Negroes simply because about ten per cent of the local population is colored."

In New Albany, Mississippi, the Upholsterers International Union attributed its defeat in a furniture plant to White Citizens Council activity. The UIU charged that the Council got members of the high school football team to distribute literature about Negro activities in the union. Inside the plant, a company foreman posted pictures of Negroes at a union convention. Beside the pictures, a crudely lettered poster asked: "DO YOU WANT NIGGERS REPRESENTING YOU? THEN VOTE 'NO' TODAY!"

At the Jefferson Mills in Pulaski, Virginia, the company distributed to all the workers an eight-page tabloid with a front-page streamer in bold black letters: "THE TWUA WILL 'BENEFIT' YOU BY DESTROYING ALL SEGREGATION IN THE SOUTH." The back page said: "IF you don't want your children in an integrated school; IF you don't want the Textile Union's New York bosses to integrate you; IF you don't want your wife or daughter in 'mixed' meetings: VOTE AGAINST THE TWUA EVERY CHANCE YOU GET." The use of such race hate material has become a common—and frequently successful—management practice in the South.

Rank and file union members themselves are not immune to racist propaganda. Membership applications for White Citizens Councils have been solicited in some Southern union halls. A survey of Southern local unions made for the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department in 1957 disclosed that some two-thirds of all local unions in the South are bi-racial, that a substantial number of these bi-racial locals have at least one Negro officer, and that approximately half have at least one Negro shop steward. But the same survey revealed that the methods most commonly used in those locals to deal with conflicts on the race question are to sidetrack them, rule them out of order, insist that this is not labor's business.

One of the major factors creating extensive difficulties is the problem of caste. Harry Golden, author of the best-selling Only in America and an acute observer of the Southern scene, relates the story of an unauthorized strike about four years ago by white women spinners at the Dan River Mills in Virginia. The mills employed Negro women as lap-haulers to hand the raw material to the spinners. They touched hands constantly, worked closely together, and the relationship was always good. Then management wanted some new spinners, so they chose a few lap-haulers who had been there twenty years. The white spinners went on strike, using stereotyped excuses such as body odor. As spinners, Golden points out, the Negro women would have been in a building a quarter of a mile away. The white spinners would have been completely separated from the Negro, but the white women nevertheless went on strike. As lap-haulers, working body-to-body, racial contact was all right, but as spinners—with equal status—it was offensive.

Obviously, with situations so tense and emotions so explosive, any action is feared. Yet inaction is hardly a solution. At best it only postpones the problem. Frequently, bottling it up only makes it explode later with a bigger bang.

To help unions solve these problems, Jim Rorty and I wrote a pamphlet for the National Labor Service, We Open the Gates: Labor's Fight for Equality, a series of case studies that accentuated the positive in labor's campaigns, both North and South, against racial and religious job discrimination. We viewed it as a kind of do-it-yourself handbook for local union and community leaders. The survey was described editorially by the New York Times as "a refreshing antidote to the poisonous diet of racial prejudice which the public has to take in the news these days."

In the South, the International Union of Electrical Workers has gained 25,000 new Southern members in the last few years despite opposition from the White Citizens Councils—which have tried to convince Southern workers that the union would back Negroes over whites.

In one Mississippi town, just a few months ago, the Rubber Workers organized a large plant and won a union contract. And there, in the heart of the Delta where the White Citizens Councils hold sway, the local has a white president, a Negro vice president, an integrated executive board, and holds integrated union meetings.

In Charlotte, North Carolina, when garbage workers went on strike and contacted the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, the segregationist United Southern Employees Association moved in with the avowed purpose of running the AFL-CIO union out of the South. Instead a whirlwind AFL-CIO organizing drive enrolled 500 city employees. At the charter meeting for the new union, members of the Durham, North Carolina, local told the Charlotte city workers about their successful desegregated union. The Durham unionists explained that their union was first organized into two segregated locals. When they proved ineffective in collective bargaining, the two locals voted to merge into "one big union"—which has since won many gains.

In Louisiana, the state AFL-CIO council refused to knuckle under to the pressure of the White Citizens Council and the Ku Klux Klan, which condemned the state council for electing as one of its vice presidents E. A. Bryant, a leader of the NAACP and the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters.

When the upgrading of a Negro to the tire-building department caused a wildcat walkout at the General Tire plant in Waco, Texas, the local's white officers told the international officers of the United Rubber Workers, "We can handle it ourselves." And handle it they did, despite threatening letters from the Ku Klux Klan and gloomy predictions that the officers faced certain defeat in the next union election. Within two days, the rebels were back at work side by side with the Negro worker whose promotion they had protested. There were no more incidents.

In Birmingham, Alabama, a so-called "Southern Aircraft Workers Union" challenged the right of UAW Local 1155 to represent the workers of the Hayes Aircraft Company. When a few White Citizens Council members circulated a petition to oust the UAW, the UAW local answered with a sharply worded leaflet exposing the phony union's anti-labor background. As a result of the UAW's activities, the "Southern Aircraft Workers Union" withdrew its petition.

A factor which complicates the job of providing equality of economic opportunity for all workers in Southern plants is the reluctance of many Northern-based managements to violate segregationist patterns.

An executive of General Motors was quoted in the Wall Street Journal of October 24, 1957, as having said: "When we moved into the South, we agreed to abide by local custom and not hire Negroes for production work. This is no time for social reform in that area and we are not about to try it." Aside from the moral implications of such a position, it is clear that most Southern branches of Northern corporations are willing to use the "local custom" excuse as a blind for opposition to trade unions. A local union, divided along racial lines, is conceded to be a good deal weaker and less militant than one where job opportunities are completely open. So long as any corporation, for whatever reasons, adheres to the present policy in the South, the task of providing full job opportunity is made enormously more difficult.

The Switchmen's Union of North America petitioned the National Mediation Board in 1955 for the right to represent the operating employees of the Central Railroad of Georgia. There were 234 whites and 120 Negroes among the 354 employees eligible to vote in the election. Over a hundred Negroes were members of the Provisional Committee for the Organization of Colored Locomotive Firemen, and there was no doubt that their votes would swing the election. Back in 1950, the Switchmen's Union had dropped the color bar from its constitution. It was ready to assure Negro switchmen and brakemen the equality denied them by other brotherhoods, including unsegregated meetings.

A series of historic meetings between white representatives of the Switchmen's Union and colored members of the Provisional Committee were held in Macon, Savannah, Atlanta, and Columbus. Together, they ironed out a cooperative agreement and made plans for a widespread organizing drive. Seven months later, the Switchmen's Union of North America, winning the election by a comfortable margin, became one of the official bargaining agents of operating employees on the Central Railroad of Georgia. For the first time, Negroes became members of one of the big five operating rail unions.

Even in the building trades, there are some signs of progress. For instance, Chicago Plumbers Local 130 recently appointed a Negro business agent, Edward L. Doty.

The International Association of Machinists several years ago began to integrate its Negro and white locals and to open up its apprenticeship training program to young Negroes. Carl Yeldell, labor secretary of the Urban League, points out, "The apprenticeship program is the heart of the matter. Most apprenticeship programs are used by unions in the skilled trades as a device for barring Negroes. But the IAM has opened the doors to a substantial number of young Negroes."

When Local 38 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers defied the Cleveland Community Relations Board and refused to let a qualified Negro electrician into the union, the complaint was brought, through the AFL-CIO's civil rights department, to George Meany. He met with IBEW president Gordon Freeman. Freeman told the local it could either comply with the AFL-CIO's anti-discrimination pledge or give up its charter. It yielded, and accepted four Negro members. Moreover. the IBEW convention last October in Cleveland adopted a resolution pledging that "it be the enduring goal of our Brotherhood to assure to all workers their full share of the benefits of union organization without regard to race, creed, color, or national origin."

Similarly, when Local 8 of the Bricklayers in Milwaukee refused to admit two qualified Negroes, the Wisconsin Industrial Commission went into court to force the local to open its doors to Negroes. The court held the Commission's rulings unenforceable under existing law. Nevertheless, the AFL-CIO civil rights committee, in cooperation with international officials of the Bricklayers union, persuaded Local 8 to reverse its policy.

The NAACP filed complaints with the President's Committee on Government Contracts to eliminate dual lines of promotion, one for whites and one for Negroes, in Southwestern oil refineries. This system had kept Negroes boxed in unskilled jobs. The NAACP victory in this case was due largely to the cooperation of O. A. Knight, president of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers Union. "The union," reports NAACP labor secretary Herbert Hill, "was the decisive force."

Another NAACP complaint of employment bias dealt with the hiring policies of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company. Here the AFL-CIO's civil rights department, working with the national officers of the Communications Workers of America and the President's Committee on Government Contracts, persuaded the company to hire Negroes as telephone and teletype operators and to run its training program without bias, and urged the local union to accept these Negroes as members.

The NAACP is not unmindful of such victories for equality. But it charges that the AFL-CIO committee just waits for complaints and then moves too slowly. Moreover, it insists, some AFL-CIO unions which have eliminated constitutional provisions limiting membership to white persons nevertheless continue to bar Negroes by tacit agreement. In other cases, Negro membership is limited to segregated locals.

According to the NAACP, the worst offenders named in complaints filed with it by Negro workers in the North as well as in the South are the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Plumbers, Hod Carriers, Painters, Sheet Metal Workers, Carpenters, Plasterers, Operating Engineers, Boilermakers, Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Railway Carmen, Maintenance of Way Employes, Railroad Telegraphers, Communications Workers, Papermakers and Paperworkers, and Pulp and Sulphite Workers.

Ironically, the NAACP noted, "because of the 'lily-white' exclusion policies of Local 26 IBEW and other building trades unions in Washington, D.C., Negro mechanics were barred from employment in the construction of the AFL-CIO national headquarters building, and today Negro workers are denied job opportunities in major public and private construction installations in the nation's capital."

One reason for increased complaints by Negroes is the fact that traditionally Negroes are the last to be hired and the first to be fired. They have been particularly hard hit by the recession. Last March one out of every seven Negroes was jobless compared to one out of 14 whites. In good times and bad, the rate of Negro unemployment tends to run double that of whites.

The NAACP wants "vigorous action" and has proposed the following program for the AFL-CIO:

One—Eliminate all segregated locals. Conduct a survey and then issue an AFL-CIO executive council order requiring amalgamation or elimination of such locals within a stated period of time. The NAACP offers its technical assistance to international unions to carry out this policy.

Two—End racial seniority lines in union contracts. Call upon all international unions to establish a fundamental policy of refusing to ratify any collective bargaining agreements with separate racial seniority lines.

Three—Prevent exclusion practices. Elimination of "lily-white" exclusion clauses is not enough. All steps to prevent Negroes from membership should be barred and action taken against unions such as the Brotherhood of Firemen and Enginemen which have recently defended in the federal courts their "right" to exclude Negroes.

Four—Liaison with state and city FEPC's. Have the AFL-CIO civil rights department establish a working relationship with state and local fair employment practice commissions and with the President's Committee on Government Contracts so that it can intervene immediately when a case is filed with these agencies against an AFL-CIO affiliate.

While some AFL-CIO leaders have resented the pressure the NAACP has exerted, they are mindful of the cooperation the NAACP gave in defeating "right to work" proposals in California, Ohio, and other states. Despite attempts by "right to work" advocates to woo Negro support on the grounds that such laws would combat Jim Crow practices in unions, the NAACP countered by showing that most "right to work" states were in the South, where Negroes suffered extreme discrimination. AFL-CIO leaders, reared in the school of practical politics, concede that the NAACP is entitled to consideration in response to its active support of labor's political program.

Moreover, union leaders in many cases are grateful for pressure by the NAACP, the President's Committee on Government Contracts, state FEP bodies, or other outside agencies. This gives them a chance to tell their rank and file, "We've got to obey the law. We have to go along with this anti-discrimination policy. There's nothing we can do about it." It is frequently easier for such leaders (who are usually elected officials governed by political considerations) to get compliance with civil rights policies as fellow victims rather than as strong advocates.

At a meeting last spring between AFL-CIO and NAACP officials, both organizations agreed to cooperate more closely to win "full civil rights for all Americans both within and without the labor movement."

NAACP executive secretary Roy Wilkins was satisfied with the results of the meeting, termed it "a step in the right direction," and called attention to an interesting sidelight. Since this year is the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the NAACP, it has been reviewing its records. One outstanding fact, noted Wilkins, has been the tremendous change in the image of the labor movement in the minds of Negroes. Where, 40 years ago, most Negroes viewed the labor movement as an instrument to discriminate against Negroes, Negroes now overwhelmingly see labor as a natural—if too hesitant—ally in the fight for civil rights.

What then is the answer to the question, "How color-blind is labor?" Labor has made enormous strides in the past 25 years. But not enough. Yet a hopeful pattern appears to be emerging. The pull of labor's own ideals, outweighing some of its inertia and past discriminatory traditions, combined with the push of Negro prodding may make an effective team to bring the day of equality ever closer.

SKILLED TRADES GUIDE

I. THE PROBLEM

A) The projected national employment picture through 1970 indicates that there will be proportionately fewer workers required to produce goods and more workers needed to provide trade, finance, insurance and real estate, personal and business services. Negroes and Puerto Ricans are employed predominantly in the declining industries. Construction work will increase, while farm employment will continue to decline. Manufacturing will have less than average growth. Specifically this means: rapid growth in white-collar occupations -- professional, technical, clerical and sales workers; managers, officials and proprietors; smaller growth in blue-collar occupations--craftsmen, and foremen (high growth for pattern makers, tool and die makers, lithographers, brick layers, operating engineers, sheet metal workers, plumbers and electricians), (low demand for paperhangers, painters, bakers and railroad workers), and decline in industrial laborers; above average opportunities for service workers in trade, finance, insurance and real estate and personal business services.

B) Nationally there is a significant shortage in the available supply of skilled manpower, especially in the areas of high demand indicated in A. Among the causes of this shortage are population growth and resultant increased needs, decline in number of the population in the prime work age group (25-44) and increase in age ranges 5-24 and 45 and older, introduction of new fabricating processes and application of automation and other advanced techniques to industry, displacing unskilled and semi-skilled workers and requiring greater operating and servicing skills, decline in immigration to U.S., attrition of skilled craftsmen due to death, retirement and geographical and occupational changes and the inadequacy of existing training systems in the United States.

C) Apprenticeship is the prime mode of training future skilled craftsmen. Greater use of automatic machinery requires more technical know-how and versatility, thus deemphasizing and making impractical existing informal training methods.

D) Because Negroes and Puerto Ricans are an important source of labor supply in urban industrial centers and they are concentrated in greater numerical proportion than whites in the prime work age group of 25-44, they are a significant source for relieving the skilled manpower shortage. However, non-whites have not been used historically in large numbers in the skilled trades and are today frequently barred from developing such skills because of discriminatory practices.

E) Today, Negroes and Puerto Ricans are not employed significantly in skilled-craft occupations. They are disproportionately concentrated in unskilled and semi-skilled categories in which job opportunities generally are decreasing. Thus, the differential between white and colored workers is being perpetuated and may become greater unless immediate effective action is taken.

SKILLED TRADES GUIDE

INTRODUCTION

CORE has traditionally been and continues to be in sympathy with the basic goals of the trade union movement -- economic and social advancement for all workers, black and white. Where Negroes and other minority group workers have been organized on an integrated basis, the result has been material betterment for the Negro and a stronger union.

However, we are concerned with the difference between the stated goal and the reality for minority group workers. Discrimination exists in the form of segregated locals, membership exclusion clauses, separate seniority lines, and limiting job assignments for Negro workers, particularly among the building crafts, printing trades, transportation and metal crafts industries.

Examples of major breakthroughs achieved recently in New York City are:

1) 130 of 300 apprentices in plumbing industry are Negro and Puerto Rican;

2) 5 out of 15 graduates of the International Typographers Union are nonwhite;

3) Over 300 Negro and Puerto Rican applicants were sent to a new apprenticeship program instituted in Local 3 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers by CORE, the NAACP, Negro American Labor Council and the Urban League.

Our aim is to make a reality for nonwhite workers the benefits of trade unionism and pressure those derelict individual unions into insuring a democratic labor union for all workers.

F) A major reason for the lack of Negro and Puerto Rican craftsmen is the closing of apprenticeship opportunities to nonwhite youth. Associated factors are the decline of craft opportunities for Negroes in the South and the traditional discriminatory practices of craft unions, especially the building trades, transportation and printing industry and in tool and die and related metal crafts.

G) Factors influencing exclusion of Negroes from formal training programs in the skilled trades, all of which are not specifically anti- Negro are:

1. Because of a standing historical pattern of discrimination, Negro youth are not presented with skilled Negro role models (parent, relative or neighbor who is skilled craftsman), for identification.

2. Other influences are: Lack of understanding of industrial environment (procedure for applying for apprenticeship, qualifications for apprenticeship) poor and ill-informed vocational guidance.

3. Consequently, large sections of Negro and other minority group youth lack adequate preparation for those skilled training opportunities that are open to them.

4. The informal and haphazard recruitment procedure, with exception of large industrial plants, results in general lack of knowledge of apprenticeship openings. To date, management, labor and government have condoned informal arrangements whereby apprenticeship opportunities are limited to offspring, relatives or friends. As a result, many programs in this area of employment are characterized by "nepotism" and "cronyism."

5. With relatively few apprenticeship openings and an over-abundant supply of white applicants some Negroes will not be hired.

6. Because of residential segregation some apprentice opportunities are closed to Negroes by geographical location.

7. Some ambitious nonwhites will not be motivated to enter the field because of the general low-prestige of manual labor in American society and a desire to escape the family background of "blue-collar" employment.

8. Other minority group youth will reject apprenticeship because of the long training period with no immediate substantial economic gain. Emerging from a background of poverty, a large portion of the Negro labor force will accept less mobile unskilled or semi-skilled jobs to satisfy immediate economic needs and wants.

B) There are and will be significant numbers of Negro and other minority group youth who are qualified and will apply for admission into certified apprenticeship programs. They are then confronted with the problem of racial discrimination overtly or covertly, North and South, by unions and management often with the indirect sanction of federal and state government by the following means:

1. Discriminatory application of objective standards to Negro and white applicants; non-communication of management policy to subordinate personnel, apprenticeship recruitment from sources least likely to produce Negro applicants.

2. Motivations for discriminatory practices in the skilled trades vary:

a) Management may in fact believe that Negroes have undesirable characteristics for skilled positions, fear placing Negroes in public contact positions and may not want nonwhites to gain experience or training which may lead to positions of authority in the lower ranks of the industrial hierarchy.

b) Unions may reject Negroes because of real or fancied membership opposition, intra-union power considerations (leadership retention) desire to maintain control of labor supply, and uncontested autonomy of prejudiced local union officials operating contrary to stated international union policy. There prevails in some locals a caste psychology by which some workers think of their jobs as "white men's jobs," to which no Negro should aspire.

c) State governments may subsidize and assist discriminatory apprenticeship programs.

II. OPENING OPPORTUNITIES

A. The aid of social service agencies, vocational guidance counselors, teachers and ministers in both the Negro and white community should be enlisted to direct nonwhite youth toward skilled-craft training and employment.

B) Determine what firms (including government agencies and installations) are the major employers of manpower in your community, e.g., largest 5 or 10? What are the employment practices of each as to his use of Negroes? Excluded? Unrestricted use? Use in traditional Negro categories? Other practices?

1. Public or Private Ownership: If public, is it operated by the Federal Government, State, City, or County? joint relationship: Federal-State, City-County, or other types of relationship. If private, does it have a contract with the Federal Government to furnish goods or services?

2. Size of establishment, number of employees, turnover in employees, volume of sales or product output?

3. Part of chain or single unit firm?

4. Scale of production: Labor-capital ratio; distribution of labor force by occupational level; assembly line vs. custom precision technique of production?

C) Determine who specifically are the major parties (Employer, Employees, Customers) in a given firm and what information about each may be helpful in plotting the course of your merit employment program?

1. General reputation of employer in community

2. Response of employees and customers to merit hiring program particularly picketing or boycott

D) What are the possible sources of redress in case of discrimination by any of the parties -- present and future?

1. Agencies with operating staffs and resources

2. Local organizations and Agencies

3. Laws -- federal, state, city

E) What important resources (organizations, individuals, financial backing, etc.) are there in your community that are working or may be motivated to work for full employment of Negroes on basis of merit (predominantly Negro; Bi-racial or predominantly white in membership, outlook and program.)

F) To which major areas of activity listed below can various groups significantly contribute in achieving the employment of Negroes on basis of the merit of each applicant (capacity, qualification, seniority in some cases?)

1. Strengthen old and create strong and valid new incentives (motivation) to maximum effort and a high level of achievement among Negro (youth) for education for future employment at its highest capacity; and in fostering the full utilization in present employment of qualified Negro workers at their highest skills.

2. Pre-employment training for future employment: Increase the quality, quantity, and diversification of educational opportunity available by strengthening the educational establishments, (facilities, personnel, and equipment) now open to Negro students and by fostering their non-discriminatory access to such establishments (educational institutions, training facilities of employers and/or unions) now closed to them by law, custom, defiance of law, or inertia. Such new opportunities should include equality of access to financial aid and educational subsidy -- scholarships, trainee wages for in-plant training, reduced tuition fees to in-state or-city students of public educational institutions.

3. Strengthen present employment and utilization practices on merit.

III. DIRECT ACTION PROCEDURE

A) Determine whether basic responsibility rests with union or management in order to best focus action.

B) Negotiations with those you believe to be responsible. These should be detailed good-faith negotiations but should not be so delayed as to miss entrance deadlines.

C) Picketing of responsible hiring party -- union or firm -- to assess reaction and possible support from other workers and surrounding community. Informal talks, surveys and leaflets may be used to this end.

D) Sit-ins may be used in employment office of management or appropriate union headquarters.

E) Make sure press knows nature of discrimination and history of CORE negotiations.

F) Keep the Program and Community Relations Departments informed of your progress in this vital area.

MEMORANDUM No. 1 July 25, 1963

TO: Cooperating Organizations

FROM: Arnold Aronson, Secretary

Implementing the decision of the July 2 meeting in New York, we have opened a Washington office to serve as headquarters for the campaign to effect the passage by this Congress of the strongest possible civil rights bill. Our address is Room 314, Mills Building, 704 17th Street, N. W. We owe special thanks to the Industrial Union Department of the AFL-CIO, which has made this office space available.

Although we are still moving in office furniture and recruiting staff we have begun to hold legislative strategy meetings involving the legislative representatives of the cooperating organizations. About forty organizations have been represented at our first two meetings. These sessions will be held weekly; oftener if that appears necessary. Clarence Mitchell, Director of the Washington Bureau of the NAACP, is serving as chairman of the legislative committee. If your organization has a legislative representative in Washington, please let us have his name and address so that we can invite him to future meetings.

This is the present legislative situation:

The House Judiciary Committee under the chairmanship of Rep. Emanuel Celler (D., N.Y.) is scheduled to terminate its hearings by August 2. Mr. Celler has announced he will hold night sessions if necessary to complete hearings by that date. Since there is little likelihood that the House itself will strengthen a civil rights bill on the floor and even less likelihood that the Senate will go beyond the House, the ultimate shape of the legislation will be determined in large measure by what the Judiciary Committee does. It is essential, therefore, that the bill be reported out of the committee in the strongest possible form. Present reports indicate that opponents of effective

Letters to Committee members should call for support of the President's total civil rights package plus:

1. An "across the board Part III" authorizing the Attorney General to bring injunctive suits in all civil rights violations (the Administration bill authorizes such suits only with respect to school desegregation);

2. A full FEPC with enforcement powers (the Administration bill is limited to firms holding government contracts);

3. Coverage of all places of public accommodation, regardless of size (the Administration bill lends itself to the possibility of exempting smaller businesses);

4. Recognition that a sixth grade education is conclusive proof of sufficient literacy to vote in both state and federal elections (the bill considers a sixth grade education presumptive proof and this would apply on to federal contests); and,

5. A requirement that school districts begin complying with the Supreme Court's school decisions in 1963, as promised in the Democratic platform.

Please send us copies of any replies you receive.

These other Committee hearings are now in progress:

1. Senate Commerce Committee, under the chairmanship of Senator Warren Magnuson (D., Wash.) is still holding hearings on a bill (S.1732) to prohibit discrimination in places of public accommodation.

2. Senate Labor Subcommittee on Employment and Manpower, under the chairmanship of Senator Joseph Clark (D., Pa.) has just begun hearings on Fair Employment Practices legislation and hopes to complete them in a week.

3. Senate Judiciary Committee, whose chairman is Sen. James O. Eastland (D., Miss.) is conducting hearings on the Administration's omnibus civil rights measure (S.1731).

Since the Commerce Committee and Labor Subcommittee both have friendly majorities our legislative representatives suggest that organizations not prolong these hearings by seeking to present oral testimony. Written statements are enough. Eastland can be expected to try to use delaying tactics and so his hearings can be used to some extent as a forum for the views of organizations supporting civil rights legislation. However, these organizations should not contribute to prolonging the hearings and should make that point clear in any requests to testify.

At the strategy meeting on July 24, a spokesman for Rep. James Roosevelt (D., Calif) appeared and asked the help of all the groups represented in using the very difficult Calendar Wednesday technique for bringing the Congressman's FEPC bill to the House floor for a vote. It is generally agreed it cannot be brought out through regular procedures.

But several representatives were reluctant to use this "last ditch tactic" so early in the fight. Some felt that because of the complexity of using the procedure, the effort could misfire and that could have an adverse effect on the omnibus civil rights bill. However, final decision on this matter was reserved for the next meeting.

The Washington Post for July 15, in a special opinion poll by Louis Harris, reports favorable public reaction to the President's recommendations.

Because of the importance of the debate on whether prohibitions against discrimination in places of public accommodation should be based on the Fourteenth Amendment or the Commerce Clause of the Constitution, we enclose a discussion of this matter by Joseph Rauh.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Washington _____ The Leadership Conference on Civil Rights today sent the following telegram to all members of the House Judiciary Committee, to the President and to the U. S. Attorney General:

On behalf of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, its cooperating organizations and their many millions of members, I wish to express sharp disagreement with the U. S. Attorney General's proposals for softening the Subcommittee's Civil Rights Bill.

To weaken the bill at this time would simply encourage civil unrest and heighten racial tensions. It would be an invitation for other attempts to weaken the measure.

We recommend that the strengthening amendments adopted by the Subcommittee be kept intact. These are the four major respects in which we disagree with the Attorney General:

1. The Attorney General urges deletion of Title III giving him authority to sue to protect citizens against all violations of constitutional rights. The Leadership Conference believes that the Attorney General must have authority to protect peaceful demonstrators from dogs, fire hoses and other manifestations of police brutality. It is not enough for the Attorney General to raise legalistic objections to the authority proposed in Part III. The burden is upon him to suggest alternatives for dealing with wrongs that have shocked the conscience of the nation.

2. The Attorney General opposes the provision which would make the public accommodations section applicable to all businesses including those operating under state authorization, permission or license. It is ironic that he should attack the broad provision the subcommittee bill as vague and unclear when in his testimony in support of the narrower Administration proposal he had difficulty defining its specific applications. He says the principle on which the public accommodations provision is based is a moral one and that "all forms of racial discrimination are equally objectionable." Yet he then proposes to make exceptions. We think it is immoral to admit any exceptions and believe that the racial policies of all enterprises serving the public are within corrective reach of the Constitution.

3. The attorney General, while supporting FEPC, indicated his willingness to have it removed from the Committee bill and brought up on the floor or to have it treated as separate legislation. Either course may spell disaster for the enactment of a piece of legislation both he and the President concede is of vital importance to our national welfare.

4. The Attorney General agreed to limit the right to vote to Federal elections. We strongly suggest that non-discrimination in state elections, where governors, mayors and sheriffs, win their offices, may well be more important to the safety and well-being of millions of Americans than Federal elections.

The Attorney General said that "failure to enact comprehensive and effective legislation at this session could have tragic consequences." It is precisely because we agree with this judgement that we deplore any attempt to cutback on the broad protections contained in the Subcommittee bill. Once again we urge its passage upon the full Committee.

TO: ALL COOPERATING ORGANIZATIONS MEMO NO. 11, October 18, 1963

FROM: ARNOLD ARONSON, SECRETARY

ACT TO KEEP THE BILL INTACT!

Swift action by those of us who want a strong civil rights bill can still save the measure pending before the House Judiciary Committee. The bill faces a crisis. The Committee starts voting on it this Tuesday, October 22. A blow against holding the bill intact was delivered by U. S. Attorney General Robert Kennedy, whose every proposal for changing it, when he testified in closed session this week, was in the direction of weakening it.

The Leadership Conference's reaction to those proposals was a unanimous recommendation from the legislative strategy committee, that we express our disagreement with them. A copy of the telegram we sent to every member of the House Judiciary Committee, to The President and to the Attorney General is attached.

If we are to keep the bill in the strengthened form approved by the House Judiciary Subcommittee, it is important that we take such steps as these:

1. There must be a barrage of messages making the point our telegram does. Cooperating organizations are already beginning to express their displeasure with the Attorney General's testimony. The National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice, for instance, sent an immediate telegram to The President declaring "it incredible that a member of your administration should do anything to weaken prospective civil rights legislation. The Attorney General's request for weak legislation is intolerable at this stage in our American democracy."

2. Organize mass delegations to call on members of the House Judiciary Committee who may be home over the weekend. A list of the home offices of key members of that Committee is included. Urge them on their representatives to hold on to the Subcommittee bill.

3. Much of the Attorney General's argument for cutting back on the provisions of the bill is based on the need to win Republican support. But at least one Republican took sharp issue with that. Senator Clifford P. Case, (R., N. J.) declared, "I cannot stand silently by while Congress is urged to take only timid, short steps toward according equal rights to all Americans." On the Attorney General's request that he not be given authority to obtain court injunctions against local police interference with peaceful protests, Senator Case commented, "Have we learned nothing from the demonstrations in Birmingham, Alabama, Albany, Georgia and Jackson, Mississippi? Did the police dogs, the electric cattle prods and the fire hoses make no lasting impression? Has the March on Washington been so soon forgotten? People of conscience throughout the nation have been hoping that Congress would once and for all face the issue and do a job which has needed doing for the past century." One of the most effective answers to the Attorney General's argument for watering down the bill to win bipartisan support would be to get other Republicans to issue the kind of statement Senator Case has.

4. Try to get local papers to run editorials in support of the Subcommittee bill. The New York Times did just that in the editorial we are enclosing, and admonished that "retreat before battle is the worst way to block the campaign of Southern Democrats to scuttle any meaningful civil rights legislation."

Messages. Telegrams. Phone Calls. Delegations to home offices. Editorials.

Statements that place the issue of a strong bill above Partisanship.

This is the kind of action we need if we are to stave off attacks of those whose notion of moderation is emasculation. This kind of action on a massive basis is what we need if we are to keep a strong, comprehensive bill.

How Strong a Civil Rights Law?

In submitting—at long last—his omnibus civil rights bill to Congress in June, President Kennedy said: "In this year of the Emancipation Centennial, justice requires us to insure the blessings of equality for all Americans and their posterity—not merely for reasons of economic efficiency, world diplomacy and domestic tranquillity—but, above all, because it is right." Now the Administration finds itself embarrassed because a House Judiciary subcommittee has approved a civil rights bill the White House considers too strong to have any realistic chance of passage.

Attorney General Kennedy has gone before the full committee to urge that some of the strengthening provisions be knocked out in the interest of attracting more support from middle-of-the-road Republicans and Democrats. That any bill finally adopted will need the backing of Republicans, as well as of Northern and Western Democrats, is incontestable. But its concessions to political expediency contrast sharply to the Administration's previous emphasis on the primacy of the moral issue in the national struggle for full equality for every American.

The Attorney General may be right in suggesting that "unclear" language in some sections of the revised bill would give the Federal Government authority to encroach on state powers in areas totally divorced from civil rights. If so, the language ought to be, and can be, made more explicit. A similar clarification of language may be in order in other sections but always with a concern for protecting Negro rights, not restricting them.

The inclusion of state, as well as Federal, elections in the bill's provisions to safeguard voting rights is a significant improvement over the original Administration bill. So is the provision for a Federal Fair Employment Practices Commission, with power over discrimination by employers and unions. Both deserve more forceful backing than the Attorney General gave them.

Retreat before the battle is the worst way to block the campaign of Southern Democrats to scuttle any meaningful civil rights legislation. There is no place for partisanship in the fight for a sound civil rights bill; but to seek unity through an approach based on the lowest common denominator of consensus arms the bill's enemies more than it does its friends.

In the appeal to conscience he addressed to the nation a few days before his civil rights message, the President declared that this country, for all its hopes and all its boasts, "will not be fully free until all its citizens are free." That is the yardstick that ought to guide Congress in the debate now nearing a climax in the House Judiciary Committee.

JOHN F. KENNEDY - A PLEA AND A RESPONSE .....

"We in this country, in this generation, are -- by destiny, rather than choice -- the watchmen on the walls of world freedom. We ask, therefore, that we may be worthy of our power and responsibility--- that we may exercise our strength with wisdom and restraint--and that we may achieve in our time and for all time the ancient vision of peace on earth, goodwill toward men. That must always be our goal--and the righteousness of our cause must always underlie our strength. For as was written long ago; "Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain."

--from the President's undelivered speech in Dallas, Texas, November 22, 1963.

"He gave us his love that we, too, in turn, might give. He gave that we might give of ourselves, that we might give to one another until there would be no room, no room at all, for the bigotry, the hatred, prejudice and the arrogance which converged in that moment of horror to strike him down."

--from the eulogy by Senator Mike Mansfield (D., Mont.) Senate Majority Leader, November 24, 1963.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON CALLS FOR ACTION ON CIVIL RIGHTS

"We have talked long enough in this country about equal rights. We have talked for 100 years or more. It is time now to write the next chapter - and to write it in books of law."

In such forthright words, President Lyndon B. Johnson, in his address to the joint session of the House and Senate on November 27, laid an injunction upon the laggard 88th Congress to delay no longer; to get to work and begin to deal with an issue that divides and envenoms the nation. As evidence of his willingness to match words with deeds, Mr. Johnson met with Roy Wilkins, Chairman of the Leadership Conference, this past Friday.

In his speech, Mr. Johnson gave all of us in the Leadership Conference a watchword and a goal when he said there could be no more fitting memorial for President John F. Kennedy than "the earliest possible passage of the civil rights bill for which he fought so long."

In response to this memorable message, the Leadership Conference will convoke an extraordinary session of leaders and Washington representatives of its cooperating organizations. The session will be held in The Mayflower Hotel in Washington, Wednesday, December 4, at 1:00 P.M. (The statement announcing the session is enclosed.) The purpose of the meeting will be to determine how we can best support President Johnson's requests for unity and action. Following the meeting at The Mayflower, we plan to go to Arlington National Cemetery to lay a wreath on President Kennedy's grave and to dedicate our organizations to the task of speeding Congressional consideration of civil rights legislation.

Can organizations and individuals outside of Washington help? Certainly. There never was a more suitable moment for memorial services or massive letter-writing campaigns. Examples abound. One may be sufficient. In St. Louis, on Sunday, November 24, about 35,000 persons, who had originally planned an equal rights march, gathered instead to mourn President Kennedy's death. The leaders said rightly, we think, that the President would have wanted them to continue the meeting and that his death had only emphasized the steps he had taken to ease racial tension and to promote equality. It was the largest demonstration in the 199-year history of the city.

Everyone can help build the memorial President Johnson proposes. The most effective way, as always, is to let Washington know how you and your members feel:

1. Write to President Lyndon B. Johnson. Commend him for his speech to the joint session and pledge your support in obtaining enactment of the civil rights bill as soon as possible.

2. Write to your Congressmen. Urge them to support President Johnson fully in his plea for a Congress that will unite behind him and act "...wisely ...vigorously...speedily."

The memorial is prompt passage. "It is time NOW."

(NOTE: To Washington representatives of cooperating organizations. Instead of our regular weekly strategy meeting, we will meet in The Mayflower Hotel, 1:00 P.M., on December 4.)

STATEMENT BY THE LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE ON CIVIL RIGHTS - November 27, 1963, FOLLOWING THE ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT LYNDON B. JOHNSON TO A JOINT SESSION OF CONGRESS.

In calling for the earliest possible passage of a civil rights bill, the President has thrown down a challenge to Congress. Members of the House and Senate, we believe, can do no less than honor his wishes for prompt action. The House Rules Committee has the most pressing obligation: to clear the bill immediately for a vote by the House. The fact that the President's plea for civil rights legislation drew the longest and most sustained applause of a memorable address gives us hope that every member of Congress will heed his request.

The President's words are no less a challenge to all Americans who were moved by the wisdom and urgency of his message. We welcome the challenge. We share the vision he evoked of a country that will take our moment of appalling tragedy as the occasion to unite against fanaticism and hatred; to stop talking about equal rights and to work to see them written now into our books of law.

To that end the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights is convoking an extraordinary session of the heads of the more than 70 national religious, civic, labor and fraternal organizations that cooperate in its work. They will meet here in Washington on December 4, to develop a program that will fulfil the obligations the President's words and the events of the past few days have placed inescapably upon us all.

We agree with the President that no memorial could honor Mr. Kennedy's memory "more than the earliest possible passage of the civil rights bill for which he fought so long." For that reason we plan to go in a body to the Arlington National Cemetery next Wednesday and there, at the grave of John F. Kennedy, dedicate ourselves to the realization of the dream that President Lyndon B. Johnson singled out above all others - "the dream of equal rights for all Americans whatever their race or color."

..."above all, the dream of equal rights for all Americans, whatever their race or color - these and other American dreams have been vitalized by his (John F. Kennedy's) drive and by his dedication."

..."First, no memorial oration or eulogy could more eloquently honor President Kennedy's memory than the earliest possible passage of the civil rights bill for which he fought so long. We have talked long enough in this country about equal rights. We have talked for 100 years or more. It is time now to write the next chapter - and to write it in books of law.

"I urge you again, as I did in 1957, and again in 1960 to enact a civil rights law so that we can move forward to eliminate from this Nation every trace of discrimination and oppression based upon race or color. There could be no greater source of strength to this Nation both at home and abroad."

..."The time has come for Americans of all races and creeds and political beliefs to understand and to respect one another. So let us put an end to the teaching and the preaching of hate and evil and violence. Let us turn away from the fanatics of the far left and the far right, from the apostles of bitterness and bigotry, from those defiant of law, and those who pour venom into our Nation's bloodstream."

..."And on this Thanksgiving Eve, as we gather together to ask the Lord's blessing, and give Him our thanks let us unite in those familiar and cherished words:

America, America,
God shed His grace on thee,
And crown thy good
With brotherhood
From sea to shining sea."

FROM: MARVIN RICH
RE: LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE ON CIVIL RIGHTS.

The attached letter from Arnold Aronson requests a contribution for the leadership conference. Can this be done independently of the NAC or should it be pleaced on the agenda for the December 6th meeting?

I would suggest a relatively modest contribution--around $500. We make a rather substantial contribution through my attendence and that of Jerome Smith. Also, The trade unions have been picking up most of the bill and will probably continue to do so. We would not want to appear too affluent to them. However, we should not avoid a contribution in my opinion. We should carry at least some of the load.

Dear Mr. Rich:

A crucial stage in the fight for civil rights legislation has just begun. If there is to be any worthwhile legislation this year those of us who want an effective civil rights measure will have to mount a massive campaign of support in Washington and throughout the country.

Although the bill just approved by the House Judiciary Committee is deficient in several critical areas, the fact that it is better than the original measure proposed by the Administration is a tribute to the hard work of your organization and others cooperating in the Leadership Conference. But we cannot rest. The work of the Washington office of the Conference must be stepped up as we direct our efforts to the members of the House Rules Committee and then to every member of the House. Our staff and our financial resources are very limited. And our opponents, accoriding to the attached story from the New York Times, are pouring sizeable funds into the fight against us.

Our effectiveness would be greatly increased if cooperating organizations were able to assist us financially. Your cooperation has helped the conference achieve whatever success it has. Can you possibly help us now through a contribution?

The next few week will determine whether or not we shall have a good bill out of this session. We know you recognize as clearly as we do that we must pool our efforts and our resources if we are to deal a death blow to discrimination in 1963.

Sincerely yours,

Arnold Aronson

MISSISSIPPI FUNDS FIGHT RIGHTS BILL

State Gives $20,000 in Tax Money to Capitol Lobby

By BEN A. FRANKLIN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 3 — Public funds of the State of Mississippi are supporting the most active lobby here against civil rights legislation.

Reports filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives show that $20,000 has been paid by the Mississippi State Sovereignty Commission, a tax-supported state agency, to the Coordinating Committee for Fundamental American Freedoms, Inc.

The committee, which was organized last July to oppose the Administration's civil rights bill "and all similar legislation," recently registered as a lobby.

The committee maintains a suite at the Carroll Arms Hotel, a Capitol Hill landmark that overlooks the two Senate office buildings.

Industry Backing Sought

It has tried to enlist the support of other lobbyists here, notably those representing industrial and trade associations and has spent more than $23,000 in two months.

Since its creation by the Legislature in 1956, the Mississippi Sovereignty Commission has used public funds extensively to underwrite programs of the Citizens Councils of America, an extreme segregationist organization. Attempts to challenge this use of tax funds have failed in the courts.

The coordinating committee reported the $20,000 contribution in its lobbyist's registration statement. Such statements are required to be filed quarterly. The committee's report covered its operations during the three months ending Sept. 30.

The committee said earlier that it would count heavily on contributions from all Southern states that maintain so-called sovereignty commissions. Besides Mississippi, these are Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Virginia. The committee had called its program "the greatest unified project ever undertaken in the South."

But many sovereignty commissions were largely paper organizations at the outset and are now dormant, with little financial backing. The committee's report shows that, through Sept. 30, only Mississippi had contributed.

The only other reported contributions have been made by two Virginians — Landon B. Lane of Altavista, vice president of the Lane Company, which manufactures cedar chests, and Bruce Dunstan, a Richmond real estate owner and philanthropist. Each contribution was $1,000.

Loeb Is Chairman

The committee chairman is William Loeb, the conservative editor and publisher of The Manchester (N.H.) Union Leader and other newspapers. The vice chairman is James J. Kilpatrick, editor of The Richmond News Leader. These posts were described as largely honorary.

The secretary-treasurer and most active top officer is John C. Satterfield of Yazoo City, Miss., a close adviser to Gov. Ross R. Barnett.

As president of the American Bar Association in 1961 and 1962, Mr. Satterfield charged that the Supreme Court was eroding states' rights and threatening the country's liberty and security by giving "inordinate weight" to the rights of individuals.

A year ago he served as a special adviser to Governor Barnett during the crisis that followed the admission of James H. Meredith as the University of Mississippi's first Negro student.

The committee's assistant secretary and staff director is John J. Synon, a Richmond public relations man who once served as a special assistant to former Gov. Goodwin J. Knight of California. The committee's lobbying report said Mr. Synon was paid $519.63 a week, plus expenses.

The committee was also hired a Washington lawyer, George Stephen Leonard, at a reported fee of $750 a month.

Its report showed that it had paid $500 to Horace B. Clay, a former legislative assistant to Senator John B. Tower, Republican of Texas, for "research on pamphlets."

Senator Tower's office said Mr. Clay had resigned his job there Sept. 30.

The report also listed a payment of $250 to William Schulz, an assistant to Fulton Lewis Jr., the radio commentator, for "research service for pamphlets." It disclosed a payment of $114.64 for "travel, committee meetings," to Mrs. Ray L. Erb of Washington, former national defense chairman of the Daughters of the American Revolution. Mrs. Erb is now an employe of the American Coalition of Patriotic Societies, Inc.

TO: COOPERATING ORGANIZATIONS MEMO NO. 17, December 9, 1963

FROM: ARNOLD ARONSON, SECRETARY

OUR GOAL: 218 SIGNATURES IN FIVE DAYS

A deep sense of urgency. That's what characterized the assembly of 200 persons who met in extraordinary session in the Mayflower Hotel, Washington, on Wednesday, December 4, at the call of the Leadership Conference. Throughout the meeting delegates slipped out of the room to call their offices and set them working on our last best chance to get some action on the civil rights bill in the remaining weeks of the year: that is, by persuading 218 Representatives to sign a discharge petition.

This is the present legislative situation. Rep. Howard W. Smith (D., Va.), Chairman of the House Rules Committee, where the bill is now pending, has stated bluntly that he opposes the measure. Although he has announced hearings in January, there is no assurance that this is not another attempt to delay House consideration of the bill. To get around that, Rep. Richard Bolling (D., Mo.) initiated the procedure that will permit the filing of a discharge petition in the House this Monday, December 9. As he told the Conference Wednesday, "If a majority of the members of the House, 218 in number, sign the petition, the Rules Committee is 'discharged' from custody of the bill. It can then be brought to the floor."

Listen to Mr. Bolling on the parliamentary intricacies involved in using the petition method: "A bill for which a discharge petition has been successfully filed can be called up under the rules of the House on only two days a month--the second and fourth Mondays. This month, therefore, the Mondays are December 9th and 23rd. The 9th of December is obviously not available to us-the petition won't be filed until that day and, most importantly, once the required number of signatures are acquired, the petition must be on a discharge calendar for seven more legislative days before the bill can be brought to the floor for general debate.

"To meet this deadline, the signatures must be gotten between December 9th and 13th at the latest." (our emphasis.) Five days at the most.

Can we get the signatures? It will not be easy. Though the President and the House leadership are backing Mr. Bolling's move, we are dealing with a growing disposition in Congress to quit and go home for Christmas and a reluctance on the part of many Congressmen to use such legislative shortcuts as the discharge petition. Although the President has given the civil rights bill top priority and urged its "earliest possible passage" as a memorial to John F. Kennedy, Congress is largely immune to pleas and shocks. Already it seems to have absorbed the great convulsion of President Kennedy's death. For too many Congressmen the struggle between sentiment and tradition is unequal. Tradition must always win. Against these powerful internal forces in the legislative body we have only aroused public opinion. Our chance lies in evoking an outpouring of public feeling, through messages, delegations, rallies and whatever other means we can devise so that we may get enough signatures in five days, so that we may force an extension of the session and get the bill up for a vote before the end of the year.

A number of those attending the December 4 meeting have already undertaken direct action programs to line up support for the petition. Several labor unions have brought in delegations to start visiting Congressmen. The National Council of Churches, meeting in Philadelphia for a triennial session, instructed its 4,000 delegates to go home by way of Washington and visit their Congressmen. Roman Catholic bishops returning from the Ecumenical Council in Rome will start building grass roots support throughout the dioceses. Many other groups, religious, civic, fraternal, announced the start of their own campaigns to persuade members of Congress to sign the petition.

It is possible, of course, that the effort will fail; that insufficient signatures will be obtained and the House will adjourn without acting. But, as several speakers said, it would be tragic if that should discourage or demoralize cooperating organizations. Everything is carried over intact until next year. We continue the fight for the bill then.

But let's concentrate on the next step. All of your members should be immediately alerted to let their Congressmen know, by telegrams, phone calls, personal visits, letters, they want them to be in the well of the House this Monday, at noon, ready to sign their names to the discharge petition. "It is time NOW."

Enclosed are: (1) a copy of the statement adopted by the Leadership Conference meeting in Washington on December 4th;

(2) a response by Washington representatives to Rep. Howard Smith's announcement that he will hold hearings in January.

STATEMENT BY THE LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE ON CIVIL RIGHTS, FOLLOWING A MEETING AT THE MAYFLOWER HOTEL, WASHINGTON, DECEMBER 4, 1963.

The Leadership Conference On Civil Rights supports President Lyndon B. Johnson's proposal, in his recent address to Congress, that "the earliest possible passage of the civil rights bill for which he fought so long" would be the most fitting way in which to honor the memory of John F. Kennedy.

To this end, we call upon the President and Congressional leaders of both parties to keep the House of Representatives in session without recess so that the civil rights bill can be passed this year.

We are aware of the obstacles that confront the bill. The Chairman of the House Rules Committee has publicly announced his opposition to sending it to the House floor. We recognize that there are members of Congress who, in spite of our national tragedy, are willing to let the bill languish in Committee and to put the pleasures of a Christmas recess before public interest. We cannot believe, however, that they constitute a majority.

To those members of Congress ready to act we give our unswerving support. Because it is the most immediate and practical course open to us, we commit the resources of our more than 70 organizations to the effort to force the bill out of the Rules Committee through the use of a discharge petition. We leave today's meeting with one thing uppermost in our minds: that is our determination to mobilize the millions of Americans we represent in a vast nationwide drive to convince 218 members of Congress to sign the petition so that the bill can be brought up for a vote by the House this session.

While we do our part in pressing for the discharge petition,we urge House leadership to undertake alternative ways of expediting the legislation. We know, for instance, that bipartisan agreement would make it possible to report out the bill before Christmas using a procedure that would involve no more than eight members of the Rules Committee.

For those citizens, members of Congress and members of the public alike, who wish to honor Mr. Kennedy's memory in a way that recognizes his dedication to the task of creating an American society free of the kind of hatred that caused his death, there is an unshakeable obligation to do everything in their power to see this bill enacted.

With President Johnson we say, "we have talked long enough in this country about equal rights. We have talked for 100 years or more. It is time NOW to write the next chapter -- and write it in the books of law."

STATEMENT BY WASHINGTON REPRESENTATIVES IN RESPONSE TO THE ANNOUNCEMENT BY REP. HOWARD SMITH THAT HE WILL HOLD HEARINGS IN JANUARY.

The announcement by Chairman Howard Smith, (D., Va.), of the House Rules Committee that there may be hearings on civil rights legislation "reasonably soon in January" in no way alters the determination of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights to convince 218 members of the House to sign the discharge petition which will be before them on Monday, December 9.

We still call upon Congressional leaders from both parties to keep the House in session without recess so that the civil rights bill may be passed this year.

A "reasonably soon" time for hearings is now; a reasonable duration of such hearings should be no more than a very few days. Under this schedule a bill could be enacted in the House before the end of the year. After six months of consideration in the House Judiciary Committee, what possible excuse is there for further delay?

FROM: ARNOLD ARONSON, SECRETARY

We are enclosing a list of the home addresses and phone numbers of members of the House and Senate for whatever use your organization and its local affiliates may make of it during the holiday recess. It is our suggestion that each organization duplicate from this list the pertinent information for those districts and states where it has local or state organizations.

The holiday recess must be used for intensive home visiting to members of Congress--both House and Senate--to support early action on civil rights legislation in the 2nd session of the 88th Congress.

Additional copies of the home listings may be obtained from the Leadership Conference office here in Washington. We urge cooperating organizations to select from the list those members of Congress in whose districts they have sufficient strength to make visits meaningful and impressive. The time for this activity is very short. Make the most of it. Congress quits December 20, 1963 and will be back in Washington on the 6th of January.

You will be receiving in a day or so a memorandum outlining the present legislative situation. In the meantime try to set up meetings with your Congressmen and Senators.

DEC 3 1963

TO: COOPERATING ORGANIZATIONS

Memo No. 19, December 23, 1963

FROM: ARNOLD ARONSON, SECRETARY

MAKE THE HOLIDAYS COUNT - VISIT YOUR SENATORS AND CONGRESSMEN

The announcement by Howard W. Smith (D., Va.), chairman of the House Rules Committee, that he will start hearings on the civil rights bill on January 9, must be counted as a victory for those of us who support the legislation.

One factor that helped move Mr. Smith to set a definite date was the Conference's ability to organize prompt nation-wide support for the petition to discharge the Rules Committee from consideration of the bill. Another probable factor was a series of visits a special delegation from the Conference made to top leaders of the House, exploring with them the possibility of a fixed schedule of hearings as an alternative to the petition, which seemed to have bogged down.

It is now entirely feasible to expect the Rules Committee to complete its hearings and the House to vote for final passage of the bill all within the month of January. Our efforts during the next two weeks, when most members of Congress will be home for the holidays, must be directed toward getting them committed to this goal.

Why Did Mr. Smith Fix a Date?

When he announced in a floor speech that he would begin hearings on January 9, Mr. Smith observed, "I know something about the facts of life around here and I know that many Members want this bill considered." He also conceded that Rules Committee members could "take it (the bill) away from me, and they can do it any minute they want to."

This is an apparent reference to a procedural manuever, (mentioned in Memo # 17) whereby a majority of the 15-member House Rules Committee, if it thinks the chairman is stalling on a bill, can vote it out in spite of his objections. The Conference delegation that met with House leaders learned that at least five Democrats and all five Republicans on the Committee are ready to undertake such action if Mr. Smith shows an inclination to use the hearings as a means of delaying the bill. These members are our assurance that Mr. Smith really means it when he told the House, "I shall not encourage any dilatory tactics on the matter."

What is Our Plan of Action?

The start of hearings on a specific date is one dividend of Leadership Conference efforts. Another is a by-product of the drive to get signatures for the discharge petition. Although a number of members said they wouldn't sign, they did say they would vote for the bill. We need to get more Congressmen on record. Attempts will certainly be made in both the House and Senate to weaken the measure. To counteract that, we need not just a majority but an overwhelming vote in support of at least the bill now pending in the Rules Committee. An overwhelming vote, it should be noted, would only reflect the large margin by which the public has endorsed the civil rights bill in recent opinion polls.

At the last meeting of Washington representatives of the Leadership Conference, it was unanimously agreed that we must take full advantage of the improved situation in which we find the bill and use the holiday period to get firm commitments from members to resist dilution and delay.

Every member of the House and every Senator ought to be visited at home during the holiday period running from December 21 through January 5. NOW is the time to get in touch with your local branches and chapters and get them to designate an individual in each district who will organize visits. A source of people for good representative delegations is the list of cooperating organizations on the back of our stationery.

The Washington representatives agreed upon this program for visiting delegations.

When seeing House members:

1. Get them committed to work for final House passage of the bill (H.R. 7152) next month and to vote against all weakening amendments.

2. Urge them to consider strengthening the bill in at least three respects when it reaches the floor by including a guarantee of equal access to all businesses open to the general public; by providing for a Fair Employment Practices Commission with powers to issue cease and desist orders enforceable in the courts; and by empowering the Justice Department to initiate Federal suits to protect the constitutional rights of citizens.

3. Urge them, if they are on the Rules Committee, to be ready to join the majority needed to take the bill away from the chairman if there is any evidence of delay.

4. Ask them if they have signed the discharge petition; if they have not, get them to pledge that they will sign if it looks as though the Rules Committee hearings may be prolonged to an extent that would prevent final passage by the House in January.

When visiting Senators:

1. Try to get them to commit themselves to a civil rights bill that contains all the present provisions of H.R. 7152, including FEPC, access to places of public accommodation, authority for the Justice Department to initiate suits in the protection of constitutional rights, and protection of franchise privileges.

2. Urge them to vote to close off debate once the Senate filibuster starts.

We will all enjoy the holidays more if we feel we are working to secure an American society that is truly dedicated, not seasonally dedicated, to brotherhood.

RULES COMMITTEE HEARING GRINDS ON - WITH POSSIBLE END IN SIGHT

Three witnesses in four days. At least 30 more to go.

That was the discouraging score of the House Rules Committee as it completed its second week of public hearings on the omnibus Civil Rights Bill (H.R. 7152). In spite of the slow pace, House leaders still assure our delegations that the hearings will be over by the end of January and the bill will be reported out after that. The latest assurance was given to Roy Wilkins, chairman of the Leadership Conference by House Majority Leader Carl Albert (D.,Okla.), only last Wednesday.

Even so, we cannot lose sight of the fact that the bill is still under the control of Rules Committee Chairman Howard W. Smith (D.,Va.) who refers to H.R. 7152 as "this nefarious bill" and who has said, as recent profiles in Newsweek (Jan.20) and the Sunday New York Times (Jan.12) both recall, that in a legislative battle "you grasp any snickersnee you can get hold of and fight the best way you can."

A Good Time To Visit Washington

The Memorandum for November 11, 1963 No.,13 , suggested that organizations in the Conference prepare to send delegations to Washington to watch the voting on the bill once it reaches the House floor. At this moment the last week of January or the first week of February would appear to be target dates for the happy occasion. But we cannot give these dates with any certainty. The cardinal rule in discussing Congress is Never Predict. Nevertheless, the situation in the Rules Committee is moving to a resolution. Or it can be forced to a resolution by getting new names onto the petition to discharge the Rules Committee from consideration of the bill.

If your organization has members in particular Districts who know their Congressmen well; who have special connections with them; who can speak to them and sit in the gallery and watch how they vote when the bill comes up; or who can urge them to help move the bill out of Rules; now is the time to urge them to clear their calendars and be ready to come to the Capitol. Send us their names, addresses, telephone numbers and the names of the Congressmen they will be ready to work with.

Two Principal Witnesses Heard First

There is at least an understandable reason for the time taken by the Rules Committee with the first two witnesses. They were Rep. Emanuel Celler (D.,N.Y.) chairman of the House Judiciary Committee which wrote the bill and Rep. William McCulloch (R.,O.) ranking Republican member of the committee. Mr. Celler came in for the most intensive questioning - not only by Southern members of the Committee hostile to the legislation but also by members we count as friends. One of the mysteries of the past two weeks is why supporters of the bill have chosen these hearings as a time for raising legalistic niceties about the substance of it when they ought to be concentrating on getting it cleared for House floor action as quickly as possible.

Mr. McCulloch's political position gave special importance to his testimony. His spirited defense of the bill, his flat commitment to all of its provisions, raises hope that it will draw sufficient support from both parties to permit it to be brought through the House in good shape. Roy Wilkins, with the unanimous approval of the Washington representatives of the cooperating organizations in the Conference, sent a wire to Mr. McCulloch congratulating him upon the stand he took and saying in part, "we know full well it will take the strongest possible bipartisan effort to bring through the House and Senate a strong bill with a full public accommodations provision and an FEPC with enforcement powers."

Is FEPC In Peril Again?

Rumors are abroad again that the FEPC provision in H.R. 7152 - the one that would establish and Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to deal with discrimination in employment - is up for trading. Columnists and news accounts of the Rules Committee hearings have begun to raise this speculatively. A typical story in the New York Times (Jan.15, 1964) made a special point of noting that U.S. Attorney General Robert Kennedy in just-released testimony before the House Judiciary Committee last October 16, said the Administration was ready to sacrifice FEPC in order to get the votes necessary for passage of the provisions on voting, schools and public accommodations. However, Mr. Kennedy also said at that time "I am not going to suggest that it (FEPC) be taken out at the present time, because I would like to have it passed, and I think the possible chance of its passage is to have it included."

If the price of keeping FEPC in the bill is bipartisan support it should be clear by now it has bipartisan support. The FEPC provision incorporated in altered form in the omnibus bill was passed by the House Labor Committee with a strong bipartisan vote; and the FEPC bill recently approved by the Senate Labor Committee also has supporters from both parties. Mr. McCulloch gave unhesitating endorsement to FEPC in his statement to the Rules Committee, saying that by its passage the "well-being of each individual is advanced and the taproot of the country's economy is strengthened."

Unquestionably FEPC is one of the indispensable features of the bill. With unemployment on the rise and its principal victims Negroes, the other provisions, such as education and public accommodations, are hollow without it. Education for what?- if an educated Negro can still be denied a job because of race. And access to theaters, hotels and restaurants to what end?- if Negroes have no money to enjoy them.

The MEMO has urged this before. It urges this again. In messages to your members emphasize the paramount importance of FEPC and advise them to remember, in letters and approaches to Congressmen that H.R. 7152 in it present form is the irreducible minimum.

It must include not only public accommodations and the other more widely-known provisions but an FEPC strengthened through the addition of enforcement powers.

We must fight to hold it.

'GALLERY "VULTURES" HELP HOUSE PASS AN EFFECTIVE BILL

The most dangerous hurdles in the civil rights bill have been leaped and the measure to which the House is giving final approval, as this MEMO is written, is substantially the same measure it began debating on January 31.

Let us try to convey some of the dimensions of this victory and some of the reasons for it. The House debated the bill for an unprecedented 9 days. More than a hundred amendments were proposed, with rare exception amendments meant to cripple or weaken the bill. All but a very few were beaten down.

Major credit for this astonishing performance must go to the bipartisan efforts of Northern Democrats and Republicans. Special recognition should go to Emanuel Celler, the Brooklyn Democrat and to William McCulloch, the rural Ohio Republican, who served as floor managers for the bill, and to the group of dedicated liberals of both parties who served as their faithful lieutenants. Credit must also go to the White House for the strong backing it gave the proponents of the bill. But we, the cooperating organizations of the Leadership Conference, can also claim a share in this success.

Foes and Friends Cite Conference Role

The effectiveness of our operations drew comment from friends and foes of the bill. Frank Thompson (D., N.J.), a member of the Democratic Study Group, the unofficial organization of Northern Democratic liberals, paid tribute to the Leadership Conference by name on NBC News, February 7. Mr. Thompson headed the Group's "whip" system, which alerted supporters of the bill every time a vote came up on the floor. On the same NBC program, Rep. William Colmer (D., Miss.), an implacable opponent of the bill, grumbled about "galleries and corridors filled with representatives of organized pressure groups." Rep. James A. Haley (D., Fla.) was harsher. In the course of last Friday's floor debate he declared that if you took away the "vultures" in the galleries, who were "controlling votes in the House or at least calling the turn on them....I do not think you would have 25 votes for this monstrous bill...."

The "vultures" were the hundreds of representatives of cooperating organizations, who sat in the House galleries for long hours, watching how votes went on amendments. E. P. Kenworthy, in the Sunday New York Times (February 9), gave as one of the compelling reasons why so many representatives were on hand for quorum calls and votes "the presence in the galleries of mental tellers from civil rights groups, labor organizations, religious affiliates."

We supplied those "mental tellers" - the people who, operating under enormous difficulties posed by House procedure and gallery rules, were still able to keep tabs on how their Congressmen were voting.

The Problems of Gallery Spotters

Since the House met as the Committee of the Whole House, there were no roll call votes on amendments. In these circumstances voting is done by voice, where Representatives simply shout "aye" or "no"; by "division," where they stand up and are counted by the Committee chairman; or by "teller vote," where they march up the center aisle and are tapped on the shoulder by tellers as they pass, to determine if they are for or against an amendment.

Because gallery rules forbid spectators to read or consult any material, or to take notes, our tellers had to depend on their eyes and memories to establish who was voting which way. Confronted by the rapid and chaotic movement of the men and women on the House floor, forced to view them from above, at a considerable height and distance, this was not a simple thing to do. But it was done.

Every morning, before the House went in session, our gallery spotters crowded into our suite in the Congressional Hotel to report on their observations and to discuss the legislative situation. Then they went off to the House galleries. Following them, another group came in for a briefing session. These were the men and women we stationed on every floor in the two House office buildings, who, as soon as they received our alert, went from office to office of friendly Congressmen to be sure they were on hand for the vote. This was a supplement, and a very good one, to the Democratic Study Group "whip" system.

The final version of the bill is evidence of how necessary our efforts were. An analysis of what is now in the bill will have to wait for a late MEMO. But our impression is that in spite of the few amendments of any substance that got by the supporters of the bill, the version the House approved is a significant legislative advance. Now the bill goes to the Senate. For many reasons, we face a harder fight there. But the veterans of the House campaign will muster again on the Senate side. And we expect to win.

THE CIVIL RIGHTS BILL PASSES ITS FIRST SENATE TEST

The long anticipated debate on the civil rights bill, H. R. 7152, will probably get underway in the Senate sometime this week.

If our accounts of what happens to the measure in the next few weeks have a dry, technical sound to them, remember -- it is on the arid field of parliamentary procedure that the battle for a good bill may be won or lost. The first parliamentary test came last week and supporters of the bill met it easily.

That test occurred when Democratic majority leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) initiated the manuever to place the bill directly on the Senate calendar. Senator Richard Russell (D., Ga.), leader of the Southern opposition, raised a point of order and argued that Senate rules require all bills to be referred first to committee, in this case the Senate Judiciary Committee (and certain interment by its Chairman, James O. Eastland (D., Miss.)).

When he was overruled by Senate Lee Metcalf (D., Mont.), who was presiding in the chair, Senator Russell appealed. The Senate, in its first recorded vote on the bill, sustained the chair, 54 to 37 (see attachment No. 1 for how the vote went). The most encouraging aspect of this vote was that the margin of victory was greater than it was in 1957, when it was also necessary to keep a civil rights bill out of the Judiciary Committee. The vote, then, was 45 to 39.

In an apparent gesture of concilation to Senators like Wayne Morse (D., Ore.), who may be counted on to support and vote for the bill, but who argue that orderly procedure is violated when a committee is by-passed, Senator Mansfield then moved that H. R. 7152 be referred to the Judiciary Committee for hearings with instructions that it be reported back without recommendation or amendment by a specified date.

In the prevailing parliamentary situation, it would have required unanimous consent to do this and first Senator Jacob Javits (R., N.Y.) objected and then Senator Eastland.

As this is written, the Senate is considering a bill to help wheat producers and the cotton industry. But it is the intention of the Senate leadership to keep down debate and dispose of this in the next few days. Then it will take up civil rights.

New Threats From the Opposition

Even though we who support the bill won a victory in the House, we must continue to exert our fullest effort. The opposition is not resting. In a recent assessment of the civil rights battle, the Congressional Quarterly observed that the Coordinating Committee for Fundamental American Freedom was broadening its campaign against the bill. Said the Quarterly, "Reports indicated that the group, amply financed, would center its chief attention on the Senate debate and vote."

There is evidence already of stepped-up activity by this group and other opponents. We are informed by the offices of friendly Senators that mail against the bill is greatly outnumbering mail in favor of it.

We can't let up. In you next mailings to your members urge them not to wait until debate begins. Tell them to get letters out to their Senators now, in support of the House bill without weakening amendments.

Dirksen Names Republican Floor Managers

Republicans who will handle the civil rights bill for their side have been named by Minority Leader Everett M. Dirksen (R., Ill.). He has appointed Senators Kenneth Keating, (N.Y.) as captain on Title I (voting); Roman Hruska (Neb.) on Title II (public accommodations); Javits on Title III (desegregation of public facilities); John S. Cooper (Ky.) on Title IV (school desegregation); Hugh Scott (Pa.) on Title V (U. S. Civil Rights Commission); Norris Cotton (N.H.) on Title VI (nondiscrimination in federally assisted programs); and Clifford Case (N.J.) on Title VII (FEPC).

"In addition, Mr. Dirksen said, he and the Republican whip, Senator Thomas Kuchel (Calif.) "will be on hand, I trust, at all hours of the day and night, to give such counsel and guidance as we can."

The Democrats in charge of the bill, as Memo No. 26 noted, are Senators Warren Magnuson (Wash.) on Title II, Joseph Clark (Pa.) on Title VII, and Philip A. Hart (Mich.) on judicial matters. Democratic whip Hubert Humphrey (Minn.) will have overall responsibility.

How The House Voted On Final Passage

So many people have asked the Conference how their Representatives voted on final passage of H. R. 7152 we are enclosing the roll call vote (See attachment No. 2). In sending this information, we offer a caution. It is good to thank Congressmen who voted for the bill. But it should be mentioned that some of those who voted for final passage supported amendments that would, if adopted, have seriously crippled the measure. The votes on amendments are unrecorded, but Leadership Conference watchers, who sat in the House gallery, were often able to tell how their Congressmen were voting. Another thing to bear in mind is that some members were less than faithful in making sure they were on the floor whenever a vote was taken.

In the Senate fight, floor attendance is again a critical factor in determining our success. In letters to Senators, particularly those you think are friendly, start urging them now to be on the floor for quorum calls.

THE SENATE: FACE TO FACE WITH CIVIL RIGHTS AT LAST

On this historic and momentous day, when the Senate begins the civil rights debate, there is much to raise our hope of victory.

President Lyndon B. Johnson, at his last press conference, said again he wants the House-passed bill without compromise. And both the Senate whips, Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota for the Democrats and Thomas Kuchel of California for the Republicans, have expressed a like determination to keep the bill intact.

Another encouraging sign is the prediction by Senate Majority Leader, Mike Mansfield (D., Mont.), that the debate could last for months. One of the grave failures in previous civil rights debates, was the tendency of the supporters of the legislation to give up too easily and too soon. If they mean what they say, this time they indicate they are ready to stand and fight and finally vote down the opposition.

No Round-The-Clock Sessions

The announced decision against trying to wear out the filibusterers through around-the-clock sessions is also sound strategy. Day and night meetings exhaust supporters of the bill quicker than they do opponents, since the supporters must muster a majority for quorum calls at any hour of the night to keep the opposition from gaining a critical advantage. The Senate does not plan to keep what some members of the body have referred to scornfully as "bankers' hours." Instead, it will start early and stay late. But the Senate will quit in time to give proponents of the bill a chance to get a good night's sleep.

Most encouraging of all, is the reported plan of Senate leaders in the fight to keep a 51-member majority on hand at all times the body is in session to answer quorum calls and vote. A firm majority is essential if we are to win. Considerable thought needs to be given to keeping it intact and ready. The system that worked so well during the House debate in bringing Congressmen to the floor can be duplicated on the other side of the Capitol. Both the Senate leadership and we in the Conference are working to put such a system into effect so that friendly Senators can be alerted to be on hand each time the vote and call bells ring.

Compromise?

Will there be a compromise? Some newspaper columnists say so. They have been predicting that the bill will have to be trimmed to get through the Senate. But compromise is not inevitable. The same correspondents, it should be remembered, predicted in advance of the House fight, that the bill reported to the floor would never get through without giving up key sections.

Yet the bill did get through, with little modification, because a majority of the House members realized it expressed the nation's will. A majority of the Senate can come to realize that, too.

Senators Richard Russell (D., Ga.) and John Sparkman (D., Ala.), leaders of the opposition and its hard-core of 18 Senators, have made it clear in press conferences and TV appearances, that they realize there is a national consensus that a civil rights bill must be passed. Their whole strategy is to try to whittle it down. The strategy of proponents is to see that 51 Senators match Southern determination with a determination of their own and force the opposition to recognize that the star of the Old South is on the wane and we, as a nation, must have the dawn of a meaningful bill.

What Can Your Members Do?

Write as they never have before, urging their Senators to join the majority and be on hand to answer quorum calls and vote down all weakening amendments.

CELLER-McCULLOCH DINNER TO CELEBRATE HOUSE VICTORY

The Leadership Conference is planning a dinner next month to honor the two leaders of the House fight, Rep. Emanuel Celler (D., N.Y.), Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee and the ranking Republican on the Committee, Rep. William McCulloch (R., O.). Anyone who watched the floor fight from the gallery knows how indebted the country is to both of them for their unwearying and resourceful efforts in getting the civil rights bill through the House with so little change.

The dinner will be held at the Shoreham Hotel, in Washington, on Wednesday, April 22. Additional details will be supplied later. But anyone who wants to attend and honor these two men can make reservations now, through this office.

CBS TO PRESENT SPECIAL TV PROGRAM ON CIVIL RIGHTS BILL

What promises to be an unusually comprehensive review of the struggle for the civil rights bill will be presented by CBS News on March 18. Consult your papers for the time and channel.

Organizations might consider holding TV parties to view the program together--and hold the viewers on to discuss what they can do to support the bill.

SENATE CIVIL RIGHTS SUPPORTERS ORGANIZE TO PASS THE BILL

The most encouraging thing to emerge in the first week of Senate debate is the evident determination of the Senators supporting the civil rights bill (H.R. 7152) to make a fight for it. This determination found its most significant expression in how well the supporters have organized themselves; its most engaging expression, in their tendency to talk back to the Southerners.

Senate supporters need to be well-organized. They face two tests this week. First comes a vote on the motion by Democratic majority leader Mike Mansfield (D., Mont.) to make the bill the Senate's pending business. It should be remembered that the "filibuster" going on now, is on this motion and is only a prelude to the longer one that will come on the substance of the bill itself. A further obstacle is a motion by Senator Wayne Morse (D., Ore.) to refer the bill to the Senate Judiciary Committee for 10 days of hearings. That has to be beaten if the bill is to continue to make steady progress.

The Importance of Quorums

The effectiveness of the new organization was never better displayed -- although it has fallen down a couple of times -- than in the way in which the supporters have been able to summon Senators to answer quorum calls. To carry on its business, the Senate must have a quorum--51 of its 100 members. It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of being able to maintain one at all times. If opponents, surveying an empty Senate floor, call for a quorum the supporters must be able to muster one or the Senate will adjourn. If it does, whatever went before is wiped out. The next day the Senate meets the filibusterers can begin a fresh round of speeches.

To guard against any such unhappy likelihood, proponents of the bill have set up a telephone system to summon Senators to the floor. This supplements the Senate's own system of bells. Democratic Senators who have out-of-town engagements during the next two months are being asked to submit a list of them, ranked according to priority, to Senator Hubert Humphrey (D. Minn.), Democratic whip, and co-leader, with Senator Thomas Kuchel (R., Calif.) Republican whip, of the fight for the bill. If a Senator will not be present for a quorum, he is asked to get a replacement for that day. The Republicans are setting up a similar system. Democrats are committed to produce 36 Senators a day, Republicans 15.

How Quorums Help Break Filibusters

A loyal force of 51 Senators -- and strict adherence to the Senate rules -- can break a filibuster. So long as the Senate recesses each day, and is not forced to adjourn, an opponent of the bill can be limited by the rules to two speeches on the measure. While he can also speak twice on each amendment, and therefor prolong discussion indefinitely it is possible to stop this by having a 51-member majority ready and willing to vote to table amendments as they are brought up. Since a motion to table is not debateable, this would help keep the talking down.

The "Answer Back" Technique Gets Results

Although maintaining a quorum is their major task, supporters of the bill have begun to challenge some of the statements being made by the team of 18 Southerners. In earlier civil rights debates, the supporters in order to save time, generally left the Senate floor to the opponents, permitting them to put on an inbred self-reinforcing performance that caused their views to dominate the headlines.

The decision to answer back, while limited in usefulness, since it does prolong debate, has proven effective, particularly when it takes the form of brief, pointed questions that elicit embarrassing answers. At least twice last week, this tactic took the headlines away from the Southerners. Washington papers played up a frank admission from Senator Allen J. Ellender (D., La.) that "scared" whites in his state were defying the Constitution and denying the vote to Negroes. They also featured an amazing reply by Senator John Stennis (D., Miss.) that there are no restaurants in Mississippi that would require a Negro servicement to go to the back door for a cup of coffee.

What Makes Southerners Sore

Even better, was the fine irritant effect proponents achieved with a daily bipartisan newsletter that their staff members have been preparing and circulating. This simple sheet, which summarizes the actions of the previous day and then answers distortions and exaggerations in the opposition statements, was attacked by the Southerners as "mysterious," "anonymous," and "sinister." Senator Stennis's demand to know where the funds for the newsletter were coming from was particularly absurd, for the newsletter is a single-sheet, single-spaced, hastily mimeographed job that cannot cost more than a dollar or so to produce.

Republicans and Democrats were quick to acknowledge its parentage. "It is not a foundling but a very legitimate child," Senator Jacob Javits (R., N.Y.) declared. "Don't get angry because we got the jump on you in getting it out," Senator Humphrey told the nettled Southerners. And Senator Clifford Case (R., N.J.) put his finger on the cause of Southern ire when he observed, "the thing that burns is the fact that for the first time in a long history of efforts to place this kind of effective legislation on the Federal statute books in the field of civil rights, we are finally organized in a way which is in some sense comparable to the way in which the opposition has always operated."

Time Works For The Determined

The newsletter, the quorum call system and the instant rebuttals all show the determination of the Senate leadership and the President to stay with the bill and fight off attempts to weaken it.

In the past, when the filibusterers have shown their resolve to keep talking, that threat, more than the Senate rules, seemed to intimidate civil rights supporters. They displayed a lamentable tendency to cave in too quickly and to put the bill aside or compromise it in order to bring it to a vote. This time their determination to fight, may mean the difference between a good bill and a weak one. Once it is made clear to the Southerners and the neutrals that the majority plans to keep on and not give in, the pressure for compromise begins to build up on them. Many who will not vote today for cloture (the move to shut off debate by two-thirds of the Senators present and voting) will most likely do so, when they realize the Senate will not take up any other legislation until there is a vote on civil rights.

And the bipartisan supporters evidently will not file a cloture petition until they are sure they have the necessary votes.

The Uses of Unanimous Consent

Special mention needs to be made of the use the bipartisan coalition plans to make of the unanimous consent procedure. Their intention, once the Mansfield motion is approved, the Morse motion defeated and the bill before the Senate, is to have a Democrat and a Republican speak on each title of the bill. They have made the following assignments: Title I (Voting Rights) Senators Hart (D., Mich.) and Keating (R., N.Y.); Title II (Public Accommodations), Senators Hruska (R., Neb.) and Magnuson (D., Wash.); Title III (Desegregation of Public Facilities) Senators Javits (R., N.Y.) and Morse (D., Ore.); Title IV (Education) Senators Douglas (D., Ill.) and Cooper (R., Ky.); Title V (Extend Civil Rights Commission) Senators Long (D., Mo.) and Scott (R., N.Y.); Title VI (Nondiscrimination in Federally-assisted programs) Senators Cotton (R., N.H.) and Pastore (D., R.I.); Title VII (Equal Employment Opportunity) Senators Case (R., N.J.) and Clark (D., Pa.); Titles VIII to XI, Senator Dodd (D., Conn.) and one or more Republicans.

Each time a supporter speaks for a Title he will ask unanimous consent that the debate on that title be ended within a specific time, say 3 or 4 days. The Southerners will object and block this. But the request for unanimous consent will be renewed by the proponents throughout the length of time they speak on the bill, possibly two and a half weeks. This will give the supporters an opportunity to make a case for the bill and the record of continuous Southern objection will demonstrate to the nation what should already be obvious, that the opponents are not motivated by a high-minded desire to educate the country on the bill, but by a low-minded wish to frustrate the Senate in a vote on civil rights.

What Needs To Be Done Now?

1. Defeat the Morse motion -- Have your national officers and members wire their Senators today to oppose the Morse motion to refer the bill to the Senate Judiciary Committee for further hearings. Civil rights forces have good prospects of success and if such a motion succeeds, it can throw the floor fight out of kilter, introduce a new element of delay and endanger the bill.

Numerous hearings have already been held in House and Senate on key provisions of H.R. 7152. As for the Senate Judiciary, its hearings on the bill last June, when only one witness, U.S. Attorney General Robert Kennedy was interrogated by only one Senator, Sam Ervin (D., N.C.) for 11 days and its record of killing 120 civil rights bills in the last 10 years scarcely inspires confidence.

2. Build letter-writing campaigns. -- Mail adverse to the bill is still running high. Mobilize your membership. Urge them to write to their Senators saying:

(a) be present for quorum calls ("A speedy response to quorum calls is the single most important factor in making steady progress on the bill," the daily bipartisan newsletter observed.)

(b) defeat weakening amendments.

(c) if a cloture petition is filed, vote for it.

SIGNIFICANT VICTORY IN THE SENATE !

Civil rights forces won a significant victory with the defeat of the Morse motion to refer the civil rights bill (H.R. 7152) to the Senate Judiciary Committee. The defeat of the Morse move was all the more impressive because of the wide margin (50-34) by which it was accomplished, a margin anticipated by the Leadership Conference on the basis of careful daily checking but, generally hailed by the press as "unexpected."

Sixteen Republicans joined 34 Democrats in supporting Majority Leader Mansfield's motion to table the Morse referral motion -- the parliamentary strategy to effectively kill it. The entire Southern bloc plus seven Democrats from northern and western states were joined by only 9 Republicans in support of the Morse motion.

Mansfield's Role

Much credit must be given to Majority Leader Mike Mansfield for his skillful and impressively sincere handling of the Morse motion. In his speech supporting his own motion to table--a plea characterized by Clarence Mitchell, Washington Representative of the NAACP, as a "trumpet call for decency" -- the Majority Leader rejected the referral move as an invitation to "unconsionable delay" in civil rights legislation.

"It seems to me we owe it to the President to face this question now. We owe it to the House....we owe it to the Senate....we owe it in the last analysis to the Nation and to ourselves."

The vote on the Morse motion was the second victory of the day for pro-civil rights forces. The first came with the lopsided 67 to 17 vote in support of Majority Leader Mansfield's motion to make the civil rights bill (H.R. 7152) the pending business before the Senate. Only the solid Southern bloc voted against it. Thus, after 16 days of talk technically address to whether or not the Senate should even consider civil rights legislation, it decided that it should.

With the defeat of the Morse motion, Senate civil rights forces have passed the third test of strength. The first occurred when Majority Leader Mansfield (D., Mont.), moved to put H.R. 7152 directly on the Senate calendar instead of sending it to committee as is the normal procedure. Senator Russell's objection was voted down by the Senate 54-37. When you contrast that vote with the vote on the Morse motion involving the same question of Committee referral it is encouragingly obvious that in the intervening 16 days of Southern talkathon civil rights forces in the Senate have been strengthened. (Taking into account absent Senators, the Administration's bill gained three votes. Among those who supported the Morse procedural tactic, there are a number of civil rights advocates, including Senator Morse himself). It is now unmistakably clear that H.R. 7152 has a healthy bi-partisan majority in the Senate.

No Time To Rest On Our Laurels.

At the conclusion of the day when he was handed two defeats, Senator Richard Russell of Georgia, the generalissimo of the Southerners, vowed to continue his fight. "We lost a skirmish in the battle .....Now we begin to win the war."

The "war" begins today -Easter Monday- with the bi-partisan team led by Senator Humphrey (D., Minn.) and Senator Kuchel, (R. Cal.) taking to the Senate floor for detailed presentation of the case for the bill. Senators Humphrey and Kuchel are lead-off men with over-all exposition and clarification of the bill. Thereafter, for several days, proponents will speak to each section of the bill. After they have concluded, the opponents take over. The filibuster begins in earnest.

Civil rights supporters have every reason to be encouraged--but no reason at all to be complacent. While there is some indication that opposition mail is beginning to be countered by mail from civil rights supporters, we must exert even greater efforts. The real tough, long fight is ahead.

Urge your members to write, wire, and visit (if they can) their Senators. Tell them to ask for support of H.R. 7152 as it is. Tell them to ask for a vote for cloture if such a vote comes up. Tell them to ask their Senators to be available at all times to answer quorum calls.

Pour the letters on. They are important.

(52nd Day of the Senate "stall-in" on Civil Rights)

A VICTORY TOO CLOSE FOR COMFORT

The Senate's first votes on the Civil Rights Bill (H.R. 7152) came last week, one of them a hairbreadth victory that should make all of us who support the measure reach for our pens and start writing our Senators to stand firm.

By a vote of 46-to-45, the Senate rejected one of the most restrictive of the so-called "jury-trial" amendments. Offered by Senator Thruston B. Morton, (R., Ky.), it would have authorized a jury trial to anyone accused of criminal contempt for violating a court order issued in cases arising under H. R. 7152. How the Senators voted on this is shown in one of the attachments to the MEMO.

While the closeness of the vote is not an accurate reflection of sentiment for the bill, since some of those voting for the Morton amendment may be counted as supporters of the legislation, just the same, the rejection by a single vote and an earlier rejection of this amendment by a tie vote emphasize the need for redoubled efforts on our part.

The Senate went on after that, to defeat decisively, 74-to-19, an amendment offered by Senator John S. Cooper (R., Ky.). This would extend the jury trial right Senator Morton was proposing to everyone except state and local officials who, Senator Cooper reasons, have a sworn duty to obey the law and when they violate it, are more to be condemned than the average citizen.

A Real Test May Come Today

Today or tomorrow, the Senate may vote on a compromise "jury-trial" amendment offered by its bipartisan leaders, Senator Mike Mansfield (D., Mont.) and Everett M. Dirksen (R., Ill.). In contrast to the proposals by the Kentucky Senators, this would permit a judge in a criminal contempt case arising under the bill to impose, without a jury trial, sentences up to 30 days or fines up to $300. (See MEMO #36 for additional details.)

However, before they reach the compromise, the Senators will probably vote first on one or more pending amendments that would provide for automatic jury trial or limit a judge's discretion. These should all be opposed. They are contrary in spirit, to court decisions since the birth of the Republic that have denied jury trials as a matter of right in criminal proceedings.

The vote on the Mansfield-Dirksen compromise, when it comes, may provide a much clearer test of civil rights sentiment than the votes last week. The amendment is the least restrictive of the jury trial proposals being offered and will not substantially affect enforcement under the bill. It may open the way to votes on other provisions of H. R. 7152.

With last week's votes to remind us of the close margins by which supporters may succeed or fail, now is the time to pour out messages. These are the crucial weeks. To assure passage of a strong bill, your organization must urge Senators:

1. to be present on the floor at all times;

2. to oppose all weakening amendments;

3. to commit themselves to vote for cloture.

46-to-45 is too close for comfort. The supporters of the bill will have to start winning by wider margins if we are to keep the gains won in the House.

MAKE THE 10th ANNIVERSARY OF THE SCHOOL DECISION MEANINGFUL

One of the most important dates in the struggle for freedom, the Supreme Court's school decision of May 17, falls on this coming Sunday. This marks the 10th year since the Court affirmed rights that the 14th and 15th amendments to the Constitution affirmed 100 years ago.

A number of organizations are planning to use the occasion for rallies and marches in general support of civil rights. The NAACP, in anticipation of the day, will hold a "Freedom Spectacular" on the evening of Thursday, May 14, when an array of the country's greatest artists take part in a closed-circuit TV program that will be seen in 50 cities throughout the country. Many churches plan to hold special morning worship services, mass meetings and prayer marches. In New York, Protestant groups are planning a big rally.

But there should be hundreds of similar meetings throughout the country. If you are planning ceremonies let us know. If you need material to give to participants, we can supply it. May 17th affords us an opportunity to express the furious impatience abroad in the country that the Senate's response to a century of injustice is further quibbling delay. The best way to commemorate the day is to call for prompt passage of the bill.

SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIANS AND YALE LAW SCHOOL BACK THE BILL

Four hundred and thirty-five courageous Southern Presbyterians, including a nephew of Senator Richard Russell (D., Ga.), leader of the filibusterers, joined in a letter to the Senate last week for passage of "a strong and effective civil rights bill."

The signers, most of them members of "A Fellowship of Concern", including 165 ministers, one of them the Rev. William D. Russell, Decatur, Ga., prophesy "that if this bill is debilitated, deferred or defeated, the resulting crisis in the South and in the Nation will be tragic."

Another evidence of how wide and deep support for the bill runs, was a peitition a group of Yale Law School students presented to the Senate last week. Signed by 60.2 per cent of the student body, 79.4 per cent of the faculty and a group of distinguished alumni, including Governor William Scranton of Pennsylvania, the petition called for prompt enactment. The legislation, it said, "is the product of an unprecedented national consensus born of an awakened conscience." Noting that the House has passed the bill, the petition declared, "The nation's Senate must not abdicate its compelling obligation."

Other law schools ought to follow Yale's example. As for other concerned Southerners, this is the moment to speak so that the country can hear, as the Presbyterians say, that "the South's most authentic voice is the voice of conscience and of faith."

A GOOD JUDGE COULD HELP REMAKE JUSTICE IN MISSISSIPPI

The death of Judge Ben Cameron, of Mississippi, leaves a vacancy in the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals that ought to be filled by someone who can redress the South's reputation for less than equal justice.

The circuit hears cases from Federal district courts in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas. Since these are the states with the highest Negro populations in the South it is no surprise that the circuit has the largest number of civil rights cases of any in the country. The NAACP Legal Defense Fund alone has 50 cases pending in this area. Typical of some of the judges who dispense justice here is District Judge Harold Cox, who, while on the bench, referred to a group of plaintiffs in a voting case as "a bunch of niggers." The judge, a former law partner of Senator James O. Eastland (D., Miss.), has been affirmed only once in a civil rights case.

What makes Judge Cameron's successor a critical matter is that the Court of Appeals is now in delicate balance. Of the nine justices, four have consistently supported civil rights, two have opposed them, three are inconsistent. Since Judge Cameron was one of the opposing Justices, his replacement could shift the balance in favor of civil rights.

No Reason Why There Can't Be A Good Judge Here

Nothing prevents President Johnson from making a good appointment. There is no reason why Judge Cameron's successor has to be a Mississippian. The Seventh, Eighth and Ninth Circuits, for instance, all contain unrepresented states. There is equally no reason why the rule of Senatorial courtesy requires a candidate acceptable to Senator Eastland. In the past, the Senate has confirmed men for Federal judgeships over the objections of Senator Theodore Bilbo and Senator "Pappy" O'Daniel.

Write the President

Your organization can help by writing the President now, urging him to appoint a Judge who will uphold the Supreme Court and enforce the civil rights bill. Point out that if he does not, he risks seeing the legislation whose necessity he has repeatedly espoused, rendered ineffective in the very section of the country in which it is most badly needed.

ADL BEINGS BUSINESSMEN TO WASHINGTON TO PLEAD FOR BILL

More than 120 business and professional men and five women leaders came to Washington recently, under the auspices of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith to urge their Senators to work for the civil rights bill.

A former law partner of one senator, a client of another's law firm, a former Miss America contest winner were among those in the group. They told their Senators, in substance, you have heard the moral and constitutional reasons for enacting the bill, we are here to present the community and economic reasons.

NEW CIVIL RIGHTS CAMPAIGN: MIDWEST CATHOLICS UNDERTAKE CAMPAIGN IN SUPPORT OF THE BILL

Following a meeting in Omaha, Neb., last week, about 140 Catholic leaders, in midwest states, initiated a campaign in support of the civil rights bill. Ascension Thursday, May 7, was the start of a special letter-writing campaign. They plan to take part in interreligious advertising that will affirm the church's role in the struggle for more equal rights. They are also planning special interreligious meetings.

SENATE PREPARES TO TAKE FIRST VOTES ON CIVIL RIGHTS BILL

This Wednesday, after more than eight weeks of debate, the Senate is expected, finally, to begin casting its first votes on the civil rights bill.

The occasion for this bit of progress is provided by a cluster of amendments aimed at inserting a jury trial provision into the measure (H. R. 7152). It is a foregone conclusion that the Senate will approve something of this sort. At the moment it has four alternatives:

(1) the original amendment offered by Senator Herman Talmadge (D., Ga.), and the most sweeping of the lot, which would provide a jury trial for any person accused of criminal contempt for violating a court order;

(2) a "perfecting amendment" to this, offered by Senator Thruston B. Morton (R., Ky.), which would limit the right of jury trial to criminal contempt cases arising under H. R. 7152;

(3) another "perfecting amendment," offered by Senator John S. Cooper (R., Ky.), which would deny the jury trial right to state and local officials who disobey a court order; and

(4) a bipartisan substitute to the Talmadge amendment, offered jointly by Senate leaders Mike Mansfield (D., Mont.) and Everett M. Dirksen (R., Ill.), which would leave to the discretion of the judge the right to authorize a jury trial in all criminal contempt cases arising under the bill. If the accused were tried without jury, the judge would be limited in the penalties he could impose to 30 days or a fine of $300.

Dirksen-Mansfield Proposal is the Best

Senator Morton's "perfecting amendment" will be the pending business when the Senate starts to vote. There is no question, though, that the most preferable of the four is the Mansfield-Dirksen compromise. It is the most clearly delimited; it is the one most in line with applicable court decisions; and it would affect the bill's enforcement procedures very little. (See MEMO NO. 35 for additional details.)

(more)

Wednesday's schedule represents the first break in the filibuster and the first instance in which the Southerners have agreed to stop talking long enough to let the Senate vote. It should be kept in mind, however, that the Southerners yielded only because they had to. They realized the Senate was growing restive; they sensed the likelihood that the Senators would be able to muster the two-thirds present and voting needed to impose cloture and shut off debate. They gave in only to avoid a humiliating defeat. Unfortunately, the Senate is in a mood to impose cloture only on the discussion of the jury trial amendment. Still unresolved, is the problem of getting Senators to vote for cloture on the entire bill.

Write-Wire-Phone-Visit-Pray

Nevertheless, if cloture votes are available on the jury trial amendments, they should be forthcoming for the entire bill. That is the point that ought to be made in all approaches to the Senate.

And those approaches must be made right now. Things will not drag on much longer. The pace is going to accelerate. Decisions will be made in the next few weeks or days that will determine whether or not the Senate passes a good bill.

Now is the time to alert your members. If you urged them to write last week, urge them to write again. Flood the Senate with letters and wires calling for:

a vote for cloture on the entire bill, without weakening amendments, particularly the Dirksen proposals for amending Title VII, the equal employment opportunity section of the bill.

Now is the time for delegations to Senators, mass meetings, rallies and prayer vigils. Victory is not assured. The Senate will pass a strong civil rights bill only if the public demands it.

NATIONWIDE SUPPORT FOR RIGHTS BILL CONTINUES TO GROW

In spite of the massive advertising campaigns against the bill, public support for it actually increased during the past month. This was the encouraging conclusion of a new poll by Louis Harris. He found that in April, 70 per cent of the nation favored the legislation compared with 68 per cent in February and 63 per cent in November 1963.

He also found that the filibuster has won few supporters. By nearly 3-to-1, people in all regions, including the South, said they would like to see an end to endless debate. Asked if they favored a limit on Senate talkathons, here's how the general public responded:

	Nationwide (%)	White South (%)
Favor	63	44
Oppose	24	43
Not Sure	13	13

THREE MAJOR FAITHS HOLD UNPRECEDENTED RIGHTS RALLY

At the conclusion of the First Interreligious Convocation on Civil Rights, last week, the audience waiting to file out of McDonough Memorial Gymnasium in Georgetown University began, spontaneously, to sing "We Shall Overcome." It was a stirring and, hopefully, a prophetic moment in an evening in which spokesmen for all three major faiths united in calling for strong civil rights legislation.

More than 6,000 persons took part in the ceremony, overflowing the gymnasium into the auditorium of another campus building and onto the parking lot outside. They heard, in the order in which they spoke:

. Rabbi Uri Miller, President of the Synagogue Council of America, declare, "Civil Rights legislation is basic to our progress; it is basic to peace within the American community; it is basic to the moral principles upon which this country is established;"

. The most Rev. Lawrence Shehan, Archbishop of Baltimore urge early passage of the bill since "further delay in bringing about what we have come to recognize as a requirement of justice may well do irreparable harm to this nation's whole future;"

. Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, chairman of the Commission on Religion and Race of the National Council of Churches, affirm that "new federal legislation must and will be enacted, and the time is now."

President Greets Religious Leaders

The next day, nearly 200 leaders of the Protestant, Roman Catholic and Jewish faiths met President Johnson at the White House. He promised that the bill will pass if it takes all summer and called upon the clergymen, "as men of God, to reawaken the conscience of your beloved land."

Other interreligious convocations are being held in various parts of the country, and it is hoped the first one in Washington will inspire many others.

It is not inappropriate that the Convocation was held in a gym; that messages of the spirit were delivered in a place of strenuous physical exertion. For the burden of what the spokesmen and the President said was that principle and belief don't mean very much unless they are the inspiration of specific action.

CATHOLIC CHURCH UNDERTAKES TO ALERT THE MIDWEST

Typical of the kinds of programs that will follow in the wake of the Convocation, is the Midwest Civil Rights meeting for Catholic leaders, scheduled to be held in Omaha, Nebraska, Tuesday, May 5, at the Hotel Sheraton Fontenelle. Clergy and lay leaders from 20 states and some 50 dioceses will gather to consider the moral intent of the legislation and to discuss techniques for informing their Senators of their concern for seeing an effective civil rights bill enacted.

STATEMENTS YOU CAN USE IN MOBILIZING CIVIL RIGHTS SUPPORT

At least three recent statements in support of civil rights may help you reach the uncommitted persons in your community. We call them to your attention in the hope they may be useful to you in your action programs:

1. The Republican Citizens Committee's Critical Issues Council has issued a comprehensive report on civil rights that goes beyond the provisions of the bill in its call for protection of equal rights in voting, education, employment, public accommodations, the administration of justice and housing. The Council is not an official arm of the GOP but it was founded at the suggestion of President Eisenhower and it is headed by his brother, Milton Eisenhower. With votes in the Senate imminent, it may prove helpful with members of the Senate.

Copies of the statement in booklet form can be obtained from The Republican Citizens Committee, 1625 K St., N.W., Washington, D. C.(20006). Price: 15¢ each, up to a hundred copies; $10 for each 100 copies.

Get your papers to reprint portions of it and carry stories on it. Call it to the attention of Republican leaders in your area and perhaps get them to issue supporting statements.

2. Rep. William M. McCulloch (R., O.), ranking Republican member of the House Judiciary Committee and one of the chief draftsmen of the legislation, has issued a summary entitled "The Truth About The Civil Rights Bill," in which he cites the "false and misleading charges" being made against the bill and answers them.

You may obtain copies of the summary for use in your community by sending in a specific request in writing for "The Truth About The Civil Rights Bill" to the Republican Congressional Committee at 312 Congressional Hotel, Washington, D. C. (20003).

3. Secretary of Commerce Luther Hodges, former governor of North Carolina, gave a speech at the University of Alabama recently that got scant notice in the press. In it, he spoke in support of civil rights and received a standing ovation. William V. Shannon described this interesting event in a column in the New York Post, reprinted here as a special attachment. You can obtain copies of the speech from the Office of Public Information, U. S Department of Commerce, Washington 25, D. C.

A former textile manufacturer himself, Mr. Hodges' words may prove helpful in mobilizing business support for the bill.

THE FOES OF CIVIL RIGHTS ARE FAKING PUBLIC OPINION

The Senate received evidence last week that some of the anti-civil rights mail Northern Senators have been getting lately may be forgeries. Senator Kenneth B. Keating (R., N.Y.) said he had received a number of petitions that made distorted charges against the bill and were signed, presumably, by constituents. Disturbed by the misinformation they expressed, he sent letters to all his correspondents giving them an accurate summary of the contents of the bill. To his surprise, he began getting letters back from persons saying they had never written to him in the first place! Among the persons who wrote back, for instance, was a father in Forest Hills who said, "I have not and will not sign any petition against civil rights. Further, I have never given permission to anyone to use my name, or my 11-year-old-daughter's name..." Yet, his daughter's name was signed to one of the fake petitions.

It was the Senator's guess that "someone is using anti-civil-rights money to buy telephone books and mailing lists." And undoubtedly, he intimated, some of that money was coming from groups like the Mississippi State Sovereignty Commission, one of the bill underwriters of the opposition advertising campaign.

Senator Harrison Williams (D., N.J.) also reported receiving a forgery and urged his colleagues to ascertain how many of the hostile letters they receive are genuine. "Write-in votes are one thing; write-in constituents are quite another," he observed.

QUORUM BOXSCORE

In these critical days, quorum calls become more important than ever. Check the quorum boxscore to see how your Senator is doing. If he's meeting the calls, congratulate him. If he is not, urge him to be there to answer present when his name is called.

Mr. James Farmer
38 Park Row
New York, New York

Dear Jim:

The next few weeks will be the crucial period in our long campaign to secure passage of an effective civil rights bill. Unfortunately, it is preciesely at this period, when our need for funds is greatest, that our treasury is virtually depleted.

Our ongoing cash expenses average about $1,400 a week (our current payroll amounts to $750 a week; postage for our weekly MEMO amounts to about $200 a week). This does not include our expenses for special events, such as our emergency leadership meetings in Washington, our printing and mailing costs for the many pamphlets, bulletins and other material we make available without charge to you and other cooperating organizations.

It does not include the expenses we incur in arranging Capitol Hill visits and interviews with Senators and supplying material for delegations coming to Washington. Nor does it take account of that fact that we enjoy free rent through the courtesy of one of our cooperating organizations; the services of three staff persons on assignment by their organizations to this office; and occasional clerical help from volunteers who feel they contribute to the fight for civil rights by working here.

We have received between $40,000 and $50,000 in voluntary cash contributions since we opened our Washington office early in July. Although it is gratifying, it represents a minute fraction of the sums readily available to the Coordinating Committee for Fundamental American Freedoms and other anti-civil rights groups. In the first quarter of 1964 alone, the Coordinating Committee received funds of $192,500, a large part of it in funds from Southern states.

Both proponents and opponents of the civil rights bill have attested to our effectiveness. That effectiveness will be seriously impaired unless we receive additional funds immediately.

We appreciate the $100 contribution we have already received from your organization. We hope you can help us meet our critical need in the present emergency.

Sincerely yours,

Arnold

MEMO: NO. 40
June 1, 1964
(67th Day of the Senate
"stall-in" on Civil Rights)

TO: Cooperating Organizations

FROM: Arnold Aronson, Secretary

THE CLOTURE SHOWDOWN MAY COME NEXT WEEK

On Tuesday, May 26th, the Senate fight for the civil rights bill entered a new and more hopeful phase. On that day, Republican leader Everett M. Dirksen, on behalf of himself, the Democratic leader Mike Mansfield and the two party whips, Hubert Humphrey (D., Minn.) and Thomas Kuchel (R., Calif.) formally introduced the "package" on which they have been laboring for more than a month. It is being offered as a substitute for the pending bill, H. R. 7152. What it amounts to is yet another version of the bill, incorporating the amendments that the bipartisan leaders hope will disarm enough Senators of their objections to obtain the number necessary to impose cloture, stop the Southern filibuster and, after three months debate, bring the measure to a vote.

The "Package" Little Changed Since Last Week.

Basically, the substitute introduced, was in the form described in our special supplement of last week (see MEMO #39). However, in the give and take of final meetings, a few minor changes were made. Some, as a result of our efforts, were even improvements, notably the reduction in the time an aggrieved person's complaint would have to be considered by a state or local agency. That has been cut back from 90 to 60 days and, during the first year an applicable state anti-discrimination law is in effect, from 180 to 120 days. (The additional changes are outlined in a further supplement included in this MEMO.)

Coverage, in all the titles, is still essentially what it was in H. R. 7152 as it passed the House, and the enforcement provisions are still intact.

The Danger of Complacency

The fact that the substitute comes before the Senate endorsed by all its leaders might suggest it will have smooth sailing; that the votes for cloture will be readily obtained and that passage is a cinch. There could not be a more dangerous self-deception.

While the substitute has won additional cloture votes, notably Senator Dirksen's, the necessary two-thirds--67 if all 100 Senators are present and voting -- is by no means firmly committed. We must continue to urge all Senators to vote for cloture.

Although the date has not been fixed for instituting the cloture procedure by filing a petition signed by 16 Senators, the move may come next week and the vote by June 10.

But even after cloture is invoked, all the amendments introduced by then -- roughly 200 -- can be called up. Of course debate will be limited to an hour for each Senator on the substitute and all amendments to it. But even that presents dangers. Those who followed the House fight over the civil rights bill earlier this year will recall how swiftly amendments were called up, how much time and effort were spent urging Congressmen to be on hand to vote down weakening changes and how perilously close we came on occasion to seeing vital features of the bill damaged because Congressmen were tardy in getting from their offices to the House.

Keep The Senators On the Floor!

Once the cloture lid is on, the Senate will face a similar situation. Amendments may be called up at dizzying speed to try and get action on them before the deadline. Since there are only 100 Senators as against 437 House members, roll-call votes take only one-fourth the time. There will be only 15 or 20 minutes to summon up the yeas and nays needed to fight back attempts to wreck the bill.

You may be sure, in the hectic weeks of voting, such attempts will be made repeatedly. While every title will be subject to amendment, the major attack is certain to be directed at Title VII, the Equal Employment Opportunity section. Modest as it is already, it won't take much to weaken this provision. Opponents will try that. And they will try to strike it from the bill entirely. In all approaches to Senators make it a point to emphasize the need to fight for this Title.

Beyond that, it is absolutely essential, in every letter, wire, phone-call and visit to urge Senators to:

1. vote for cloture;
2. oppose any amendments that may weaken the bill; and
3. stay near the Senate floor at all times, ready to vote at a moment's notice.

COLLEGE STUDENTS PLAN A NATION-WIDE LEADERS' CONFERENCE

On Wednesday, June 10, student leaders from 50 states are expected to come to Washington for a special conference on civil rights.

A special feature of the day-long meeting will be the symbolic lighting of a torch of freedom at President Kennedy's grave. It is the students' hope to carry the flame throughout the country.

In preparation for the event, a special office has been set up at 306 9th Street, N. W., in Washington. Miss Mary Jo Barnstead is in charge of the office. The phone number is ME. 8-5032. The chairman is Barry Jaynes.

Student organizations participating in the conference are: B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation, Campus ADA, College Young Democrats, D.C. Students for Civil Rights, Logos, National Council of the Methodist Student Movement, National Federation of Catholic College Students, National Newman Club Federation, National Student Christian Federation Civil Rights Committee, Students for Democratic Society, Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), Students Religious Liberals and the U. S. National Students Association.

Other student groups are being invited to participate.

MISSISSIPPI VICTIMS TO APPEAR AT PUBLIC HEARING

A public hearing on the situation in Mississippi, to dramatize the extent to which people in the state are deprived of their civil rights, will be held in the National Theater in Washington, on Monday, June 8. The hearings start at 9 A. M. and they are open to the public. Mississippians and civil rights workers who have been victims of Mississippi justice will recount their experiences. A panel of well-known Americans will hear the testimony and issue a statement afterwards setting forth their findings. Among those who have agreed to participate in the panel are Paul Goodman, writer and poet; Dr. Harold Taylor, Former President of Sarah Lawrence College; Dr. Gresham Sykes, President, American Sociologist Association; and Michael Harrington author of "The Other American."

The meeting is being sponsored by the Council of Federated Organizations (COFO), a group composed of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, CORE, the NAACP and SNCC.

SORORITY HOLDS CIVIL RIGHTS LUNCHEONS AND MARCHES

Delta Sigma Theta Sorority has devised an ingenious way of stimulating letters to Senators. During the series of bi-annual regional conferences it is presently holding throughout the country it dedicates one of the luncheons to civil rights. Immediately following a speech by a prominent civil rights leader, it distributes paper, pens, stamps and envelopes to the several hundred diners. After they've written to their Senators they march to the post office, with their mail.

The sorority has held four of these two-day affairs so far in Petersburg, Va., Baltimore, Nashville and Cleveland. In June, it plans to hold three more, in Little Rock, Oklahoma City and Berkeley, California.

Clarence Mitchell, Washington representative of the NAACP, and chairman of the Leadership Conference's weekly meetings, has spoken at three of the luncheons.

QUORUM BOXSCORE

With cloture in the offing and votes on the bill in prospect, it is more important than ever for a live quorum of 51 Senators to be on hand. Check this week's boxscore to see how your Senators are doing. Compliment those who have been meeting the calls; and urge those who have not, to try to improve their records.

Special Supplement June 1, 1964

SUMMARY OF THE BI-PARTISAN SUBSTITUTE CIVIL RIGHTS BILL

The new bill that the Senate will probably vote on in mid-June is basically similar to the House passed bill. Changes have been made in the enforcement provisions, with particular emphasis on giving state and local communities the first opportunity to solve the problems of discrimination. The bill contains eleven titles, discribed below.

TITLE I - Voting

The use of different tests or standards for white and colored applicants for voting in Federal elections is prohibited. Also prohibited is the denial of voting rights for immaterial errors or omissions in applications. Literacy tests, where required, must be given in writing. In cases brought by the Attorney General, persons with a sixth grade education shall be presumed to be literate for voting purposes, unless the contrary is shown. Such cases shall be expedited by the courts, and may be heard by a three judge court, with direct appeal to the Supreme Court.

TITLE II - Public Accommodations

All persons shall be entitled to equal access without discrimination because of race, creed, color, or national origin to the following places: hotels, motels, inns, and other lodging places open to transient guests (except an owner-occupied building renting not more than five rooms); restaurants, lunch counters, cafeterias, soda fountains, and other eating establishments; gasoline stations; motion picture theaters, concert halls, arenas, stadiums, etc., presenting entertainment or sporting events.

Enforcement would be by civil suits brought by aggrieved individuals, or by the Attorney General to eliminate a "pattern or practice" of discrimination. Where a state or subdivision has an equal accommodations law, an individual must give it 30 days to solve the complaint before filing a Federal suit. The court may grant additional time.

TITLE III - Public Facilities

The Attorney General is given authority to initiate suits to desegregate facilities operated by governmental bodies, such as libraries, parks, hospitals, etc., where private individuals are unable to sue.

TITLE IV - School Desegregation

The Office of Education is authorized to give technical assistance and financial grants to communities desegregating their schools, and to provide for training institutes for teachers and school personnel to facilitate desegregation. The Attorney General is authorized to file suits to desegregate public schools and colleges, where individuals are unable to do so. Desegregation would not include correction of racial imbalance.

TITLE V - Civil Rights Commission

The Civil Rights Commission is extended for four more years and is given the additional duties of investigating vote fraud cases and serving as a national clearing house for civil rights information.

TITLE VI - Federal Programs

Discrimination on the basis of race, color, or national origin is prohibited in any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance, such as the Hill-Burton hospital, vocational education and rehabilitation, and area redevelopment programs. Agencies administering such programs are directed to establish rules and regulations to enforce the prohibition. They are authorized to suspend or deny Federal funds to recipients who are found, after a hearing, to discriminate. Such denial of funds would be limited to the particular recipient and only with respect to the program in which the discrimination occurs.

TITLE VII - Employment

Employers, unions and employment agencies whose activities affect inter-state commerce are prohibited from discriminating in employment and membership practices on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. Coverage includes employers and unions with 25 or more employees or members. The number would begin with 100 or more and drop over a period of 4 years to the 25 figure.

An Equal Employment Opportunity Commission would be created to seek voluntary solutions of employment discrimination complaints. If it fails to settle a complaint, the complaining party could sue in Federal court to end the discrimination. The Attorney General is authroized to sue to end a practice or pattern of employment discrimination and to intervene in individual suits, with the court's permission.

In states or localities with laws effectively prohibiting employment discrimination, complainants would first be required to file a complaint with the state or local agency and allow it 60 days to resolve the complaint before filing with the Federal Commission. The court could grant an additional 60 days to the state agency or the EEO Commission to resolve the complaint.

TITLE VIII - Voting Census

A compilation of voting statistics relating to race, color, and national origin shall be taken as directed by the Commission on Civil Rights.

TITLE IX -Court Procedures

Certain civil rights cases involving transfer from state to Federal courts not now appealable would be made so. The Attorney General would be authorized to intervene in cases of general public importance seeking relief from denial of equal protection of the law because of race, color, religion, or national origin.

TITLE X - Community Relations Service

A Community Relations Service is created in the Department of Commerce to seek voluntary solution of community problems arising from discrimination.

TITLE XI - Jury Trial

Judges are authorized to grant jury trials in all criminal contempt cases arising under any provision of this bill. In a non-jury trial, the judge may impose a sentence in excess of 30 days imprisonment and $300 fine.

MEMO NO. 41
June 10, 1964

(V-Day for Civil Rights)

TO: Cooperating Organizations

FROM: Arnold Aronson, Secretary

CLOTURE AT LAST!

When the Senate today, for the first time in history invoked cloture to limit debate on a civil rights bill, it was a moment of victory in which all of us had a share. The strong margin by which the cloture petition passed is evidence of Senate weariness with 75 days of talk and a tribute to those in the Leadership Conference who helped marshall support for the move that finally broke the filibuster.

Before galleries so packed with people, Senators' wives were standing and high Justice Department officials sat on stone steps, 71 Senators voted aye. Only 67 of the 100 Senators were needed to vote cloture. As if to underscore the uniqueness of the situation and the will of the Senate to finally Act, Senator Clair Engle (D., Cal.), who is recuperating from brain surgery, had himself wheeled into the chamber and, unable to speak, signalled his affirmative vote.

The overwhelming nature of the victory has broad implications for the future of the Senate and may mark the first real break in Southern domination of the body. Its immediate meaning is that Congress will pass the civil rights bill in the next few weeks.

AN ATTACK ON FEPC IS BEATEN

The day before it imposed cloture, the Senate considered four amendments designed to do serious injury to the bill. It was part of the price it had to pay to get the necessary two-thirds vote. But this hurdle was passed without too much damage.

Although the equal employment section (Title VII) has long been considered the most vulnerable section of the bill, the Senate defeated, 64-to-33, a move to strike it entirely and rejected, 63-to-34, a proposal to limit coverage to employers with 100 or more employees.

By a closer vote of 56-to-40, it defeated an amendment that would have eliminated Federal grants and payments for training teachers and school officials in the techniques of handling desegregation.

However, it did accept, by the narrow edge of 51-to-48, an amendment that would provide for a jury trial in criminal contempt cases arising under the bill with the exception of those involving voting. The Leadership Conference opposed this amendment and will continue to work to change it in the Senate or the House.

THE BILL STILL FACES DANGERS

Though the victories of the last two days were great, the bill still runs the risk of weakening changes. This was evident when only a few minutes after cloture was voted and Conference representatives were jubilantly congratulating each other in the corridors outside the Senate galleries, an amendment proposed by Senator Sam Ervin (D., N.C.), was called up that would have seriously weakened enforcement provisions of the bill. The amendment passed by one vote, but it is not yet in the bill because of a technicality.

The Ervin amendment is a harbinger. Others like it, will be offered in the coming days. Debate is now limited to 100 hours -- an hour for each Senator on the bill and all pending amendments. Nearly 500 amendments could be called up. Many of them are highly technical and full of booby traps. Never in the years the civil rights bill has been before Congress has it been more necessary to be vigilant. Once more we call upon your help.

THE IMMEDIATE TASK

There isn't time to write. Things are happening too fast. Have your officers and members wire and phone their Senators immediately:

1. If they voted for cloture, congratulate them and express appreciation;

2. Urge them to stay on the floor of the Senate chamber or near it during the remaining days of debate;

3. Urge them to vote against all amendments opposed by the Senate Leadership.

It would be tragedy if the victory of cloture is nibbled or snatched away through carelessness.

NOTE: Supplements to this MEMO give the votes on cloture and on the four amendments.)

CIVIL RIGHTS DECISION AT ATLANTIC CITY

The most significant controversial issue before the Democratic National Convention in Atlantic City beginning August 24 will be the seating of the Mississippi delegation. The Convention's decision will have an important bearing on civil rights developments--both North and South--for months and perhaps years to come.

Freedom Democratic Party

Two delegations from Mississippi have been designated; the "regular" Democrats at a convention in Jackson on July 28; and the Freedom Democratic Party at a Jackson convention on August 6. The Freedom Party has been painstakingly organized over a period of months through the efforts of organizations affiliated with COFO, the Council of Federated Organizations. These include the NAACP, CORE, SNCC, and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. Party membership is open to both races. At its first convention, with about 500 delegates and alternates present almost all were Negro but there were a good number of white participants. On the delegation elected there are 64 Negroes and 4 white. Also elected were the National Committeeman and Committee woman; Reverend Edwin King, a white Methodist minister who is chaplain at Tougaloo College; and Mrs. Victoria Gray, a Hattiesburg housewife who is a long-time fighter for Negro voting rights in Mississippi. The Chairman of the convention and of the delegation to Atlantic City is President of the Mississippi NAACP and Chairman of COFO, Dr. Aaron Henry.

The "regulars."

The "regular" Democratic Party has traditionally excluded Negroes from its delegation and has actively resisted--with force and intimidation over the years the participation at any level-including the polls--of Negro citizens. It is this systematic exclusion by the "regular" party that is the basis of the determination by Mississippians who believe in human rights to build a party open to members of both races. The Freedom Party further asserts that the "regular" Party has demonstrated its consistent disloyalty to the candidates and platform of the National Party and therefore is not entitled to participate in the affairs of the National Convention nor lay claim to represent the National Democratic Party in the state of Mississippi. These are the basic issues which will be laid before the credentials committee at Atlantic City.

(more)

Adhered to Rules

The Freedom Democratic Party faithfully adhered to all the rules and regulations governing the operation of political parties in Mississippi. It established its party structure and conducted its elections at precinct, county and state level to conform to the same rules governing the "regular" Party. Nevertheless, less than a week after the convention, the Attorney General of the state of Mississippi secured an order from a Chancery Court Judge banning the Freedom Democratic Party from using that name and its officers from functioning. This order has been challenged by the Freedom Democratic Party. Joseph L. Rauh, Jr. who is acting as counsel for the Freedom Party has stated that it is "compounding unconstitutionality" to exclude Negroes from the Democratic Party and then deny to them the right to participate in the creation of a Democratic Party which they may freely join.

While the Leadership Conference has not taken a formal consensus of its constituent organizations on the question of the seating of the Mississippi delegation at Atlantic City, so many Conference organizations have indicated support of the Freedom group and opposition to the "regular" party that we are sending out this Memorandum for the information and guidance of those organizations who have a concern in this matter.

Time to Act

There is still time to wire or phone the delegates to the convention to support the Freedom Party, and especially to contact delegates who will serve on the Credentials Committee. You may want also to wire the White House; the Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, John Bailey; and David Lawrence of Pennsylvania, Chairman of the Convention Credentials Committee. The convention opens on Monday, August 24. The Credentials Committee will open hearings at 2 P.M. on Saturday, August 22, in Atlantic City.

CALL TO A SPECIAL SESSION - PLEASE READ AND MARK YOUR CALENDAR

Dear Friend:

Eight weeks have passed since the President signed the Civil Rights Act. Because we worked together for passage, I know we share a common concern in seeing effective implementation of the law.

The Leadership Conference believes one of the most important services it can perform at this time is to bring you full information on what the Federal Government is doing to obtain compliance with the Act and educate citizens in their rights and responsibilities.

For that reason, we are convening a special all-day session on Friday, September 11, here in Washington. Please keep the date open.

Representatives of major government agencies will present details of their current activities and future plans, and answer questions. We expect this to be an important and profitable day and look forward to having you with us.

We will send you complete information on place, speakers and agenda as soon as it is available.

Sincerely yours,

Arnold Aronson

MEMO NO. 47
September 21, 1964

LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE GETS CANDID VIEW OF CIVIL RIGHTS ENFORCEMENT

At a private meeting, two Fridays ago, government officials with major responsibilities under the Civil Rights Act gave a first-hand report of their current activities to Leadership Conference representatives.

Diverse as the problems within the agencies are, a few general conclusions can be drawn. The work of setting up programs authorized by the Act is underway, but a number of projects and staff hiring are being held up until Congress approves the funds for this year's budgets. The agencies look to private organizations such as those active within the Conference, to help them establish a nation-wide climate of compliance.

Funds Forthcoming At Last

The prospect of funds for the new civil rights programs brightened at the weekend. The House Appropriations Committee approved, without cuts, the Administration's modest request for $13,088,000. The Senate Appropriations Committee is expected to give its approval shortly and there should be no trouble in getting the requests through Congress. While the money for a fair start should be available in the near future, a watchful regard on our part is still desirable.

What will be done with the money is the next question. It was a matter that came up for considerable discussion at the Conference meeting on September 11.

More than 100 representatives of cooperating groups and government agencies met in the AFL-CIO Conference Room for the occasion. The reports, of which we give brief summaries herein, were presented by Leroy Collins, Director of the Community Relations Service; William L. Taylor, General Counsel of the Civil Rights Commission; Dr. Francis Keppel, Director of the Office of Education; Peter Libassi, Director of the Civil Rights Commission's Federal Program Division; Burke Marshall, Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division and his First Assistant, John Doar.

Community Relations Service - A Program To End Discord

Leroy Collins, former Governor of Florida, told the meeting that though the Community Relations Service is still in the process of being organized, it has already begun to respond to calls for its conciliation services and it has established a citizens advisory committee of about 400 people, drawn from all sections of the country.

CRS expects to have a staff of about 50 people.

It approaches its task of preventing discrimination through voluntary compliance in three ways: by encouraging the organization of community relations efforts at the local and state levels; by helping communities develop broad plans of action to remove underlying causes of discord - unemployment, poor housing, poor education, etc.; and by giving assistance to a variety of voluntary groups and to interested individuals who can help create a climate of compliance.

But the Service, too, can use help. Like most of the speakers on the program, Mr. Collins readily asked the Leadership Conference for it. He said, "Keep us advised of what you learn about conditions in every section of the land. Help us to find constructive ways to avoid disorders. Give us the help of your brains, your manpower in shaping and carrying forward our efforts to serve the public good."

Civil Rights Commission - The New Clearinghouse

William L. Taylor discussed some of the Civil Rights Commission's new functions, particularly its obligation to serve as a national clearing house for civil rights information and to review Federal laws and policies.

The Commission, he said, must establish a more systematic way of collecting data. There has been a remarkable degree of compliance with Title II, the public accommodations section, and the Commission expects to undertake a survey of such compliance. It also plans to examine a few communities in which there has been controversy and to study the "increasing phenomena" of submitting civil rights issues, such as fair housing, to popular referendum.

The Commission intends to bring information directly into communities through meetings and conferences. It held a very successful meeting recently in Atlanta. It plans a conference for Columbia, S. C. on September 30, and another in Little Rock sometime in October.

It is also working with government agencies that administer programs of Federal assistance and are directed by Title VI to issue regulations prohibiting discrimination. He and Mr. Libassi, who works directly with these agencies, predicted that the various sets of regulations now being formulated would be good ones.

The Commission also plans to issue a series of study papers on programs affected by Title VI such as the Hill-Burton program of assistance to hospitals and other health facilities; Federal employment and defense projects.

It was also brought out later during the day that the Commission plans to maintain information, for those who want it, on the extent of Federal programs in various localities. To this end it is developing directories that would include one on hospitals getting Hill-Burton assistance; one covering some of the 18 major programs receiving aid; one of employers getting Area Redevelopment loans and grants, and another of the 17 agencies with substantial aid programs in education.

Mr. Taylor said the Commission hopes to make public techniques it believes are successful in obtaining compliance. He said, "We need the help of the (Leadership) Conference in disseminating information."

Office of Education - Help For Schools On The Way

The Office of Education's in-training programs for school officials and its projected institutes are being held up until Congress approves funds. So is the survey of the lack of availability of equal educational opportunities that the Office must complete and submit to Congress within two years.

But while it waits for Congress to act, Dr. Keppel told the Conference his office is going forward with plans and he and members of his agency have undertaken a number of meetings with school officials and educational experts.

The Office has met with superintendents of impacted school areas - those communities whose schools are subject to the impact of Federal installations. It is working to strengthen Negro colleges. It is considering its responsibilities under the President's anti-poverty program.

Asked if the southern school superintendents he met with sympathized with their governors or with him, he replied, "Neither. They sympathize with themselves." Many of these men were caught, he said, between their new responsibilities under the law and pressure from hostile communities. Many of these men want to comply with the law. "They haven't got a chance unless they have the support of the society around them. They need help. Yours." What was needed to obtain compliance with the law, he said, was not just a reallocation of energy "but an immense increase of energy."

Title VI - $11 Billion In Federal Grants

According to Peter Libassi, we have won the battle to establish non-discrimination as official Federal policy in all grants of government aid. But the task of implementing that policy, he said, has just begun.

The breadth of programs subject to Title VI, as he described it, is most impressive. The Federal government gives more than $11 billion a year in aid to state and local programs. There are more than 100 major programs and nearly every agency of government has some responsibility under them. In the field of education, grants total about $2.5 billion and not only the Office of Education, but 17 other agencies have some kind of educational program.

Federal aid is pervasive. Federal payments are an important part of state revenue; they constitute 24 percent in Mississippi, 22 percent in Alabama, 20 percent in both Louisiana and South Carolina. State employment services, university research teams, hospitals and highways all benefit largely from Federal funds. The drill presses in vocational education programs are often government surplus. "Many local services are in some way or other, in whole or in part, receiving Federal aid but the benefits of the programs are not being made equally available," Mr. Libassi said.

Title VI, he said, could represent a new and significant instrument of change at the local level if private organizations learn to use it. They need to ask the right questions. Not, How can we improve employment opportunities? - but rather, What employment opportunities are subject to Federal policy in our community? Not, How can we improve health services? - but, Which hospitals were built with Hill-Burton funds and what does Federal policy require?

"Equality of opportunity has now been expanded by Federal policies. Government agencies and private organizations need to work together to assure that those opportunities are fully realized," Mr. Libassi said.

Department of Justice - A Promise of Broader Enforcement

The Justice Department has already assumed its new duties of enforcement under the Act. The staff has 21 civil trials set for this year. Once the Department's funds come through, it plans to hire 49 new attorneys for civil rights work. Mr. Marshall said the Department is considering the establishment of a regional office somewhere in the South with a staff of 25 or 30 lawyers. This would bring it closer to the area in which the main problems exist. There is no final decision on this, but the Department is inclined to do it.

He and Mr. Doar, who accompanied him, described in detail how complaints should be filed under various titles of the Act. It is the intention of the Leadership Conference to embody this information in a separate publication which we hope to have available for distribution in the near future.

What Now?

The frequent requests by the speakers for assistance from private organizations, strengthens the determination of the Leadership Conference to explore ways of cooperating with the agencies of enforcement. The Conference office is now located at 132 Third Street, S.E. The phone number is 547-8700. The work of implementing the many suggestions that came out of the session is the first matter to which we will turn our attention.

HOUSE COMMITTEE ALLOCATES FULL FUNDS FOR CIVIL RIGHTS WORK

To the happy surprise of everyone concerned, the House Appropriations Committee last week reported out the full $13,088,000 that the Administration has requested to implement Civil Rights Act obligations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1965.

The requests were modest to begin with. Nevertheless, the House Appropriations Committee usually likes to trim. But it reported the full amount with nothing more than a cautionary remark that "A concerted effort must be made by all agencies concerned as well as the Bureau of the Budget to make sure that there is no overlapping or duplication in carrying out this program."

What's In The Civil Rights Budget?

Here is a breakdown of the funds:

1.	Community Relations Service - Department of Commerce	$1,100,000
2.	Office of Education, Department of Health, Education & Welfare	8,000,000
3.	Justice Department (salaries, expenses, general legal activities)	1,093,000
4.	Commission on Civil Rights	295,000
5.	Equal Employment Opportunity Commission	2,500,000
6.	Labor Department, Manpower Administration, special study on discrimination in employment because of age	100,000

The Office of Education's $8 million request includes $3 million for institutes to train school personnel in the special educational problems occasioned by desegregation and another $3 million to be used for grants to school boards for in-service training.

Although it contains no prohibition against employment discrimination based on age, the Act directs the Labor Department to make such a study and report on its findings by June 30. So $100,000 in the budget is earmarked for that.

The enforcement powers of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission do not become effective until July 2, 1965. But the $2,500,000 it will get will permit the new regulatory agency to organize and to undertake a program of education designed to acquaint the country with the employment requirements of the law.

What Can Leadership Conference Groups Do?

Approval by the House Appropriations Committee usually means a budget will win approval from the Senate Appropriations Committee with little difficulty. Nevertheless, a message from the head of your organization to Senator Carl Hayden (D., Ariz.), chairman of the Senate Committee, or to Committee members with whom you have good relations, urging swift action on all civil rights budget requests, could prove helpful at this point.

PROGRAM FOR COMPLIANCE NO. 1 - THE AFL-CIO LAUNCHES NEW DRIVE

The AFL-CIO has set a splendid example by calling representatives from all its state and city central bodies to Washington on September 2, for a special conference on Labor's responsibilities under the Civil Rights Act. The conference formulated a 7-point program designed to get labor working actively for compliance:

1. All AFL-CIO departments and all regional directors are instructed to plan to educate union members and other citizens in the actual provisions of the Act.

2. AFL-CIO community task forces are to be broadened to help state and city central bodies take the leadership in creating community wide civil rights committees.

3. Promotion of equal employment opportunity is to be stepped up - on voluntary basis among employers and by including non-discrimination clauses in union contracts. Each international is being asked to assign a national officer to this work.

4. The AFL-CIO will press for the appropriation of adequate funds and vigorous enforcement of the Act. New legislation will be sought where inadequacies are uncovered.

5. Every AFL-CIO organization is directed to comply with the law at all levels. Central labor bodies are asked by the Conference to establish subcommittees that will process complaints of discrimination by non-union workers with the appropriate government agency.

6. The AFL-CIO Department of Civil Rights was instructed to stand ready to lend any assistance requested.

7. The Department was also instructed to organize regional conferences modeled after the national one.

PROGRAM FOR COMPLIANCE, NO. 2 - NEW INTERRELIGIOUS CONFERENCE

Clerical and lay leaders of the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish faiths, who were active during the campaign for the Civil Rights Act, are planning a new conference to discuss what they shall do now that the law is in effect. They plan to meet for four days, November 16th through the 19th, at Arlie House, near Warrenton, Virginia, to confer with government officials on what they can do to foster compliance. One of the outcomes of the meeting, they hope, will be a series of regional conferences. They are considering the possibility of six such interreligious conferences.

We will present further details when they are available.

CONGRESS STILL STRUGGLES WITH REAPPORTIONMENT

For those organizations within the Leadership Conference that oppose the move in Congress to upset the Supreme Court decision requiring state legislatures to apportion themselves on the basis of population (see MEMO #46 for details), the immediate target of their protest is the House.

There, a constitutional amendment by Rep. Wright Patman (D., Tex.) is pending that would circumvent the Court's decision by decreeing that one house of a bicameral legislature could allocate seats on a basis other than population.

Groups that wish to object, should send letters to all members of the House, urging them to vote against the Patman amendment as a threat to democratic process and to civil rights.

In the Senate, a small group of liberals continues to talk in an attempt to block action by that body on reapportionment.

MEMO NO. 48
November 30, 1964

FIRST THINGS FIRST: SUPPORT RULES CHANGES!

With a new session of Congress approaching, the immediate task of the groups in the Leadership Conference is a familiar one: to mobilize support for changes in House and Senate Rules.

Since its inception in 1951, the Conference has been in the forefront of the fight for rules reforms that would make both bodies of Congress more responsive to their majorities. The 89th Congress is to be no exception. More than 75 representatives of organizations that cooperate in the Leadership Conference met in Washington last week and endorsed a broad program of legislative and community action in which the matter of rules change was given top priority.

Time's Short. We Must Get Ready Now

Only a scant five weeks remain until the 89th Congress convenes. Proposals to change the rules will be the first order of business for House and Senate. The representatives at last week's meeting agreed to support certain changes because they recognize that whatever success we have in the field of civil rights next year will be largely determined by how Congress conducts itself. The prospects for new legislation may be bright or dim depending on how the rules fight goes. Enforcement and financing of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 may depend to some extent on the outcome of the struggle over rules.

At last week's meeting, consensus was reached on a number of changes that Conference representatives feel will make both House and Senate function more democratically.

These House Reforms Were Endorsed

1. The 21-Day Rule - A hostile Rules Committee has frequently bottled up bills its chairman doesn't like. This proposed change would help end that tyranny. If the Rules Committee failed to report out a bill in 21 days, the chairman of the committee responsible for the measure could move to bring it to the floor. If the chairman opposed the bill, the senior committee member favoring it could take the initiative to bring it out.

2. Seven-Day Conference Report Rule - This would also help break the Rules Committee bottleneck. Where a bill has passed both House and Senate and it is necessary to adjust differences between two versions before final passage, the House Rules Committee would get 7 days in which to send the bill to conference. If the Rules Committee failed to act, the House could order the bill sent to conference by a vote of the majority.

3. Give the Speaker Greater Power - This is meant to avoid seniority as the sole criterion for appointing committee chairmen. In order to make it easier for the majority party to bring its legislative program to the floor, it is proposed that the Speaker of the House be empowered to nominate the chairmen of all standing committees and, in addition, the majority members of two key committees - Ways and Means and the Rules Committee. These nominations would still be subject to approval by the caucus of the members of the majority party.

Rep. Richard Bolling (D., Mo.), who addressed last week's Leadership Conference meeting as one of the leaders of the fight for Congressional reform, observed that this change would make the Democratic caucus and leadership "visible and responsible."

4. Rules for the Rules Committee - a bar to efficient functioning of the Rules Committee, Mr. Bolling pointed out, is that unlike other committees it has no regular meeting day and follows procedures that vest too much power in the chairman. It is proposed to recast the committee's rules to fix a meeting day and to give the majority the right to determine agenda.

5. The Campaign to Strip Williams and Watson of Seniority - Closely allied to the Rules fight is the proposed course of action to be taken against two Democratic representatives, John Bell Williams of Mississippi and Albert W. Watson of South Carolina. In complete disregard of a warning from a group of liberal Democrats, they both campaigned for Goldwater. It is the intention of the liberal group, in consequence, to oppose the seating of these two men in the Democratic party caucus and to strip them of their seniority. While the Leadership Conference recognizes the right of any member of Congress to support any candidate he chooses, those who were present at last week's meeting agreed that such members should not be rewarded by the party they failed to support. So there was a consensus to endorse the move against Mr. Williams and Mr. Watson.

These Senate Reforms Were Backed

1. To break the Filibuster - The Leadership Conference has long recognized the filibuster as the weapon of the status quo. It has been often used to block important social legislation and its use last year kept the Senate from acting on the Civil Rights Bill for more than three months. Conference representatives, as they have since 1951, agreed last week to support an effort in this Congress to change the filibuster rule (Rule 22) so that instead of two-thirds of those present and voting, a constitutional majority of 51 members could vote to shut off debate.

2. Action against Eastland - Since the Senate Judiciary Committee has a deciding voice on judgeships and on much major legislation including civil rights and immigration laws, and since the only way to get Senate action on the Civil Rights Bill last term was to bypass Judiciary, Conference representatives last week readily agreed to support efforts to block Senator James O. Eastland from continuing as the committee chairman. The Mississippian merited such attention, a representative observed, since he was "the Senator who least supported policies of his party in the area of his committee."

What Cooperating Groups Can Do

Between now and January 4, when Congress reconvenes, we will be sending you further plans on the rules fight and perhaps additional details about the proposed changes. Meanwhile, you can help build public support for these reforms:

1. Alert your membership to the need for the changes and prepare to work for them.

2. Most members of Congress will be home between now and the opening day. That affords your members an unusual opportunity to form delegations that can visit Representatives and Senators and urge them to back reforms that will mean a more democratic Congress.

CONFERENCE BACKS NEW LEGISLATION AND COMMUNITY ACTION

During the nearly three hours of discussion last week, Leadership Conference representatives endorsed several specific legislative proposals and agreed to explore new possibilities of community action.

The Conference was fortunate to have present at this session two veterans of the Mississippi struggle, Aaron Henry, leader of the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party and Charles Evers, NAACP field secretary for the state and brother of Medgar Evers. Both men gave vivid accounts of what they must endure in their state and urged the Conference to adopt a broad program in support of their fight for full equality.

Registrars and Recompense

Because of the slow pace of change in Mississippi and other states of the deep South and because of the many incidents this past summer of connivance by state officials in acts of harassment and brutality, the representatives at last week's meeting decided to renew their request for at least two pieces of legislation:

1. One would authorize the President to appoint Federal registrars for states in which voting rights are still being denied because of race.

2. Another would make states liable for any mistreatment by their police or other officials of persons exercising their constitutional rights.

Both of these measures represent omissions from the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The Conference has endorsed them as long ago as 1960 and called for them this year in its platform presentations before both national conventions. The Civil Rights Commission unanimously recommended such legislation in its last annual report. Both are essential next steps in protecting rights by law.

Home Rule and Poverty

Conference representatives also endorsed, as they have before, home rule for the District of Columbia. And recognizing the new dimension to the civil rights struggle, the war on poverty, they agreed to back massive programs to create jobs and provide new economic and educational opportunities for the nation's poor.

Enforcement and Community Action

The Leadership Conference has already established liaison with government agencies that have responsibilities under the Civil Rights Act. It was the consensus at last week's meeting that this work must continue and that the Conference must press for strong enforcement policies.

The meeting also endorsed the appointment of a special subcommittee that will consider how groups within the Conference, in cooperation with government agencies, can undertake a series of community meetings designed to inform people about the contents of the Act and to help create a climate of compliance.

Additional details on the legislative proposals and the enforcement and community action programs will appear in future MEMOS.

But First The Rules Fight

The campaign for rules reform takes precedence over everything else in the next few weeks. If this MEMO has one principal purpose it is to ask you to join in that effort today.

A NEW PHASE IN CIVIL RIGHTS ACT ENFORCEMENT: TITLE VI RULES

For those of us working for enforcement of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, last week brought a new advance - and new obligations. The President approved the first set of regulations aimed at ending discrimination in all federally-assisted programs. Now the groups within the Leadership Conference must begin to work for the observance of these rules.

Seven agencies, administering some of the major programs of federal aid, issued the first regulations. The President approved them on Dec.3 and they take effect 30 days after that.

Schools, Health Services, Farm Programs Affected

Hundreds of federal programs and activities are going to be subject to the regulations that, under the authority of Title VI of the Act, are meant to make all federally-assisted programs available to everyone without regard to race, color or national origin. School lunches and food stamps, rural electrification and farm price supports, unemployment insurance, manpower development and training, school construction, health and welfare services - these are a few of the programs covered by these far-reaching rules.

In general, each set of regulations sets forth the discriminations that are prohibited, the programs covered and procedures for complaint and conciliation.

The seven agencies that issued the first regulations are: the Departments of the Interior, Agriculture, Labor and Health, Education and Welfare; the General Services Administration; the Housing and Home Finance Agency and the National Science Foundation.

Eighteen other agencies, including the Department of Defense, are still scheduled to issue their regulations. Those are not expected to be approved until next month.

How Good Are the Regulations?

It is too soon to properly evaluate their effectiveness. Clarence Mitchell, chairman of the regular Washington meetings of the Leadership Conference, expressed cautious optimism about the rules. Because of their scope and technical nature, he said, it was impossible to know how they will work.

The regulations, he pointed out, were prepared by the staffs of the various government agencies and groups in the Conference had no opportunity to make specific recommendations. But he believes they implement the spirit of the Civil Rights Act.

The Conference will continue to study the rules and report on them from time to time.

Who Polices the Regulations? Everyone.

No matter how good the regulations are, their effectiveness depends upon their administration. While agencies will now seek assurances of compliance from state and local officials and institutions, before making new grants or continuing old ones, someone has to look behind those assurances. And most agencies are shorthanded.

An official of one of the agencies whose regulations were approved last week, probably spoke for most of them when he observed, "We look to groups like yours (those participating in the Leadership Conference) to help us obtain compliance."

This places on all of us the obligation of becoming familiar with the regulations. Unfortunately, they are too voluminous to permit us to supply our entire mailing list with copies.

How To Get Your Copy

The regulations appear in a 36-page supplement to the Federal Register which costs 15 cents a copy. It can be ordered from:

Superintendent of Documents
Government Printing Office
Washington, D.C. 20402

Ask for Vol.29, No.236 of the Federal Register, "Effectuation of Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964."

The regulations will be tested, ultimately, by the complaints they generate. Every group in the Leadership Conference can help obtain compliance with these rules by making its members familiar with them and urging them to be vigilant for violations.

HOUSE LIBERALS URGE NEW RULES REFORMS

There was a new development this week in the fight to make the House of Representatives more responsive to the will of its majority. Leaders of the Democratic Study Group, an association of more than 100 liberal Democratic Congressmen, agreed on eight changes in House rules and Party Procedures, and began circulating them among their members.

To some extent the proposed rules reforms coincide with those endorsed by groups in the Leadership Conference at our November 24 meeting (see MEMO: No.48). The proposals are still subject to further consideration at the Democratic Party caucus scheduled for the afternoon of January 2. The full caucus will decide which of the proposed changes should be fought for when the 89th Congress convenes on January 4.

However, the list of rules changes and party reforms being proposed are worth noting because they delineate the issues that will confront the House as soon as it gets to work. The DSG leaders propose that:

1. The House be empowered, by majority vote, to take up a bill if the Rules Committee fails to clear it in 21 days. To set this procedure in motion, the Speaker may recognize the chairman of the committee handling the bill (or the ranking majority member who favors it, if the chairman does not) to call up the measure for House consideration.

2. The House be empowered by majority vote to send to conference with the Senate any bill that has passed both Houses. Implementation of this procedure would also be at the Speaker's discretion.

3. Committee assignments made by the Committee on Committees at the start of Congress should be subject to approval by the Democratic caucus.

4. Two Democratic members who worked for the Goldwater-Miller ticket, Representatives John Bell Williams (Miss.) and Albert Watson (S.C.) should be stripped of their seniority.

(It was the consensus of the groups at the Leadership Conference meeting to endorse very similar proposals. No position was taken by Conference groups on the remaining proposals.)

5. The number of signatures needed on a discharge petition to take a bill away from a hostile petition should be reduced from the present 218 to 175. This proposal, too, would let the Speaker decide whether or not to recognize the member seeking to put the procedure into effect.

6. Party ratios on all committees should be revised to reflect the 68 per cent Democratic control of the House.

7. A Democratic Policy or Steering Committee should be established "to discuss and implement leadership policy on legislative proposals."

8. A Joint House-Senate Committee should be set up to consider proposals to modernize Congressional procedures and to update the 1946 Legislative Reorganization Act.

MEMO NO. 50
December 18, 1964

WE HAVE TWO WEEKS TO WORK FOR RULES REFORM

Almost as scant as shopping days till Christmas is the time we have left in which to work for liberalizing changes in House and Senate rules.

In the many years the Leadership Conference has fought for rules reform there has never been an opportunity as good as the one afforded by this Congress. Both House and Senate are in firm Democratic control and the House, which offers the best chances for change, has received a strong infusion of young liberal members.

Because it provides a rallying point for action, the Washington representatives of the Leadership Conference, at a special emergency night meeting this week, agreed to support most of the 8-point program being advanced by the Democratic Study Group. This is a confederation of more than 100 liberal Democrats whose ranks are expected to be enlarged by the newcomers.

We Must Get Busy Back Home

Since most Congressmen are home for Christmas and New Year's, the focus of our activity must be the home districts.

On Saturday, January 2, at 2:30 p.m. there will be a party caucus of all Democratic House members. Before that, on Saturday morning at 10:00 a.m. the Democratic Study Group will meet to discuss strategy.

In all home visits to Democratic Congressmen, particularly new ones, the thing to urge upon them is that they attend both gatherings: the DSG meeting for a preliminary briefing and the full party caucus to support the Study Group's recommendations for reforms.

What the DSG Proposes

These are the reforms the DSG will propose in the Party Caucus:

1. That two Democrats who worked for the Goldwater-Miller ticket, Rep. John Bell Williams (Miss.) and Albert W. Watson (S. C.), should be stripped of their seniority as a reproof for their defection.

2. That all Democratic Committee assignments made by the Committee on Committees at the start of Congress be subject to approval by the Party caucus as a way of breaking the deadening custom of assigning positions simply on the basis of length of service in the House.

3. That party ratios on all committees (including Ways and Means and Appropriations) should be revised to reflect the new 68 per cent Democratic control of the House.

Your members need to contact their Democratic Congressm and urge them to support these proposals.

Additional reforms will be considered in the caucus, too, but they will require floor action by the full House:

4. That the House be empowered, by majority vote, to take up a bill if the Rules Committee fails to clear it in 21 days. To set this procedure in motion, the Speaker may recognize the chairman of the committee handling the bill (or the ranking majority member who favors it, if the chairman does not) to call up the measure for House consideration.

5. That the House be empowered by majority vote to send to conference with the Senate any bill that has passed both Houses. Implementation of this procedure would also be at the Speaker's discretion. Its primary use would be to prevent the Rules Committee, as it sometimes does now, from bottling up measures.

6. That the number of Members' signatures needed on a discharge petition to take a bill away from a committee that is sitting on it, should be reduced from the present majority of 218 to 175.

7. That a Joint Committee on Congressional Reorganization be established to consider proposals to modernize House and Senate procedures and to update the 1946 Legislative Act.

At the Leadership Conference meeting last week, the consensus previously reported in our last MEMO (No. 49) was broadened to include all of these seven recommendations. Although there was no dissent from this decision at the meeting, it must be noted that not all of our cooperating organizations were represented and that some of the groups signified they have taken no position on these issues.

What You Can Do To Help

Between now and January 2, there is much that can be done:

1. Organize delegations to visit Congressmen. Since proposals aimed at circumventing a recalcitrant Rules Committee and easing the task of obtaining a discharge petition will be fought out on the floor, it is important to visit Republicans as well as Democrats.

2. Congressmen should be approached, wherever possible, by persons who may have been substantial contributors or active workers in their campaigns.

3. Cross-section delegations are particularly good. Urge your members to try to draw together representatives from local units or organizations that cooperate in the Leadership Conference.

4. Try to get local newspapers to carry editorials on the need for Rules reforms.

5. Discussions of Rules reform on radio and TV will help bring attention to the fight, particularly if your Congressman can be involved in the program.

What To Say

In general, delegations should tell their Congressmen that the DSG proposals provide a convenient rallying point for rules reform and should be supported. They should urge Democrats to attend the Study Group meeting Saturday morning and the full party caucus in the afternoon.

Please Report Back

It is absolutely essential that we get reports back on what Congressmen say. Please send us any information you receive about the comment, plans and attitudes of individual members of the House.

Legislation will move through Congress more quickly and smoothly if we win this fight.

NOTE: In order to provide you with background material on the fight for Rules reform, we enclose a reprint from the United Automobile Workers' Washington Report. It discusses the Rules situation in both the House and Senate.

JOHN BLATNIK of Minnesota, chairman of the Democratic Study Group, emphasizes the need for strong liberal leadership in the House of Representatives.

House Reforms Are Underway

Liberals in the House of Representatives want to streamline the rules.

An 8-point program to update Congress was approved last week by the steering committee of the Democratic Study Group—spokesmen for the caucus of the liberal Democrats in the House.

Heading the list is a demand that two Goldwater Democrats be purged from holding seniority during the 89th Congress.

Other top reforms call for a 21 day rule, bypassing the House Rules Committee when conservatives balk at OKing Johnson programs, and a speedup in getting conference reports out of the House. The powers of House Speaker John McCormack are enlarged in both cases.

Another reform calls for upping the number of Democrats on the powerful Ways and Means, and Appropriations committees to reflect the 2 to 1 arithmetic in the 1964 Democratic sweep.

Another unloosener—175 signatures on a discharge petition (it's now 218)—would also guarantee a speedup in legislative action.

"We've sat around here in Washington at the mercy of conservatives who don't care two hoots about education, the war on poverty, medicare, or public works," said one member of Congress. "Now I think we've got a way to break the conservative grip on Congress and get on with the President's program."

Here is a rundown on the 8 proposals put forth by the DSG:

1. Purge two Goldwater Democrats. Both Watson of South Carolina and Williams of Mississippi thumbed their noses at the warning given just before the election by House liberals. A statement by Blatnik, Bolling, Hansen, Holifield, O'Hara, Price, Reuss, Thompson of N.J., Brademas and Udall laid down the gauntlet to other House members to support the Johnson-Humphrey ticket. Some conservative Democrats dragged their feet, but two went out of their way to flaunt the liberal challenge.

2. Give Democratic caucus final say on committee assignments. As things stand now, the Democratic members of Ways and Means makes the committee assignments and there is no appeal over their decision. Some worthy Democrats could be saddled with poor committee assignments unless this reform is made.

3. Up Democratic membership on Ways and Means, and Appropriations. The DSG calls for 17 (two more than now) Democrats on Ways and Means, and 34 (five more than now) on Appropriations to reflect the 2 to 1 majority Democrats now enjoy in Congress.

4. Give a Democratic Policy or Steering Committee stronger voice. There is no regular way members of Congress can now express their views on party strategy on legislation. Such a group would allow for liberal wishes on the President's program to be heard.

5. Push for congressional reorganization. The DSG thinks the time is ripe for another hard look at the cumbersome way Congress is organized, and an updating of the LaFollette-Monroney reorganization act is felt desirable at this time.

6. Invoke 21 day rule. Under this recommendation, the Speaker "may" call up a bill if the committee chairman or the ranking majority member who favors the bill finds he must bypass the Rules Committee, where too many good programs have floundered.

7. Ease rules on conference reports. The same procedure would be used to bypass the Rules Committee so that conference reports could not be pocketed by Rules Chairman Howard Smith of Virginia.

8. Discharge petition by 175 signatures. Reduce from 218 to 175 the number of signatures needed for a discharge petition, but only if the House Speaker gave his approval.

ACTION MEMO:

Nearly all Congressmen will be home during the Christmas holidays. Call or visit them and stress the need for bringing the rules of Congress into the 20th Century.

The 8 point proposals of the Democratic Study Group in the House are a modest first step toward reform of the House of Representatives. In the Senate —the need for changing Rule 22 is long overdue.

Congress may stumble during the next two years. The mandate for action expressed in the 1964 election could be lost, unless the House and Senate has modern rules to move quickly along the main highways of progress.

JAN 11 1965

To Heads of National Organizations and Washington Representatives

Dear Friend:

Please mark two important dates on your calendar at once: Thursday, January 28 and Friday, January 29.

On the 28th, the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights is holding an all-day meeting on one of the major sections of the Civil Rights Act, Title VI, which prohibits discrimination in all Federally-assisted programs. Top government officials will present what their agencies are doing to carry out their responsibilities under this sweeping provision. There will be ample opportunity for questions and discussion. We are cooperating with the Commission in this program and we have given them your name. You should receive the Commission's formal invitation within the next day or so.

In addition, we plan to hold a followup meeting on the morning of the 29th, probably from 9:30 a.m. until lunch. This is a meeting for Leadership Conference representatives and it will concern itself primarily with how our cooperating organizations can work for effective enforcement of the Civil Rights Act on the state and local level.

We consider the sessions on both days to be of paramount importance. If you yourself are unable to come, we urge you to send an alternate. Considering the kinds of activities we will consider, we believe it would be valuable if those members of your national staff who are in charge of your program activities or who maintain liaison with your local chapters and branches also attended these meetings.

If you like, send us their names and we will see that they are formally invited.

We will send you additional details on our meeting as soon as they are available. Hope to see you at the end of the month.

Sincerely,

Arnold Aronson

MEMO: No. 53
January 18, 1965

THE PROSPECT BRIGHTENS FOR A CURB ON FILIBUSTERS

To the surprise of the fainthearted, it now looks as if there is a good chance that the Senate will change its rules and make it easier to end a filibuster. During the complex and shifting floor maneuvers of a week or so ago, there was strong indication that the biennial effort of Senate liberals to amend Rule 22 might not get off the ground. Yet, when the parliamentary dust had settled on the afternoon of Friday, January 8, the anti-filibuster forces found themselves in a position so advantageous it is possible to hope for victory. Our support at this time may make that hope a certainty.

The succession of events is extraordinary enough to merit a more detailed inspection than the hasty bulletin we thrust into the last MEMO just before mailing.

Leadership Conference Urges the Fight

At a special meeting in November, the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights resolved to push for a change in the filibuster rule even though the cautious warned there was little likelihood of success.

On the afternoon of Sunday, January 3rd, a strategy meeting was held, attended by 20 Senators or their representatives and two Leadership Conference spokesmen, Clarence Mitchell and Joseph Rauh.

At this session, Senator Clinton P. Anderson (D., N.Mex.), who has led five such fights in the past 12 years, agreed once more to lead the campaign to amend Rule 22, the standing rule of the Senate that requires a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present and voting to impose cloture and end a filibuster.

On January 6, he introduced a resolution (S.Res. 6) that would reduce the number of Senators needed to close debate to three-fifths of those present and voting.

At the same time, Senator Paul Douglas (D., Ill.) another veteran leader in the Rule 22 fights, proposed a resolution (S.Res. 8) backed by Republican Whip Thomas Kuchel (R., Cal.) and 15 other Senators, that would permit a constitutional majority of the Senate (51 Senators) to vote cloture after 15 days of debate.

Opponents Try To Block Change

As everyone anticipated, the forces of opposition, notably Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen (Ill.) and Senator Richard Russell (D., Ga.) promptly tried to block consideration of the Anderson and Douglas proposals. Senator Dirksen moved to send them to the Senate Rules Committee for almost certain burial.

However, Senator Anderson then proposed an amendment to the Dirksen motion that would instruct the Rules Committee to report back his and Senator Douglas' resolution by "a day certain" and that "all rights in existence at the opening of Congress shall be deemed preserved."

It was the last phrase in the Anderson amendment to the Dirksen motion that touched off fireworks. Senator Russell objected. He said it went beyond permissible instruction to a committee and for a moment it looked as if a long and fiery battle was going to be joined.

Is The Senate A Continuing Body?

What lay behind Senator Russell's objection to Senator Anderson's request that any rights present at the opening of Congress be kept intact?

"At the heart of the fight over the rules changes," E. W. Kenworthy observed in the New York Times for January 6, "is an intricate and - for the layman - tedious question: Is the Senate a continuing body whose rules carry over from one Congress to the next?

"The Southerners say yes. They argue that any motion to amend the rules is therefore subject to debate that can be shut off only by the two-thirds vote required in Rules 22."

The liberals say yes, too. But they make an exception in regard to Rule 22. The Constitution, as Mr. Kenworthy points out, gives both House and Senate the right to determine their own rules by a vote of the majority. But how can they do so, liberals ask, if it takes more than a majority to end debate over a proposed rules change?

Will The Vice-President Decide?

The difficult question of whether or not debate of a proposed change in rules can be shut off by a majority or two-thirds has been posed many times to the Vice President, as presiding officer of the Senate. Each time he has handed the question right back to the Senate.

However, Vice President Richard M. Nixon, in 1957, offered an "advisory" opinion to the effect that where a rule from a previous Congress "has the expressed or practical effect of denying the majority of the Senate in a new Congress the right to adopt the rules under which it desires to proceed (that rule) is ... unconstitutional.

A majority of the Senate of a new Congress, he made clear, could close debate and vote on the rules by which the Senate of that Congress was to be governed.

This opinion was reaffirmed in 1959 and 1961.

What To Do Till Humphrey Comes

The last person Senate liberals wanted to consider such a question is Senator Carl Hayden (D., Ariz.), the 88-year-old President Pro Tempore, who presides over the Senate until Hubert Humphrey is sworn in on January 20 and officially assumes office.

So Anderson, Douglas and their supporters welcomed a referral of their proposals to the Rules Committee as a way of marking time until Humphrey takes the chair. But it was crucial to their strategy that in any referral to committee they preserve, upon the return of the issue to the Senate, the right to raise the constitutional question in the exact form in which it can be raised in the first days of a new Congress.

On January 7, Senator Hayden gave so garbled an opinion on whether or not rights could be preserved in a referral, that the Senate was forced into a recess. The issue was promptly raised again when the Senate reconvened on the 8th. And to everyone's surprise it met with an unexpected and happy resolution.

Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D., Mont.) moved that the Anderson and Douglas proposals be referred to the Senate Rules Committee with instructions that it report them back by March 9. When Mr. Anderson asked if that meant all existing rights would be preserved, Mr. Mansfield replied, "Yes, of course."

What Was Behind The Move?

Since a single objection could have blocked referral, it is unclear why neither Senator Russell nor Senator Dirksen offered their usual opposition. Possibly they, too, are prepared to accept some form of compromise.

In any event, the proposals for amending Rule 22 now lie in committee for more than a month. When they come back to the Senate, Humphrey will be presiding. One possibility is that he will take his direction from Mr. Nixon and rule that a majority can end a debate over the adoption of rules. This would enable the adoption of a liberalizing amendment to Rule 22. Or it may be that Mr. Humphrey won't have to rule - if the Southerners filibuster for only a limited time and then let the matter come to a vote.

What We Can Do Meantime

There has been no decision, yet, on whether the Rules Committee will hold hearings and afford proponents of the Anderson and Douglas proposals an opportunity to present testimony.

Meanwhile, the most important thing cooperating organizations and supporters of the Conference can do is to bombard all members of the Rules Committee with letters urging them to adopt the Douglas amendment to permit a constitutional majority to cut off debate.

A show of strong support for this proposal will improve chances for its adoption and insure at least the Anderson three-fifths proposition.

Civil rights legislation in the field of voting is sure to come before this session. We can help make its way through Congress easier by pushing for rules reform now.

Here are the members of the Senate Rules Committee:

Democrats	Republicans
B. Everett Jordan, North Carolina	Carl T. Curtis, Nebraska
Carl Hayden, Arizona	John Sherman Cooper, Kentucky
Howard W. Cannon, Nevada	Hugh Scott, Pennsylvania
Claiborne Pell, Rhode Island
Joseph S. Clark, Pennsylvania
Robert C. Byrd, West Virginia

Wire and write all of them, here in Washington, urging them to endorse the Douglas-Kuchel majority resolution for bringing a filibuster to a close!

NEW TITLE VI REGULATIONS ISSUED

Fourteen government agencies have now issued their regulations, under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act, to assure nondiscrimination in Federally-assisted Programs. Essentially, they are much like the first sets of regulations issued by seven other agencies on December 4. (See MEMO: No. 49). Leadership Conference lawyers are studying them.

The regulations appear in two separate issues of the Federal Register:
1. Those for the Departments of State, and Commerce; the Agency for International Development; National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA); Office of Economic Opportunity; Office of Emergency Planning; Small Business Administration and the Tennessee Valley Authority appear in the Register for Saturday, Jan. 9, Vol. 30, No. 6, Part II. It costs 15 cents a copy.

Regulations for the Atomic Energy Commission, Civil Aeronautics Board, Coast Guard, Defense Department, Federal Aviation Agency and the Veterans Administration appear in the Register for Dec. 31, 1964, Vol. 29, Number 254. That costs 25 cents a copy. Copies may be ordered, prepaid, from:

Dear Friend:

The U. S. Civil Rights Commission is planning to hold a series of regional meetings in various parts of the country during the coming months. These conferences, like the one the Commission held here in Washington on January 28th, will be concerned primarily with what local communities can do to see that the benefits of nearly 200 Federally-aided programs are made available on a non-discriminatory basis, as required by Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

We are cooperating with the Commission in the arrangements for these meetings. The first one is scheduled to be held in Atlanta, Georgia on Friday, March 5. In preparation for that meeting the Commission would like the names of professional and semi-professional persons in your organization who work in the seven-state region it hopes to reach through the Atlanta meeting. If you have no professionals in this area, the Commission would probably consider inviting a key lay person. Since the Commission is limited by space to a meeting of about 700 persons, it would be a good idea to limit your list to those representatives of your group whom you feel it is most important to invite and even, if possible, to establish your own priority on the invitations. The seven states involved in this Conference are: North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee.

Please mail your list direct to us at our Washington address as soon as possible. We would like to have all lists within a week. We will see that they are transmitted to the Commission. There is an opportunity here to bring information to where it will do most good: to people on the local level who are in the best position to see that the Act is being enforced.

Please let us have your names as soon as possible.

Sincerely yours,

Arnold Aronson

MEMO: No. 54
February 2, 1965

HOW SHALL WE USE TITLE VI TO FIGHT DISCRIMINATION?

The school official who denies free lunches to colored children; the hospital that puts its Negro patients in inferior, segregated wards have been put on notice by the Vice President of the United States. "I'm going to be looking over the transom," Hubert H. Humphrey said.

The occasion for this warning was the U. S. Civil Rights Commission's all-day public conference on Title VI, the section of the Civil Rights Act that prohibits discrimination in all Federally-aided programs. Mr. Humphrey was the highest ranking government official at last Thursday's meeting, who publicly announced his determination to see that this far-reaching section of the Act is adequately enforced. He has been charged by the President to do this, as part of his task of coordinating all Federal activities relating to civil rights. But it is a job to which he brings deep personal conviction.

Other Top Officials Say They're Ready, Too

One of the best things to come out of the meeting was the succession of statements by top government executives that they, too, were ready to use the new powers of Title VI. These announcements mitigated the disappointment felt by some of those attending the meeting at what they believe is the air of caution with which the task of enforcement is being approached.

From the Vice President on down, the government officials made it clear they plan to use "voluntary conciliation" first in settling complaints. The power that Title VI gives the government to cut off funds for a particular program if a state or locality persists in discriminating against persons because of race, color or national origin (there is no mention of creed) is, Mr. Humphrey said, "a last resort and one that I sincerely hope will never have to be used."

"The objective of Title VI," he declared, "is to eliminate discrimination, not to shut down government programs or withhold funds."

The magnitude of the task outlined at the Commission's session makes it plain that government agencies will have difficulty trying to discharge their responsibilities under Title VI alone. There are 10 other titles that must be enforced.

The implication is clear: private voluntary groups must supplement the government's efforts in monitoring compliance with the Act.

The Leadership Conference Pledges Support

This obligation was recognized at the follow-up meeting the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights held at the Statler Hotel the very next morning. Nearly 200 representatives of the Conference's 89 national organizations endorsed a course of action aimed at keeping compliance with Title VI as well as other sections of the Act under nation-wide surveillance. They agreed on the necessity to train their members in the art of filing complaints wherever they find evidence of discrimination.

Why A Conference On Title VI?

The Commission was fully justified in devoting a whole day to one section of the Act. Consider the pervasive nature of Title VI: the government pays full or partial cost of a vast network of more than 190 programs in aid of education, health, community improvement, employment, welfare and agriculture. Every state is affected. The new Federal budget calls for payments that will total $13.6 billion. These Federal payments account, on the average, for 15 per cent of the total revenues collected by states and localities. In some states the government's payments constitute 32 per cent of all income.

In attempting to end discrimination in these programs, we have President Johnson's words as sanction: "It is simply justice that all should share in programs financed by all."

The Conference Draws A Record Crowd

The Civil Rights Commission had expected about 700 persons at its Thursday session. More than 1,000 attended. After morning meetings in the vast Interdepartmental Auditorium at which they were addressed by the Vice President and the Chairman of the Civil Rights Commission, John A. Hannah, the assembly broke up into panels.

The panel sessions, which were addressed by high ranking officials such as Office of Education Commissioner Francis Keppel and Robert C. Weaver, Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, gave some indication of the vast reach of Title VI. They dealt with Health and Welfare; Agricultural and Rural Area Development; Manpower Services; Housing and Community Development; Elementary and Secondary Education; and Higher Education.

It is difficult to summarize the information that was presented at these sessions and the questions they elicited. The Civil Rights Commission taped all the meetings and expects to prepare a summary of the proceedings. The Leadership Conference office will inform cooperating organizations when this material is available. It also hopes to send you within the next few weeks the Commission's Analysis of Title VI.

Enforcement Needs Complaints

Meanwhile, as one Commission official remarked during the proceedings, "We will be relying on complaints." He also pointed out a most significant fact:

complaints may be filed by organizations. The whole burden does not rest on agrieved individuals who are sometimes too poor or too timid to act in their own behalf.

At the Leadership Conference meeting in the Statler, there was considerable discussion of how cooperating groups can best generate complaints.

One method was through the distribution of questionnaires that the local memberships of our cooperating groups can use to estimate to what extent, if any, government aided programs - school lunches, training institutes, farm loans, employment services, etc. - are administered on a discriminatory basis. Three model questionnaires on Agriculture, Manpower Services and Hospitals were presented to the group. J. Francis Pohlhaus, NAACP's Washington counsel and Mrs. Cernoria Johnson of the National Urban League, who helped prepare two of these documents led the discussion of their use.

It was proposed that additional questionnaires covering other areas be prepared. But the Leadership Conference, while it can supply these checklists, must look to its cooperating organizations to distribute them and refer complaints to the proper government agencies.

Title VI Conferences May Be Nation-wide

The Civil Rights Commission's Title VI conference was, in a sense, a practice session for similar meetings the Commission plans to hold in various sections of the country. These regional meetings will be used to bring information on Title VI to people at the local level. The first of these meetings is scheduled to be held in Atlanta, Georgia on Friday, March 5th. The Commission hopes to draw state and local officials and professional employees of organizations in seven states: North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi and Florida. The Leadership Conference is cooperating with the Commission on whom to invite. Additional regional meetings are expected to be scheduled shortly.

Leadership Conference Considers Its Own Meetings

It was the overwhelming consensus of the representatives attending the session at the Statler that the Leadership Conference should hold follow-up meetings right after the Commission's regional meetings. Organizations within the Conference are expected to assume responsibilities for planning these sessions. We will make additional details available as they become known.

PROGRESS REPORT ON: THE FIGHT TO CURB FILIBUSTERS

The Conference meeting also received a progress report of the current campaign in the Senate to curb filibusters.

Once again organizational representatives were urged, as our last MEMO (No. 53) also urged, to bombard members of the Senate Rules Committee with messages.

That Committee is presently considering proposals to amend Rule 22 in order to make it easier to stop a filibuster. It must report back to the Senate by March 9th. Now is the time to ask all Committee members to support the Douglas-Kuchel proposal that a vote of 51 Senators - a constitutional majority - should be enough to close off debate and let the Senate bring a bill to a vote. Send your wires and letters to: Senators B. Everett Jordan (D., N. C.), Carl Hayden (D., Ariz.), Howard W. Cannon (D., Nev.), Claiborne Pell (D., R.I.), Joseph S. Clark (D., Pa.), Robert C. Byrd (D., West Va.), Carl T. Curtis (R., Neb.), John Sherman Cooper (R., Ky.), Hugh Scott (R., Pa.).

NOTE TO WASHINGTON REPRESENTATIVES: The next meeting of the Leadership Conference will be held on Thursday, February 11, at 10 a.m. in the second floor meeting room of the Philip Murray Building, 1626 16th Street, N.W. Dear Friend:

The pressure of work, notably the involvement of many members of its staff in the current hearings in Mississippi, has forced the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights to postpone the first in its series of proposed regional conferences.

As we explained in our last letter on this subject, the Commission plans to hold these one-day meetings throughout the country in order to inform as many citizens as possible of the provisions of the Act, particularly Title VI, the section that prohibits discrimination in all Federally assisted programs.

Instead of holding its first meeting in Atlanta, the Commission now proposes to inaugurate these conferences in Dallas, Texas. It will be held some time during the week of March 22nd. We shall have to inform you of the exact date later. In preparation for this meeting, the Commission would like organizations cooperating in the Leadership Conference to provide it with the names of their professional or semi-professional workers in the region. In the absence of such workers, the Leadership Conference suggests you send the name or names of key lay leaders in your organization. Send them to us, first, since we would like such lists for our own files; and we will forward them. Since the Commission faces limitations of space, we ask that you establish priorities and try to keep your list as brief as possible.

The states from which the Commission seeks to draw participants to the Dallas meeting are: Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana, Missouri and Kansas.

The Atlanta meeting will still be held. The new date is Wednesday, April 14. To the states we previously announced, the Commission is adding Virginia. If you have already sent us names of those in your organization who should be invited we ask you, now, to send us the name or names of those in Virginia who should be asked to come.

If you have not yet sent in any names, you may want us to recall that in addition to Georgia and Virginia, the other states asked to participate in the Atlanta meeting are: North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee.

We need hardly add that such regional meetings as these will help Conference organizations create an informed and vigilant membership that will work for the enforcement of the Civil Rights Act.

Sincerely,

Arnold Aronson

TO: Cooperating Organizations

FROM: Arnold Aronson, Secretary

ANTI-FILIBUSTER HEARINGS START: WE PLAN TO TESTIFY

We are ready to take our next step in the campaign to curb filibusters. On Tuesday, February 23 and on Monday, March 1, the Senate Rules Committee will hold hearings on proposals to modify Rule 22 and make it easier to shut off debate.

It is essential that the views of the Leadership Conference be presented at these hearings. Because we do not wish to afford the Committee any reason to prolong hearings and because we believe a unified approach will have the maximum effect, we suggest that a single statement be presented on March 1, by Roy Wilkins as chairman of the Leadership Conference and Joseph Rauh as counsel.

The Conference Backs "Constitutional Majority" Proposal

In the short time remaining, it will not be possible to complete a draft of the statement and circulate the full text. However, the statement we contemplate would reaffirm the Leadership Conference's long-standing support for the bi-partisan proposal advanced by Senator Paul Douglas (D., Ill.) and the Republican Whip Thomas Kuchel (R., Cal.). Their resolution (S.Res. 8), in which they are joined by 15 other Senators, would permit a constitutional majority of the Senate (51 members) to invoke cloture. Since cloture could not be imposed under this plan until 15 days had elapsed, ample time would be provided for full and free debate.

Please let us know no later than Thursday, February 25 if we may include the name of your organization among those supporting the Conference's statement.

TO: Cooperating Organizations

FROM: Arnold Aronson, Secretary

WOULD YOUR ATTORNEYS LIKE A CONFERENCE ON TITLE VI?

Following the January conference here in Washington on Title VI, the section of the Civil Rights Act that prohibits discrimination in Federally-assisted programs, several attorneys in our cooperating groups expressed an interest in a more technical discussion of the section with government officials.

We will be happy to arrange such a meeting if we can determine, first, how many attorneys in the Leadership Conference organizations would be interested in participating. This would be a closed session. The government attorneys would, we think, be willing to talk off the record. But because of its technical nature it would have to be limited to attorneys only.

Please let us know if your attorneys would like such a conference and we will make the necessary arrangements.

Replies should reach us by Thursday, March 11. We will then send your attorneys the information on the time and place.

NOTE: Because the Leadership Conference office is in the process of moving, please send your replies to 100 Massachusetts Ave., N.W., Washington, D. C.

RE: U. S. Civil Rights Commission Regional Meetings

THE FINAL DATES AND STATES ARE SET: WE STILL NEED YOUR LISTS

The U. S. Civil Rights Commission has finally fixed the dates for the first of its regional conferences on the Civil Rights Act, with particular emphasis on Title VI and the regulations prohibiting discrimination in all Federally-assisted projects.

First Meeting: Dallas, Texas, Thursday, March 25 (Adolphus Hotel)

The states from which this conference will draw its participants are now - Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and New Mexico. New Mexico is an addition. If there are paid professionals or leaders in your organization there who should be invited, please send their names to us.

Second Regional Meeting: Atlanta, Ga., Wednesday, April 14

The states involved are now Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina and Tennessee. Lists for these states have been requested in our earlier letter.

The Commission tells us they regret these many changes, but note that these are the first conferences of their kind and it has had little precedent in the planning of them.

MEMO: No. 55
March 8, 1965

THE ANTIFILIBUSTER FIGHT SHIFTS TO THE SENATE FLOOR

The drive to curb filibusters goes on despite a temporary setback in the Senate Rules Committee last week. It was a matter for keen disappointment when the Committee, by a vote of 5-to-4, decided not to recommend any change in the present filibuster rule (Rule 22). Its negative report will be made to the Senate on March 9, as required by January's unanimous consent agreement (see MEMO No. 53). Some time after that the issue comes before the Senate. All our efforts in behalf of rules reform must now be directed at the full Senate body.

Leadership Conference Calls For Change

At a hearing just two days before the Committee voted, Roy Wilkins, as Chairman of the Leadership Conference, and Joseph L. Rauh, Jr., as Counsel, made strong pleas for reform, urging the Rules Committee to support the Douglas-Kuchel bi-partisan resolution (S.Res.8) which would permit a constitutional majority of the Senate (51 Senators) to vote cloture after full and fair debate for at least five weeks. Only through such amendment, they argued, can majority rule prevail in the Senate.

A One-Vote Miss

The close vote in the Committee was painful. A switch of a single vote would have sent to the Senate a report recommending a modified version of the Anderson-Morton resolution (S.Res.6) which would reduce from two-thirds to three-fifths the number of Senators needed to close debate. The four Senators who voted in favor of some kind of rules reform were Senators Joseph Clark (D., Pa.), John Sherman Cooper (R., Ky.), Hugh Scott (R., Pa.), and Claiborne Pell (D., R.I.).

The five who voted against any reform were Senators B. Everett Jordan (D., N.C.), chairman of the Rules Committee; Carl Hayden (D., Ariz.), Howard W. Cannon (D., Nev.), Robert C. Byrd (D., W.Va.), and Carl T. Curtis (R., Neb.).

Why Did The Antifilibuster Forces Lose?

One reason for the poor showing was insufficient pressure from the public for a change in Rule 22. In spite of numerous appeals from the Leadership Conference, it appears that only a few of our cooperating organizations sent wires to the Rules Committee in support of the Douglas-Kuchel resolution. We shall have to do a File - voting legisl.

You have already received a description of these amendments in our last MEMO, No. 57. These changes in language are already being circulated among Members of Congress. MEMORANDUM TO: Members of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights and all participating groups in the American Civil Rights Movement

FROM: Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.,
President of Southern Christian Leadership Conference

SUBJECT: VOTING LEGISLATION

This memorandum is being sent to clarify and supplement the position of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference in relationship to the memorandum dated February 27, 1965, subject: "Voting Legislation." However, I must make clear that the memorandum of February 27th does not accurately reveal either the manner in which I feel so important a debate should take place nor does the memorandum fully represent the spirit and position of the SCLC.

In the first place, I believe that the Civil Rights Act of 1964 was a tremendously positive achievement. The public accommodations and fund withholding titles have already had significant impact; the employment section will have, I trust, great effect commencing in July. We all knew that the voting section of the 1964 Act would prove ineffectual and that additional legislation would be necessary. Not only do we believe that the 1964 Act was a great step forward, but we also know that it could only have been accomplished by the unity of the more than 80 groups within the Leadership Conference working together in mutual trust and confidence.

It is most important for the Civil Rights movement to support the strongest possible voting legislation. I know that this is the overwhelming view of the members of the Leadership Conference. We must all strive to bring about a unified position of the Leadership Conference and then working through the Conference carry that position to fruition. In any event, wherever disagreements exist they should be worked out fully, debated and resolved, within the framework of the Leadership Conference.

In the last analysis, the Administration will draft and send to Congress its own legislation. Our job is to achieve the kind of unity which will assure the passage of a voting bill which once and for all will guarantee the right of universal suffrage.

All of us working together can bring about another legislative victory.

AMENDMENTS PROPOSED BY

LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE ON CIVIL RIGHTS

To H.R. 6400

I

(i) Leadership Conference testimony March 24, 1965 urged:

"1) The total elimination of the poll tax as a restriction on voting in state and local elections as well as in federal elections."

(ii) Suggested language for proposed amendment:

"On line 6, page 6, delete all of Sec. 5(e) and on line 13, page 11, insert a new section as follows: 'Sec. 12. No state or political subdivision shall deny or deprive any person of the right to register or to vote because of his failure to pay a poll tax or any other tax or payment as a pre-condition of registration or voting.' Renumber Sections 12 and 13."

(iii) This amendment would have the effect of abolishing the poll tax in Mississippi, Alabama, Virginia and Texas (Arkansas has already passed a constitutional amendment authorizing the abolition of the poll tax and an implementing statute is expected promptly).

II

APPLYING DIRECTLY TO FEDERAL EXAMINER

(i) Leadership Conference testimony on March 24, 1965 urged:

> "2) The elimination of the requirement in the bill that a prospective registrant must first go before the state official to attempt to register before going to the Federal registrar or examiner. The prospective registrant ought not to be put to the delays, the hardships, and the indignity of attempting to satisfy hostile state officials before he can come to the Federal Registrar."

(ii) Suggested language for proposed amendment:

> "On line 19, page 4, change the comma after the word 'vote' to a period and delete the remainder of Sec. 5.(a)."

(iii) This amendment would have the effect of permitting an applicant for registration to go directly to the Federal examiner without first having to try out the state authorities.

III

EXPANDED COVERAGE

(i) Leadership Conference testimony on March 24, 1965 urged:

> "3) Extended coverage of the registrar or examiner provisions of the bill, so that persons who have been wrongfully denied the right to vote, regardless of their geographical location, will have the benefits of these provisions of the legislation."

(ii) Suggested language for proposed amendments:

"On line 19, page 3, after the word 'residents' insert '(i)' and on line 20, page 3, after the words 'section 3(a)' insert the following: 'or (ii) of a political subdivision with respect to which the Director of the Census has certified to the Attorney General that the number of persons of any race or color who were registered to vote on November 1, 1964 was less than 25 percent of the number of all persons of such race or color of voting age residing in such subdivision,'"

"On line 15, page 4, insert a new subsection as follows: '(c) Whenever the Attorney General receives complaints in writing from twenty or more residents of a political subdivision not covered by the provisions of section 4 (a), alleging that they have been denied the right to vote under color of law by reason or race or color and he believes such complaints to be meritorious, the Attorney General shall appoint a hearing officer to hold a hearing and determine whether there exists in such political subdivision a pattern or practice of denial of the right to vote on account of race or color. Whenever the Attorney General certifies that a hearing officer has determined that such a pattern or practice does exist in such political subdivision, the Civil Service Commission shall appoint examiners for such subdivision in accordance with section 4(a). The determination of the hearing officer shall be reviewable in a three-judge district court convened in the District of Columbia in an action for declaratory judgment against the United States by the affected political subdivision or by one or more of the twenty residents making the original complaint. The findings of the hearing officer if supported by substantial evidence shall be conclusive. There shall be no stay of any action of the examiners appointed by the Civil Service Commission unless and until the said three-judge district court shall determine that the findings of the hearing officer are not supported by substantial evidence."

(iii) These amendments would have the effect of broadening the coverage of HR 6400. While leaving intact the excellent automatic provisions of the Administration bill covering Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Georgia, Virginia, South Carolina and 34 counties of North Carolina, they would provide for examiners in other political subdivisions if

(1) less than 25 percent of a racial group were registered on November 1, 1964 and twenty residents complained to the Attorney General that they had been denied the right to vote, or

(2) twenty residents in any subdivision complained to the Attorney General that they had been denied the right to vote and a hearing officer found, after hearing, that there is a pattern or practice of discrimination in such subdivision.

IV

PREVENTING INTIMIDATION

(i) Leadership Conference testimony March 24, 1965 urged:

"4) Further and maximum protection of registrants and voters both those who will be registered under the bill and those already registered, and prospective registrants, from all economic and physical intimidation and coercion. In extending such protection, the Federal Government should use the full range of its powers, criminal, civil and economic, to protect the citizen from the beginning of registration process until his vote has been cast and counted."

(ii) Suggested language for proposed amendments:

"On line 16, page 7 delete the entire Section 7, and substitute the following:

'Sec. 7 No person, whether acting under color of law or otherwise, shall fail or refuse to permit a person to vote whose name appears on a list transmitted in accordance with section 5 (b), or is otherwise qualified to vote, or fail or refuse to count such person's vote, or intimidate, threaten or coerce any person for registering or attempting to register, or assisting one registering or attempting to register, or for voting or attempting to vote under the authority of this Act or otherwise."

"On line 14, page 10, insert a new subsection as follows:

'(g) Whoever shall deprive or attempt to deprive any person of any right secured by section 2 or 3 or who shall violate section 7 shall be subject to a civil penalty in the amount of $500 for each act of deprivation, or violation, or attempt. Such penalty shall be collected on behalf of the affected individual by a civil action, brought by the United States in the district court for the district in which such act, violation, or attempt occurs or in the district in which the person responsible for such act, violation, or attempt is found. In any action brought hereunder involving any person acting under color or law who is in the employment of any state or political subdivision, said state or political subdivision shall be jointly liable and shall be made a party.'"

"On line 14, page 8, add the following at the end thereof: 'If the life of any person is placed in jeopardy, he shall be fined not more than $20,000 or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both.'"

"On line 2, page 9, add the following at the end thereof: 'If the life of any person is placed in jeopardy, he shall be fined not more than $20,000 or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both.'"

"On line 14, page 10, insert a new subsection as follows:*

'(g) Whenever an examiner has been appointed under this Act for any political subdivision, the Attorney General may assign representatives of the Department of Justice, including agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and United States Marshals, to observe any registration of voters, the conduct of any election, and the tabulation of votes at any election in such political subdivision. Such representatives shall be entitled to enter and to remain in any registration or voting place, or place where votes are tabulated. No person shall interfere with or refuse to admit to any such registration, or voting or tabulation place any representative of the Department of Justice. Any person who shall violate this provision shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both. In addition, the Attorney General may institute for the United States, or in the name of the United States, an action for preventive relief, including an application for a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order or other order, enjoining violations of this subsection.'"

* If the earlier suggestion of a civil penalty is adopted as subsection (g), this would, of course, become subsection (h).

(iii) These amendments would have the effect of broadening the prohibition on intimidation to cover all registrants and voters, provide for a $500 civil penalty for victims of acts of intimidation, increase penalties for violations of the Act where life is placed in jeopardy, and provide for F.B.I. agents and U.S. Marshals to observe registration, voting and counting.

* * * * * * *

The above constitute the substantive amendments agreed upon by the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights to strengthen the bill. A number of language and technical suggestions are being made to the Justice Department and we would appreciate an opportunity to discuss these suggestions with Committee counsel.

Dear Jim:

This letter is a frank appeal for financial assistance.

Coordinated planning and action through the Leadership Conference was indispensable in bringing about passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. That same kind of unified cooperative effort is needed now to assure speedy passage of an effective voting bill.

And that takes money.

The Leadership Conference has no paid professional staff and we rely on volunteers for much of our clerical work. Nevertheless, the irreducible expense of maintaining our office -- telephone, printing and publications, mailings, secretarial help, meetings and conferences has been averaging $2,000 a month. The kind of campaign we are mounting for the voting bill will require twice that amount. The Leadership Conference has no outside source of funds. It depends exclusively on voluntary contributions from the cooperating organizations to maintain operations.

We are deeply appreciative of the support we have received from you in the past. However, we have received no contribution from CORE since 1964.

We earnestly appeal to you, therefore, to send us as large a check as you can as promptly as you can. We have a splendid opportunity to insure, once and for all, the right of every American citizen to vote. We must not miss that opportunity by making less than an all-out effort.

With sincere thanks for your cooperation.

Cordially yours,

Arnie

April 8, 1965

Dear Friend:

Many organizations in the Leadership Conference are worried about the growing strength of the national movement to nullify last year's Supreme Court decision requiring states to apportion both houses of their legislature on a strict "one-man, one-vote" basis.

These groups point out that anti-civil rights forces are involved in the fight against reapportionment. There is evidence to suggest that some of the same men who led the opposition to the Civil Rights Act of 1964 are directing the attempt to overturn the Supreme Court's ruling through a constitutional amendment.

If they win, it would be a grave set back for civil rights. At the very moment Negroes are winning the right to vote, they face a threat that could reduce the value of that right. Most Negroes are city-dwellers. Most state legislatures are so mal-apportioned, they are controlled by forces indifferent or hostile to the needs of cities and their minorities.

To meet the threat of constitutional amendments, the concerned organizations are in the process of setting up The National Committee For Fair Representation. This is strictly an ad hoc organization, whose purpose is to mobilize citizen opposition to the campaign to void the "one-man, one-vote" rule. The Committee does not plan to perpetuate itself, once the threat to legislative reapportionment is past.

The groups have begun to meet and the enclosed pamphlet "The Vote Shrinkers" is the first piece of material they have issued.

Because of the implications for civil rights in the reapportionment struggle and because the Conference cannot undertake new obligations, we are glad to make our facilities available in order to inform you of the National Committee.

Some of the organizations involved in initiating the National Committee are the NAACP, the National Urban League, the AFL-CIO; the Industrial Union Department, AFL-CIO; the American Civil Liberties Union, the National Council of Churches, the Commission on Urban Life, the National Council of Jewish Women, Amalgamated Meat Cutters, United Auto Workers, and the International Ladies Garment Workers Union.

The officers of the National Committee are: Lawrence Speiser, Washington Counsel for the ACLU, President; and Dr. Royce Hanson, Professor at American University and a national authority on legislative reapportionment, Secretary-Treasurer.

The National Committee will function in precisely the same way as the Leadership Conference. Cooperating organizations would still preserve their full autonomy, any action taken would be on the basis of a consensus of the represented groups, and no organization's name would be used in any way without its expressed consent.

The need for organized action is urgent. If your organization will participate in the National Committee please fill out the enclosed card and return it as quickly as possible.

We hope the National Committee will develop the same broad representation that has made the Leadership Conference so effective. Considering the close connection between the fight for full equality in voting power and civil rights, we warmly invite you to join in this new endeavor.

Sincerely yours,

Arnold Aronson

TO: Cooperating Organizations

FROM: Arnold Aronson, Secretary

VOTING BILL FACES NEW HOUSE AND SENATE TESTS

The main purpose of this MEMO is to supply you with ammunition. The situation in which the Voting Rights Act finds itself is little changed since our last report. The Senate, by the time you read this, will have begun debate on the version of the bill (S. 1564) reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee. The full House Judiciary Committee is scheduled to begin consideration of its subcommittee version (H.R. 6400) on April 28.

Our task is to continue to urge Senators and Congressmen to support the strongest possible measure - the House and Senate versions with the further amendments and the few deletions we proposed in our last MEMO (No. 58).

If you have been able to see your Senator or Congressman during the Easter holidays or if you have reports from your members, please let us know what you have learned.

Aids To Victory - An Analysis and Two Speeches

To help you and your members in their approaches to members of Congress we enclose:

1. A Comparative Analysis of how the current House and Senate versions compare with the Administration Bill and with proposed Leadership Conference amendments.

2. A Speech on Poll Taxes by Senator Edward Kennedy (D., Mass.) which sets forth the basis for eliminating all poll tax requirements by law. (Both the House and Senate versions do eliminate the tax.) We must see that this provision stays in the bill. The Senator's speech presents a comprehensive argument for our position.

3. President Johnson's Voting Rights Message to a joint session of Congress. The most elopuent statement yet on the need for a Voting Rights Act.

Additional copies of the analysis and the Kennedy speech are available on request to this office. The Johnson speech may be ordered at $10 a hundred.

Arm yourself now. The full campaign for the voting rights bill is about to begin.

THE AGRICULTURE DEPARTMENT MOVES AGAINST DISCRIMINATION

At the direction of Secretary Orville Freeman, the Department of Agriculture has named three Negro farmers to serve on the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation (ASC) Committees in Mississippi, Arkansas and Maryland. The Department has also ordered the appointment of Negroes to the first vacancies that occur in the staffs of the ASC Committees - the units that help administer Federal farm aid programs.

Small steps, perhaps, but courageous ones. The rural South is furious. Mr. Freeman is being attacked by powerful farming interests in the South and by their allies in Congress.

We in the Leadership Conference must come to his support. As part of the Conference effort to see that Title VI of the Civil Rights Act is properly enforced, we have met with Mr. Freeman and members of his staff, urging them to end the discrimination documented by the U.S. Civil Rights Commission in its recent report, "Equal Opportunity In Farm Programs."

Now that the Department has begun to act, we should voice our approval. A letter of commendation from your organization to the Secretary would help right now. So would letters to Senators and Congressmen urging them to back the Department in its attempts to eradicate discrimination.

A Supplement to MEMO No. 59
April 26, 1965

KENNEDY SPEECH: WHY THE POLL TAX MUST BE BANNED

Here are Senator Edward Kennedy's speech on poll taxes and the President's speech on voting rights. Both are enclosures for MEMO No. 59.

In the few days since the first part of this MEMO was sent out, it has become increasingly clear that one of the dangers confronting the voting rights act is a strong campaign to knock out of the Senate and House versions of the bill the provision liberals were able to add in committee that would ban a poll tax in state and local elections. This symbol of harassment and repression must be destroyed. In all your approaches to Senators and Congressmen, urge them to fight to keep in the bill the provision that would eliminate the tax. The Kennedy speech can help you and your members by providing a comprehensive argument for eliminating all poll tax requirements.

Try to have excerpts from the speech reprinted in your local papers. Local editors can make good use of it in preparing editorials on the bill. If you can use additional copies let us know and we will send them to you.

As for the President's moving address, additional copies may be ordered from this office at $10 a hundred.

Time's short. We must get to work right now.

MEMO: NO. 60
April 29, 1965

TO: Cooperating Organizations

FROM: Arnold Aronson, Secretary

LET'S KEEP THE POLL TAX BAN IN THE BILL!

Remember 1963 and 1964? What the fight for a voting rights bill needs right now is one of the intensive telegram-letter writing campaigns of those years that helped improve and strengthen the Civil Rights Act. The sad truth is that during these crucial days in the life of the voting bill, letters are simply not coming in.

Needed: Phone Calls and Telegrams

At this moment, when the bill is being debated on the Senate floor and considered in the House Judiciary Committee, it is of utmost importance that your national officers and your membership phone, wire or write the President, the Senators and the members of the House Judiciary Committee* urging them to support the strongest possible bill, including the provision that would prohibit a poll tax as a requirement for voting in state and local elections.

There are other important amendments in the bill and we will continue to advise you about them as floor and committee consideration continues. But the poll tax provision is the pivotal issue. There is an aggressive campaign on in the House and Senate to eliminate the poll tax ban that bipartisan liberals have been able to add to the measure. The best counter to that campaign is a strong expression of our desire to see the poll tax provision kept in the bill.

A communication from the head of your organization, floods of letters from your membership would strengthen the resolve of supporters of the poll tax ban and perhaps win over uncertain members of Congress.

To help you formulate your own message we enclose the texts of telegrams that have already been sent to Congress by Roy Wilkins, Chairman of the Leadership Conference, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, George Meany, President of the AFL-CIO and Walter Reuther, President of the United Automobile Workers of America.

* See Memo. No. 58 for a list of the committee members.

Try To Get Editorial Support

Newspaper editorials backing a strong voting rights bill would be very helpful just now. We enclose one from the New York Times that is an excellent statement of the issues involved in getting effective voting legislation. Try to get local editors to publish similar editorials. If they do, send us copies. Inserted in the Congressional Record by members of Congress, they can help build the support we need at this time.

Please get to work at once. We have only a week or two in which to accomplish anything. Please write and wire your messages right now.

Here are the texts of the telegrams:

Roy Wilkins - Text of wire to the President

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE WOULD APPRECIATE YOUR SUPPORT FOR THE VITAL ANTI-POLL TAX PROVISION IN THE PENDING VOTING RIGHTS BILL. EFFECTIVENESS OF THE MEASURE WILL BE IMPAIRED IF THE PROVISION IS DELETED. CITIZENS DENIED THE VOTE BY THE POLL TAX HAVE NO WAY OF PROTECTING THEMSELVES AGAINST HOSTILITY OF MAYORS, SHERIFFS OR OTHER LOCAL OFFICIALS. THE RIGHT TO PARTICIPATE IN LOCAL AND STATE ELECTIONS IS CERTAINLY AS ESSENTIAL AS THE RIGHT TO ELECT FEDERAL OFFICIALS AND SOMETIMES MORE IMMEDIATELY IMPORTANT TO THE INDIVIDUAL CITIZEN. WE BELIEVE STRONGLY THAT PROCEDURE IS THOROUGHLY CONSTITUTIONAL AND WILL BE SO DECLARED BY THE COURTS SINCE THE POLL TAX HAS BEEN ADMITTEDLY A DEVICE CONCEIVED TO PREVENT NEGRO CITIZENS FROM VOTING. THUS IN OUR ESTIMATION IT COMES WITHIN THE PROHIBITION PROVISION OF THE 15TH AMENDMENT AND CANNOT STAND SOLELY AS A QUALIFICATION FOR VOTING SET BY THE STATES.

RESPECTFULLY,
/S/ROY WILKINS

Martin Luther King, Jr. - Text of wire sent to Senators

I URGE YOU TO SUPPORT THE SENATE COMMITTEE PROPOSED ELIMINATION OF POLL TAX. A 1965 VOTING BILL WHICH CONTAINS INIQUITOUS POLL TAX WOULD BE A NATIONAL TRAGEDY.

George Meany - Text of wire sent to Senators

THE AFL-CIO URGES THAT YOU SUPPORT ENACTMENT OF A STRONG VOTING BILL, INCLUDING ELIMINATION OF ALL POLL TAXES. AS I STATED IN MY CONGRESSIONAL TESTIMONY, "IT IS THE POSITION OF THE AFL-CIO THAT NO AMERICAN SHOULD HAVE TO BUY HIS RIGHT TO VOTE IN ANY ELECTION."

GEORGE MEANY

Walter Reuther - Text of wire sent to all Senators except Alabama and Mississippi

STRONGLY URGE YOUR SUPPORT OF HART, KENNEDY, JAVITS AMENDMENT TO VOTING RIGHTS BILL TO ABOLISH POLL TAXES. A VOTE TO SUSTAIN THE AMENDMENT IS A VOTE TO OPPRESS NEGROES OF MISSISSIPPI AND ALABAMA. THE MANY LAWYERS OF THE 90 ORGANIZATIONS IN THE LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE ON CIVIL RIGHTS ARE OF THE FIRM OPINION THAT CONGRESS HAS FULL POWER UNDER THE FOURTEENTH AND FIFTEENTH AMENDMENTS TO OUTLAW POLL TAX. NO ONE SHOULD PAY FOR RIGHT OF FRANCHISE. VOTE ON THIS ISSUE WILL PROBABLY BE MOST SIGNIFICANT CIVIL RIGHTS VOTE OF 1965. WE HOPE WE CAN COUNT ON YOU.

Dear Friend:

We wish to invite you to a special regional meeting of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights on Wednesday, May 19, in Washington, D.C. The meeting will be held in the Sheraton-Park Hotel, at 9:30am, in a room to be announced.

Our meeting will follow by one day the regional conference of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, to which we understand you have been invited. There are compelling reasons for our meeting. The Commission's Conference will include many state and local persons who have no primary interest in civil rights. Our meeting is aimed at those in the region who are active in the Civil Rights Movement. The Commission's meeting will be limited primarily to furnishing information about the Civil Rights Act, particularly Title VI, which prohibits discrimination in Federally-assisted programs. We will discuss how to put that information to most effective use in your community, how we can work for the best possible enforcement and implementation of the Act.

We believe a meeting with representatives from the region - District of Columbia, Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, North Carolina, Virginia and West Virginia - will benefit all of us. It will give you an opportunity to discuss with concerned individuals like yourself the problems you face in working for equal rights. It will give us in Washington on opportunity to learn how we can be of most help to you and your organization. We look forward to meeting you on this occasion.

Please let us know, by the enclosed card, if you will be able to be with us.

Sincerely yours,

Arnold Aronson

MEMO: No. 64
May 31, 1965

HOUSE GETS READY TO ACT; THE SENATE PASSES VOTING BILL

Now the fight for voting rights shifts to the House. On Tuesday, May 25, the Senate abruptly cut down debate on the bill by invoking cloture and passed the measure the very next day.

For anyone who recalls the high drama that accompanied last year's cloture vote, when the Senate for the first time in its history broke a filibuster on a civil rights bill, the events of this past Tuesday were mild indeed. Without any impassioned speeches or much show of resistance on the part of a group of rather subdued Southerners, the Senate imposed cloture by a vote of 70 to 30. That was three votes more than the two-thirds necessary to limit debate. Last year, cloture on the Civil Rights Act was invoked by a vote of 71 to 29. Whatever opposition there was to the bill quickly collapsed and the following afternoon, by a final vote of 77 to 19, the Senate adopted the measure. (Both the cloture vote and the final vote are given in attachments to this MEMO.)

How Good Is The Senate Bill?

Although the bill (S.1564) the Senate passed is a relatively good one, nothing that was added to it since our last MEMO (No. 63) has improved it enough to make it as good as the bill (H.R. 6400) the House will consider shortly.

At least one amendment the Senate accepted during its final days of consideration may be troublesome. This was a proposal by its Democratic Whip Russell Long of Louisiana, that would permit counties to obtain exemption from the law if they can show that 50 per cent of their Negro voters are registered and that there is no discrimination. It was the only amendment by a Southerner that the Senate did accept.

Another notable change in the final days was an amendment, by Senators Jacob Javits (R) and Robert Kennedy (D) that would extend the right to vote to any eligible resident who is illiterate in English if he can produce evidence of a sixth grade education or whatever standard a state prescribes in a school in any state, the District of Columbia or Puerto Rico where another language was used. The principal effect of the change will be to enfranchise more than 300,000 Spanish-speaking Puerto Ricans in New York, where an eighth grade education is required.

The Senate also adopted an amendment by Senator Joseph D. Tydings (D., Md.) that would exclude servicemen and their dependents from any calculation by the Census Bureau of the number of non-white voters in a state or county. This would remove a potential source of delay in implementing the bill since the Census Bureau would have trouble compiling statistics on servicemen if it had to include them in its count.

House Bill Is Still Stronger

As our last MEMO (No.63) pointed out, the bill that the House Judiciary Committee has approved, while similar to the Senate bill in many major respects, is still the stronger measure of the two. The principal difference, of course, and the one that may ultimately force a House-Senate conference on the bill is the House version's outright ban on the poll tax as a requirement for voting. The Senate rejected such a provision and adopted, instead, a declaration that the poll tax has been used to deny and abridge the right to vote in certain states. Its provision also authorizes the Attorney General to bring suit "forthwith" to test the constitutionality of the poll tax in the four states that still levy it.

The Rules Committee Gets It Next

The House Judiciary Committee may have completed and filed its report on the bill by the time this MEMO reaches you. If so, the bill then goes to the House Rules Committee to determine the rules for the House debate. It is generally expected that Rep. Howard Smith (D., Va.), Chairman of the Rules Committee, will hold hearings on the bill and try to keep it tied up as long as he can. That would be 21 calendar days, the limit the House imposed on him when it organized during the first days of this session. The bill may not reach the House floor until late in June.

Our Immediate Target: The Rules Committee

At this moment we need to do whatever we can to speed up consideration of the bill by the Rules Committee. Please have your officers and members wire and write members of the Rules Committee urging them to act on the bill as fast as possible. After 100 years of countenancing violations of the 15th Amendment, it is time for the House to stop delaying and to extend voting rights to millions of Americans.

Members of the House Rules Committee besides Mr. Smith are: Democrats: William M. Colmer (Miss.), Ray J. Madden (Ind.), James J. Delaney (N. Y.), James W. Trimble (Ark.), Richard Bolling (Mo.), Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr. (Mass.), B. F. Sisk (Cal.), John Young (Texas), and Claude Pepper (Fla.); Republicans: Clarence J. Brown (O.), H. Allen Smith (Cal.), John B. Anderson (Ill.), Dave Martin (Neb.), and James H. Quillen (Tenn.).

You can reach them by addressing your messages in care of The Capitol, Washington 25, D. C. Just be sure to send them some kind of message.

LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE TO FIGHT FIRING OF NEGRO TEACHERS

One of the most pernicious developments in the long fight for school integration is the growing number of instances, particularly in Southern states, where Negro teachers have been demoted or fired in newly desegregated school systems. At the U. S. Civil Rights Commission's mid-Atlantic regional meeting in Washington on May 18, civil rights leaders and workers were dismayed and angered to hear officials of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare say they may not be able to do anything to see that qualified Negro teachers continue to teach newly desegregated schools.

A consequence of this reaction was a resolution passed by those attending the Leadership Conference's own regional meeting the next morning. Delegates from state branches of our cooperating organizations, acting in their own name and not in the name of the conference, issued a resolution calling upon the President to use his authority "to insist that experienced, qualified and certified Negro teachers be given full and equal consideration in the staffing of our American schools."

It is the intention of the Washington representatives to the Leadership Conference to explore other avenues besides resolutions and written protests. We will meet with high government officials and discuss the matter in an attempt to help create a policy that will keep Negro teachers in their jobs. We will report on what develops.

AGRICULTURE DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION RESTORED

So quietly that no newspaper we have seen took any notice of it, the $295,000 that the Department of Agriculture had asked to finance its enforcement of the Civil Rights Act has been restored to its appropriation for the next fiscal year. That sum was cut from the Department's funds by Rep. Jamie Whitten (of Mississippi) while its request was before his Appropriations Subcommittee.

What is significant here is not the sum, which is relatively small. Rather, it is the fact that it was put back in without objection. It is obvious that faced with a floor fight on the issue, Mr. Whitten and other Southern foes of the new law chose to back down. That makes it a victory of no mean proportion.

HOUSE GETS READY TO ACT; THE SENATE PASSES VOTING BILL

Now the fight for voting rights shifts to the House. On Tuesday, May 25, the Senate abruptly cut down debate on the bill by invoking cloture and passed the measure the very next day.

For anyone who recalls the high drama that accompanied last year's cloture vote, when the Senate for the first time in its history broke a filibuster on a civil rights bill, the events of this past Tuesday were mild indeed. Without any impassioned speeches or much show of resistance on the part of a group of rather subdued Southerners, the Senate imposed cloture by a vote of 70 to 30. That was three votes more than the two-thirds necessary to limit debate. Last year, cloture on the Civil Rights Act was invoked by a vote of 71 to 29. Whatever opposition there was to the bill quickly collapsed and the following afternoon, by a final vote of 77 to 19, the Senate adopted the measure. (Both the cloture vote and the final vote are given in attachments to this MEMO.)

How Good Is The Senate Bill?

Although the bill (S.1564) the Senate passed is a relatively good one, nothing that was added to it since our last MEMO (No. 63) has improved it enough to make it as good as the bill (H.R. 6400) the House will consider shortly.

At least one amendment the Senate accepted during its final days of consideration may be troublesome. This was a proposal by its Democratic Whip Russell Long of Louisiana, that would permit counties to obtain exemption from the law if they can show that 50 per cent of their Negro voters are registered and that there is no discrimination. It was the only amendment by a Southerner that the Senate did accept.

Another notable change in the final days was an amendment, by Senators Jacob Javits (R) and Robert Kennedy (D) that would extend the right to vote to any eligible resident who is illiterate in English if he can produce evidence of a sixth grade education or whatever standard a state prescribes in a school in any state, the District of Columbia or Puerto Rico where another language was used. The principal effect of the change will be to enfranchise more than 300,000 Spanish-speaking Puerto Ricans in New York, where an eighth grade education is required.

The Senate also adopted an amendment by Senator Joseph D. Tydings (D., Md.) that would exclude servicemen and their dependents from any calculation by the Census Bureau of the number of non-white voters in a state or county. This would remove a potential source of delay in implementing the bill since the Census Bureau would have trouble compiling statistics on servicemen if it had to include them in its count.

House Bill Is Still Stronger

As our last MEMO (No.63) pointed out, the bill that the House Judiciary Committee has approved, while similar to the Senate bill in many major respects, is still the stronger measure of the two. The principal difference, of course, and the one that may ultimately force a House-Senate conference on the bill is the House version's outright ban on the poll tax as a requirement for voting. The Senate rejected such a provision and adopted, instead, a declaration that the poll tax has been used to deny and abridge the right to vote in certain states. Its provision also authorizes the Attorney General to bring suit "forthwith" to test the constitutionality of the poll tax in the four states that still levy it.

The Rules Committee Gets It Next

The House Judiciary Committee may have completed and filed its report on the bill by the time this MEMO reaches you. If so, the bill then goes to the House Rules Committee to determine the rules for the House debate. It is generally expected that Rep. Howard Smith (D., Va.), Chairman of the Rules Committee, will hold hearings on the bill and try to keep it tied up as long as he can. That would be 21 calendar days, the limit the House imposed on him when it organized during the first days of this session. The bill may not reach the House floor until late in June.

Our Immediate Target: The Rules Committee

At this moment we need to do whatever we can to speed up consideration of the bill by the Rules Committee. Please have your officers and members wire and write members of the Rules Committee urging them to act on the bill as fast as possible. After 100 years of countenancing violations of the 15th Amendment, it is time for the House to stop delaying and to extend voting rights to millions of Americans.

Members of the House Rules Committee besides Mr. Smith are: Democrats: William M. Colmer (Miss.), Ray J. Madden (Ind.), James J. Delaney (N. Y.), James W. Trimble (Ark.), Richard Bolling (Mo.), Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr. (Mass.), B. F. Sisk (Cal.), John Young (Texas), and Claude Pepper (Fla.); Republicans: Clarence J. Brown (O.), H. Allen Smith (Cal.), John B. Anderson (Ill.), Dave Martin (Neb.), and James H. Quillen (Tenn.).

You can reach them by addressing your messages in care of The Capitol, Washington 25, D. C. Just be sure to send them some kind of message.

LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE TO FIGHT FIRING OF NEGRO TEACHERS

One of the most pernicious developments in the long fight for school integration is the growing number of instances, particularly in Southern states, where Negro teachers have been demoted or fired in newly desegregated school systems. At the U. S. Civil Rights Commission's mid-Atlantic regional meeting in Washington on May 18, civil rights leaders and workers were dismayed and angered to hear officials of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare say they may not be able to do anything to see that qualified Negro teachers continue to teach newly desegregated schools.

A consequence of this reaction was a resolution passed by those attending the Leadership Conference's own regional meeting the next morning. Delegates from state branches of our cooperating organizations, acting in their own name and not in the name of the conference, issued a resolution calling upon the President to use his authority "to insist that experienced, qualified and certified Negro teachers be given full and equal consideration in the staffing of our American schools."

It is the intention of the Washington representatives to the Leadership Conference to explore other avenues besides resolutions and written protests. We will meet with high government officials and discuss the matter in an attempt to help create a policy that will keep Negro teachers in their jobs. We will report on what develops.

AGRICULTURE DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION RESTORED

So quietly that no newspaper we have seen took any notice of it, the $295,000 that the Department of Agriculture had asked to finance its enforcement of the Civil Rights Act has been restored to its appropriation for the next fiscal year. That sum was cut from the Department's funds by Rep. Jamie Whitten (of Mississippi) while its request was before his Appropriations Subcommittee.

What is significant here is not the sum, which is relatively small. Rather, it is the fact that it was put back in without objection. It is obvious that faced with a floor fight on the issue, Mr. Whitten and other Southern foes of the new law chose to back down. That makes it a victory of no mean proportion.

LET'S BE READY WHEN THE HOUSE TAKES UP THE VOTING BILL

It looks as if the House will start debating the Voting Rights Bill sometime during the week of June 21 or on Monday, June 28. The date is not entirely certain but it is sure enough for us to begin focusing our attention on a particular time. A great deal of what happens during the days the House considers the bill (H.R. 6400) depends on what we in the Leadership Conference can do between now and then. The more public sentiment we can mobilize in support of the bill reported out by the House Judiciary Committee, the better chance we have of seeing it come through the House without serious change.

Why We Want the House Bill

As our last few MEMOs have pointed out, the voting rights bill (S. 1564) that the Senate passed on May 26 is a good measure, but it still falls short of the House bill in strength and effectiveness.

An enclosure with this MEMO outlines the principal differences between the versions. But simply listing the differences does not make fully clear the superior quality of some of the House provisions.

On the Poll Tax - It is not enough, for instance, to point out that the chief difference in the treatment of the poll tax in state and local elections is that the House bill prohibits it and the Senate bill provides for a quick court test of its constitutionality.

The importance of the House bill's prohibition lies in the fact that it will contribute enormously to the success of any test. No one doubts that there will be such a test, no matter which poll tax provision Congress finally approves. But when it comes, the government's case will be stronger if in the law at issue Congress faces the problem squarely and bans the poll tax because it denies an equality promised by the Constitution. There is abundant precedent to show, contrary to the arguments of its detractors, that the Supreme Court does pay close attention to what Congress says and it is reasonable to expect it will be readier to endorse an outright ban than a mere declaration of the way the poll tax has been used in the past to abridge the right to vote.

There is another consideration, too. If the Supreme Court were to rule on the House provision and uphold the ban, that would settle the question. The poll tax would be outlawed permanently in the four states that still levy it. But if the Court ruled in favor of the Attorney General in whatever suit he brought under the Senate authority, there might not be any final disposition of the matter. The Court ruling might dispose of the tax in a particular state or county. But there might have to be additional court tests to finally outlaw it everywhere.

On "escaping" coverage - Under the House bill, a state or county must show it has not discriminated against its residents for five years before it can escape the provisions of the law. Furthermore, any finding by a court that voting discrimination has occurred anywhere in a state during the five year period is an absolute ban to that state's escaping coverage. Under the Senate bill, the state can come right into court and seek exemption from the law without having to demonstrate any good behavior in time past. The effect of this may be to encourage states that have been the worst offenders in denying voting rights to sue and try to tie up the voting law in litigation. Mississippi could not hope to prove, under the House bill, that it is entitled to exemption. Under the Senate bill, with the previous misdeeds of its registrars beyond challenge, it could attempt to show it has improved its ways and should be absolved from any Federal intervention. And it may be expected to try to drag the case out as long as possible.

Coverage of the bill - The House bill applies, without qualifications, to all states and counties in which there are voting tests and where less than 50 percent of the voting age population was registered and voting in 1964 elections. The Senate goes beyond this "automatic formula" and says the law will apply only in areas where the non-white population exceeds 20 percent. That will remove a good part of Virginia from coverage of the bill and give that state preferential treatment not accorded any other state subject to the bill.

The House Bill's Better In Other Ways

These examples are meant to illustrate the qualitative differences between the House and Senate versions. As the enclosed comparison shows, the House bill is better in a number of other respects, too. Its protections against intimidation extend to the civil rights workers who are involved in summer campaigns to "urge and aid" people to vote. It also covers elections to party office, a provision that should prevent the situation that gave rise to the attempt to keep the Mississippi delegates from being seated at the last Democratic Party convention.

For these reasons, among others, the Conference concludes the cause of equal voting rights is better served by the House bill.

A Conference Strategy For the House Fight

Once again, as we did during the campaign for the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Leadership Conference will establish Hill headquarters during the time the voting rights bill is being debated in the House. Once again, we will be on hand urging members of Congress whom we know support the bill, to vote down weakening amendments and to be present on the floor whenever a vote is scheduled.

Veterans of '64 will recall the Florida Congressman who complained of the "vultures" who sat in the public galleries and watched the votes. Well, the "vultures" plan to sit in the gallery again this year and watch how the vote goes on the various amendments that will be offered to the bill.

As we have remarked before, votes on amendments are often much more important than the vote on the final passage of the bill. Congressmen will sometimes vote for crippling changes in a bill they secretly dislike and then, in order to please their constituents vote for the whole measure in the end so that they will be recorded as being in favor of it. Through our gallery spotters, we hope to document such maneuvers.

Congress From Above The Hairline

As anyone who has ever sat in the House gallery knows, it will not be easy to see who votes for what. One sits above the heads of Congressmen and looks down upon them. Confusions among the 435 men and women moving around down there are not unlikely. Then, since the House will consider the bill as a Committee of the whole, none of the votes on amendments will be recorded. When members are simply asked to shout their yeas and nays for an amendment it is almost impossible for anyone short of an expert and keen-sighted lipreader to tell how a particular Congressman voted. However, the votes on major amendments are generally easier to watch. These are almost sure to be: by "division," where members stand up for several minutes at their seats while the presiding officer counts them for or against a provision; or by a "teller vote," where they march up the center aisle of the House in almost single file and are counted by tellers as they go by.

At such times it is possible to tell quite accurately who's voting how. Our gallery spotters hope to do just that.

What You Can Do To Help

Once again the messages from organizations and their members can help creat a climate of public opinion that will encourage Congressmen to vote for a strong bill. Your messages should urge:

1. support of the bill as reported by the House Judiciary Committee;

2. opposition to all weakening amendments;

3. presence on the House floor at all times during the debate.

The third request is as important as the other two. Votes on amendments can come up with a staggering suddenness. Unless a Congressman is on the floor or near it he can easily miss a vote. It scarcely matters that his heart is in the right place if he himself is not. Bad amendments have slipped into bills by very small margins, amendments that could be beaten if all the members who were against them were only present. So be specially sure to urge your Congressman to be there.

We must urge them, too, to act on the bill as quickly as they can. Back in March the President called upon Congress to enact the voting rights bill without delay. The urgency has not grown less and Congress must respond swiftly to a situation that can only grow increasingly grave.

Please get to work at once. We need your help. If the voting rights bill does not reach the floor during the coming week of the 21st it will be brought up for consideration shortly after that. NOW is the time to launch your campaigns in support of it.

Major Provisions of Senate Bill

As passed by the Senate, S 1564 contained the following major provisions:

Literacy tests would be suspended and federal voting examiners would be authorized to order the registration of Negroes in any state or county with a 20 percent nonwhite population which used a literacy test or similar device in qualifying voters for the 1964 General Election and had a voter registration or turnout of less than 50 percent of the voting-age population. On a statewide basis, this formula covered Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, and South Carolina. Numerous counties would be covered in North Carolina and Virginia; two would be covered in Alaska and one in Arizona.

Examiners would be authorized for any voting district where less than 25 percent of the persons of Negro race or any other race or color was registered.

The Attorney General was authorized to go into any federal court to seek findings of voter discrimination and obtain an order for the suspension of literacy tests and the appointment of federal examiners.

The Attorney General was ordered to institute cases against state poll taxes as discriminating against the right to vote. (The only states still levying such taxes on state and local elections were Alabama, Mississippi, Texas and Virginia. Vermont imposed a tax on voting in town meetings.)

States and voting districts covered by the bill were provided a method to purge themselves by proving in court they had not discriminated.

The bill carried heavy criminal penalties for false registration, vote buying, intimidation of voters and interference with any of the rights granted under the bill.

Dear Friend:

At the June 21st meeting of our Washington Representatives, the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) proposed that a statement be issued opposing the appointment of former governor James P. Coleman of Mississippi to the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

SNCC has since drafted the attached statement. It has been edited by our counsel, Joe Rauh, who supports it.

Following our customary procedure, we are circulating this statement among all of our Cooperating Organizations, inviting them to consider it and, if they agree with it, to endorse it. Since the Senate Judiciary Committee has scheduled hearings on Governor Coleman's confirmation for early next week, we must hear from you as soon as possible if you want your organization listed. STATEMENT OPPOSING CONFIRMATION OF FORMER GOVERNOR J. P. COLEMAN TO THE UNITED STATES FIFTH CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEAL

We, the undersigned organizations, wish to express our strong opposition to the appointment of former governor J. P. Coleman of Mississippi to the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeal. It is incomprehensible that this man who was one of the architects of most of Mississippi's white supremacist political and legal structure should be rewarded for his actions by this appointment. We urge the Senate Judiciary Committee, and the Senate as a whole, overwhelmingly to reject this appointment.

If Governor Coleman is confirmed as a judge of the Fifth Circuit he will be in a position to pass upon appeals from cases under the 1964 and 1965 Civil Rights Acts. This appointment may well be even worse than that of Judge Cox. We point out that Governor Coleman, under the new Voting Rights bill, will be directly hearing appeals from federal examiners seeking to remedy the evil effects of voting discrimination laws and practices that Governor Coleman himself largely designed, drafted and implemented. We urge President Johnson to withdraw this nomination.

THE CONFERENCE PROTESTS HOUSE DELAY ON VOTING RIGHTS BILL

It now looks as if the Voting Rights Bill will not reach the House floor until sometime in July. The immediate response of the Washington representatives of the Leadership Conference was to issue a strong protest at "this unconscionable delay." The statement, which was made public by Conference chairman Roy Wilkins, has been sent to Members of Congress, the President and the U. S. Attorney General. (The statement is enclosed with this MEMO.)

We will continue to urge members to speed up action on the bill but it does not seem likely that the House will consider the measure until after the Fourth of July recess. The likely dates are July 6 or 7, or July 12.

Why Is It Taking So Long?

A parliamentary snarl is holding up the bill. It is presently before the House Rules Committee, whose chairman, Rep. Howard W. Smith (D., Va.) has shown his customary skill at impeding the enactment of civil rights legislation. Rep. Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.), chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, which reported the bill out on June 1, thought he had an understanding with Mr. Smith that the bill would be cleared for floor consideration by June 28, at the latest. Mr. Smith denies that there was any agreement. Now he plans to go ahead and hold a week of hearings on the bill.

Under the revised rules that the House adopted at the start of this session, rules for which the Leadership Conference campaigned, Mr. Smith's committee cannot hold onto a bill for more than 21 days. However, the procedures that must then be followed before the bill can be moved from the committee to the floor cannot be accomplished before sometime next month.

Your Letters Can Help

A flood of mail at this point would be helpful. We need letters from your organization and your membership urging Congressmen: (1) to work for passage of the voting rights act as soon as possible, and (2) to defeat all amendments that would weaken the House Judiciary Committee bill. Mr. Wilkins' statement presents arguments that we believe can be used with good effect in your own messages.

THE LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE WILL FIGHT FOR "ONE MAN ONE VOTE"

Our Washington representatives have agreed that the Leadership Conference should assume a new responsibility. It will coordinate the efforts of its cooperating organizations to defeat the current attempt in Congress to overturn the U. S. Supreme Court ruling of Last June, that representation in state legislatures must be based on population.

The high court's "One Man One Vote decision" is under heavy attack by Senate Republican leader Everett M. Dirksen (Ill.), who wants to amend the Constitution so that states could apportion one house of their legislature on factors other than population, if the plan of apportionment is approved by the people of the state in a referendum. The history of this attempt and the reasons why it is dangerous are fully explored in the recent "maiden speech" of Senator Joseph Tydings (D., Md.) which we enclose with this MEMO.

The Leadership Conference undertakes its task of coordination at a crucial time. The Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments has concluded its hearings on the proposed constitutional changes and is expected to report something like the Dirksen amendment to the full Committee within the next day or so.

Rep. Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.), chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, has announced hearings on House versions of the Dirksen proposal for June 23, 24, 25 and June 30, July 1 and July 2. This scarcely seems sufficient time in which to consider amendments of such importance. We are urging the Committee to extend the hearings. You can help here, too, by writing to Mr. Celler urging that the hearings be extended to give everyone an opportunity to testify on this important issue.

Why The Conference Has Undertaken the Fight

It has become increasingly clear that the Dirksen proposals pose a serious threat to civil rights. We face the curious prospect, as we campaign for the Voting Rights Bill, of seeing Congress about to grant full voting rights with one hand and then prepare to snatch it away with the other.

The National Committee for Fair Representation, in which many of our cooperating groups participate, asked us to undertake legislative activity in the fight for reapportionment and we readily agreed. The National Committee will continue to serve as a clearing house for information and material.

Fair Representation and Civil Rights

The close link between civil rights and fair representation was graphically described by witnesses before the Senate Subcommittee. Clarence Mitchell, director of the Washington Bureau, NAACP and legislative director of the Leadership Conference, warned that the constitutional amendment would "frustrate the principle" of equal representation by giving supremacist elements in the South an opportunity to perpetuate control of their state legislatures. Burke Marshall, former head of the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division, declared that the amendments were "specifically dangerous to the minority groups, particularly Negroes, who most drastically feel the impact of urban problems..." Robert F. Kennedy, former U. S. Attorney General, said "the amendments would preserve a structure of malapportioned state government and would thereby have the most far-reaching effects on the future of our cities and urban development process and on the civil rights movement as well..."

National Council of Churches Backs "One Man One Vote"

On June 3, the General Board of the National Council of Churches of Christ has also recognized the close relationship between fair representation and civil rights by adopting a strong statement of policy in opposition to any constitutional change. The Board declared, "Many of the causes of civil rights and liberties we have long supported are at stake in the question of equal representation."

THE CONFERENCE WINS A VICTORY FOR THE RIGHTS OF LABOR

While we impatiently mark time until the voting rights bill reaches the House floor, it is good to be able to record a legislative victory in which the Leadership Conference also played a role.

In response to a telegram from Rep. James Roosevelt (D., Cal.), Clarence Mitchell testified before a House Labor Subcommittee that will be considering proposals for strengthening Title VII, the Equal Employment Opportunity Section of the Civil Rights Act. The full House Labor Committee has already approved by a vote of 21-to-10, a labor reform on which the Conference has never taken a position, the repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act, the provision that empowers states to deny unions the right to insist that all workers in plants they represent must become union members. The specific issue before the Subcommittee was whether to delay reporting out the repeal of 14(b) until action was taken on strengthening Title VII.

Mr. Mitchell, on behalf of 27 organizations that were able to endorse his statement, urged the Committee not to tie the two matters together. He pointed out that the Conference has long advocated strengthening Title VII and that last month he had presented a statement for Roy Wilkins, A. Philip Randolph, Martin Luther King and James Farmer, calling for the repeal of 14(b).

It is good to be able to report that the Committee, after further consideration, agreed with the Conference position. Its chairman, Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D., N.Y.), who previously had said he would not support repeal until Section VII was strengthened has now changed his mind and will report out the repeal bill. The Conference will, of course, press for improvements in Title VII as opportunities present themselves.

It is our hope that other organizations in the Leadership Conference will undertake this fight.

Since a constitutional amendment is being proposed, two-thirds of the Senate and the House must approve it before it can pass. The Senate is where the first battle will be fought. You can help win it by writing to Senators from states where you have strength, urging them to oppose all constitutional amendments until the Supreme Court's ruling has been given a chance to work.

A SMALL ADVANCE IN PROTECTING NEGRO TEACHERS FROM UNJUST FIRING

The many protests to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare objecting to the current practice in some Southern states of demoting or firing Negro teachers once school systems are desegregated, has produced a modest result. HEW has just issued a statement warning state school officials that it is investigating complaints of discriminatory dismissals of Negro teachers and that where there is a pattern of such action it is prohibited by the Civil Rights Act. The statement, unfortunately, looks weaker than it should be. We are particularly disturbed, on hasty examination, at HEW's specific refusal to consider individual complaints. Leadership Conference attorneys are studying the matter further. We hope to issue a statement of our own, shortly. And we will pursue our efforts to see that this mean practice is stopped.

STATEMENT BY THE LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE ON CIVIL RIGHTS, PROTESTING HOUSE DELAYS IN ENACTING THE VOTING RIGHTS ACT

On March 15, President Johnson bade Congress in the simplest, strongest, language, to write into legislation the death warrant for voter discrimination.

Today is June 22; three months and one week have passed since the President laid his historic plea before Congress "to join me in working long hours, nights and weekends, if necessary, to pass this Bill."

On May 17, the Senate acted. The House dawdles as though voting rights were again a matter of "business as usual." The unavoidable implication is that the Administration and Congress have forgotten the urgency created by Selma. Republicans and Democrats alike must share the blame for this unconscionable delay.

There is no excuse for the passing of 100 days without final action on a voting rights bill. The summer is upon us; with it comes the increasing frustration of many parts of our society at the failure of Congress to act. Vital summer programs, long planned to implement the bill, are threatened.

The President and Congress can act swiftly. They demonstrated this by their speedy approval of the excise tax cut and the Viet Nam appropriation. The Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, mindful of what official inaction portends, urges immediate action on the House bill and final passage of the 1965 voting rights bill. As President Johnson said, "This time, on this issue, there must be no delay, or no hesitation, or no compromise with our purpose." The nation demands that the President's pledge be honored.

THE VOTING RIGHTS BILL PASSES: A HOUSE VICTORY IN WHICH WE CAN SHARE

That the House was able to pass a strong voting rights bill this past Friday is, of course, the result of many factors. We hope it will not sound immodest if we cite the effective cooperation of the groups in the Leadership Conference and our close working relationship with House members who directed the fight for the measure, as significant elements in the impressive victory. Not a single good feature of the bill was lost. Not a single weakening amendment, even the minor loophole proposed in the "Boggs amendment," was added to the measure. What the House finally approved by a vote of 333 to 85 was the House Judiciary Committee bill, H.R. 6400, whose adoption the Leadership Conference has been urging for many weeks. Hats off to Chairman Celler, Jim Corman, John Lindsay, Mac Mathias, Pete Rodino, Byron Rogers, and a host of others, including Speaker McCormack, Majority Leader Albert, and the Democratic Study Group's whip system operated by Moe Udall, Don Fraser and Bill Phillips.

The Bill's Not Yet A Law

House passage, unfortunately, is not the final step. The differences between the House bill and the version the Senate approved on May 26 may necessitate a conference between the two bodies. We shall inform you of the next developments as soon as we know them. We ask only that the splendid support we in Washington received last week continue until the President finally signs the Voting Rights Bill into law.

How The Leadership Conference Helped

The task force the Leadership Conference marshalled in support of H.R. 6400 was composed of the regular Washington representatives of our cooperating organizations supplemented by many out-of-towners who worked with us during the four days the bill was before the House. Our suite in the Hotel Congressional was headquarters for a vigorous operation that sent delegations of constituents to call on Congressmen and volunteer messengers to alert them each time a vote came up in the House.

It was from our suite that we sent "spotters" to sit in the House galleries and watch the way the voting went. As we have observed before, this is not an easy thing to do. The House was meeting, for most of the time, as a "committee of the whole" and there were no roll-call votes during that phase of the session. The best occasion for observing who was voting how was during the teller votes - when Congressmen march up the center aisle between two tellers appointed by the chairman and are counted as they go by. Difficult as it is to recognize a member from a seat high above his head, spotters were often able to tell which way their Congressmen were voting and they were quick to register their disappointment when they found them voting wrong. We also believe that for members who happened to glance up from the floor, the sight of men and women and a few youngsters, all wearing the blue and white label of the Leadership Conference on their lapels, was a constant reminder of the national sentiment for ending voting discrimination once and for all.

For Conference participants, each day began with a meeting in the hotel at which intelligence gathered in various interviews was exchanged. Each evening after the House recessed, a few Conference representatives met with the members who led the floor fight for the bill and discussed strategy. The final outcome testifies to the usefulness of our work.

Substitute Bill First Test

The critical moment for the voting rights bill came on the very first vote. This was on the question of the total substitute to H.R. 6400 offered by Representatives William M. McCulloch (R., O.) and Gerald R. Ford, Jr. (R.,Mich.). It was a measure we have opposed as being weaker than H.R. 6400 and its defeat on a teller vote, 215 to 166, was a heartening indication of how the voting was to go from then on.

"Boggs Amendment" Defeated

One of the most dramatic incidents during the voting was the eventual defeat of the "Boggs Amendment." Rep. Hale Boggs, the Democratic Party whip from Louisiana, was given a well-merited ovation during debate when he broke with Southern tradition by openly acknowledging there was discrimination against Negro voters and by announcing his intention to vote for the bill "drastic though it may be." He was, incidentally, one of 23 Southerners who voted for it. In spite of his zeal, Mr. Boggs then went on to try to make the bill somewhat less drastic by offering as an amendment a provision already in the Senate bill to let voting districts obtain exemption from the Act through the courts if they can show that 50 per cent of their Negro voters are registered and there is no likelihood of discrimination within their boundaries. The Leadership Conference opposed the amendment because, among other things, we felt the Attorney General's authority to terminate the use of Federal examiners was more than adequate. At first the Boggs amendment was adopted by a teller vote of 123 to 77. But during the interval between its adoption and the taking of a roll-call vote that evening, Leadership Conference participants pointed out to many House members the troublesome nature of this amendment and it was good to see it finally defeated by a vote of 262 to 155.

Two Good Amendments That Were Not Adopted

Two amendments that Conference attorneys feel would have improved the bill were rejected by the House. One was the provision, already in the Senate bill, that would enable Puerto Ricans who are literate in Spanish to qualify to vote even though they cannot read or write English. The House adopted this on a teller vote and then rejected it on roll-call.

It also rejected, by a slim margin, an amendment offered by Rep. John Lindsay (R., N.Y.), that would have afforded greater protection to those exercising their constitutional rights of free speech and assembly in connection with voting. The provision was an adaptation of the "Title III" or "Part III" provisions of earlier civil rights bills and the Voting Rights measure would have benefitted from its inclusion.

A Negligible Amendment That Was Added

The one amendment added to the House bill was proposed by Rep. William C. Cramer (R., Fla.) It is similar to a provision already in the Senate bill and prescribes criminal penalties for giving fraudulent information on voting registration. In the opinion of Conference attorneys it has little effect on the bill.

What Happens Now?

As we face the likelihood of a Conference on the House and Senate bills, we in the Leadership Conference reaffirm our preference for the House version. It contains a flat ban on the use of the poll tax as a requirement for voting in state and local elections; it gives Negro applicants direct access to Federal examiners without presenting the sometimes harrowing possibility that they may have to apply first to local registrars; it provides for poll watchers and extends protection to civil rights workers who aid and urge people to vote.

The Senate bill has two good features that the House did not adopt, notably the provision to enfranchise Puerto Ricans and a provision that would extend application of the law to states and counties where the total number of registered voters in any racial group is less than 25 per cent of those eligible to vote.

As soon as the picture becomes clearer we will advise you of the next steps we must take. Meanwhile, anyone who spoke to a Congressman, sent a wire, wrote a letter, sat in the gallery and watched, or engaged in any of the hundreds of chores that make up the work of the Leadership Conference, can claim a share in the success that attended House action on the voting rights bill.

RE: Meeting Notice

Since the convening of Congress in January, the Washington Representatives of our cooperating organizations have met weekly and during some periods, on a daily basis. This close cooperation has resulted in such accomplishments as the liberalization of House rules, more effective implementation of the Civil Rights Act and the approaching passage of an effective voting rights bill.

At this time it seems desirable that the heads of our cooperating organizations, who have not met during these months, should get together and discuss future directions, future priorities and future programs.

Accordingly, I am calling a meeting of organizational heads for Monday, August 2, at 2 p.m. at the Roosevelt Hotel, Madison Avenue and 45th Street, New York City. The room number will be posted on the bulletin board in the lobby.

I hope you will make every effort to be present. In order to permit us to make the necessary arrangements, I would appreciate it if you would fill out the enclosed card and get it to us by return mail.

MEMO: No. 69
July 23, 1965

RE: 1. The Conference on Voting Rights
2. Our Support for New Job Equality Bill
3. The Fight for "One-Man, One-Vote" Begins

THE CONFERENCE ON VOTING RIGHTS GETS UNDERWAY

In a series of three closed meetings last week, a group of Senators and Congressmen began their conferences on the House and Senate versions of the Voting Rights bill and their attempts to settle the differences between them.

As this MEMO is written, the men have still to reach agreement on two major points of difference: the House bill's flat ban on the poll tax and the Senate bill's provision to extend the right to vote to Puerto Ricans. Senator Everett Dirksen (R., Ill.), one of the Senate conferees, considers both unconstitutional and his adamant stand is one of the obstacles to a quick end to the conference.

The "Boggs Amendment" Should Stay Out

At least one other obstacle presents itself. There is a move afoot to put into the final bill the "Boggs Amendment" a proposal by Democratic whip Hale Boggs (D., La.), and one the Senate approved, which would permit counties to obtain an exemption from the bill through the courts once they can show that 50 per cent of their Negro voters are registered and no further discrimination is in prospect. The amendment, although not the most important in the opinion of Leadership Conference attorneys, provides an unnecessary "out" for counties. Those who want it in the bill argue that it almost passed in the House. But it didn't. While it is true that when an unrecorded teller vote was taken on the Boggs amendment during the day's floor debate, it was adopted 123 to 77, when the House took a roll-call on it that evening, it was decisively beaten by a vote of 262 to 155. The bill is better without it.

What The Leadership Conference Supports

As we indicated in our last MEMO (No. 68), the Voting Rights Act that the Leadership Conference favors is the bill the House passed with the addition of two provisions in the Senate bill. One would extend coverage of the act beyond the "hard core" Southern states to include all counties and parishes where less than 25 per cent of the potential non-white voters are registered. The other would give the right to vote to Puerto Ricans and other Americans who may not be literate in English but are literate in Spanish or some other language. Our position is explained in greater detail in the paper we include with this MEMO.

The Men Who Will Shape The Bill

Besides Senator Dirksen, these are the 11 other members of Congress, drawn from the House and Senate Judiciary Committees, who have been designated as conferees to put the Voting Rights bill into final form:

Senate - James O. Eastland (D., Miss.), Judiciary Committee Chairman, Edward V. Long (D., Mo.), Thomas J. Dodd (D., Conn.), Philip A. Hart (D.,Mich.), Roman L. Hruska (R., Neb.); House - Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.), Judiciary Committee Chairman, Byron G. Rogers (D., Colo.), Peter W. Rodino, Jr. (D.,N.J.), Harold D. Donohue (D., Mass.), William C. Cramer (R., Fla.), William M. McCulloch (R., O.)

What Your Organization Can Do

The conferees are the ones on whom attention focuses now. If you have strong chapters or locals in any of the states or districts represented on the Conference Committee, or members who have special relationships with any of these Senators and Congressmen, they can help by urging: adoption of the House version of the bill strengthened by the two provisions from the Senate measure.

The conferees meet again Tuesday, July 27. It is urgent they know your views on the strongest possible bill by then.

LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE WORKS TO STRENGTHEN "TITLE VII"

In an impressive show of unity, Andrew Biemiller, Director of the Department of Legislation, AFL-CIO and Clarence Mitchell, Director of the Washington Bureau of the NAACP, appeared before a House Labor Subcommittee last week to present a joint statement in support of a new bill (H.R. 9222) that would strengthen Title VII, the Equal Employment Opportunity Section of the Civil Rights Act. Their statement was also made in behalf of the Leadership Conference.

Both men agreed that the bill would correct two major weaknesses of Title VII. First of all, it would extend coverage immediately to all employers with eight or more employees (Title VII as presently written extends its coverage gradually until, by 1968, it would reach employers with 25 or more employees). Second, it would strengthen enforcement by empowering the new Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to issue complaints, conduct formal hearings and issue corrective and remedial orders. (The present law does not give the Commission power to issue final orders. Power to compel compliance rests with the Federal courts.)

The joint statement also endorsed the provision in H.R. 9222 that would eliminate the present requirement that a person who has suffered discrimination in seeking a job must first go to a state or local FEPC agency before turning to the Federal Commission. By requiring this procedure in all cases where a state or local agency exists, the law raises the possibility that some states may set up phony FEP commissions in order to frustrate the intent of Title VII. H.R. 9222 would eliminate the requirement and leave it to the Federal Commission to cede jurisdiction only to state and local agencies it finds have strong laws to work with and are doing a good job.

The Bill Could Be Improved In Other Ways

Other improvements in Title VII were also proposed: employment practices of states and localities should be brought within the coverage of the Act as well as the employment policies of private membership clubs and private schools; employment agencies of states and localities should also be covered; the protections of the Act should be extended to all persons even those who are members of the Communist Party; the present exemption with regard to jobs covered by personnel security programs should be eliminated because it is confusingly worded and unnecessary; the Commission should be given subpoena power without the restrictions H.R. 9222 would place upon it.

Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Biemiller were accompanied by Thomas Harris, Associate General Counsel for the AFL-CIO and Joseph L. Rauh, Jr., Counsel for the Leadership Conference.

Protection Against The Klan

Mr. Rauh urged that besides the other amendments proposed in our statement, the House committee should consider adding a provision prohibiting "third party intimidation." An instance of this, he said, would be where an employer has evinced a readiness to comply with the law and is threatened by the local Klan or another extremist group if he does. NAACP's Legal Defense Fund has already received a report of such Klan intimidation.

Mr. Harris was asked if he thought it was premature to consider strengthening Title VII, since it has only been in effect since July 2 and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission is still organizing. He thought not. There is already extensive state experience with the law, he said, and he thought Congress was justified in going ahead and trying to improve Title VII now.

Rep. James Roosevelt (D., Cal.), who chaired the meeting, observed that the many Leadership Conference proposals might take some time to consider and wondered if some of them couldn't wait. Mr. Mitchell disagreed. He said as long as the attempts to improve Title VII were being made, all the proposed amendments should be considered. "Let's do the job right," he said.

FLASH: THE FIGHT FOR "ONE-MAN, ONE-VOTE" BEGINS!

Just as this MEMO is written, the news comes that Senator Dirksen has brought to the Senate floor his proposal for a constitutional amendment that would nullify the Supreme Court's one-man, one-vote decision. The Senator seeks to overturn the Court's ruling that representation in all state legislatures must be based on population. He wants to give the states the right to apportion one house of a bicameral legislature on factors other than population - on the basis of geography or political subdivisions.

Mr. Dirksen was thwarted in his attempt to get his amendment reported out by the Senate Judiciary Committee. Eight liberal members of that 16-man committee stood firm against the amendment. Faced with defeat by a tie-vote, Mr. Dirksen has by-passed the Committee. He simply preempted another resolution, one that would establish a "National American Legion Baseball Week." Mr. Dirksen had that called up, since it was already on the calendar, and then offered his constitutional proposal as a complete substitute. (Senator Paul Douglas promptly dubbed the Dirksen proposal "the foui bali amendment.")

Senate liberals who oppose the amendment as a threat to democratic voting and a threat to civil rights have rallied in opposition. Senator Dirksen needs two-thirds of the Senate, 67 members if all 100 vote, in order to get his amendment passed. The task is to line up at least 34 or 35 against him.

Your organization can help protect full voting rights by having your members get in touch with their Senators and urge them to vote down any constitutional amendment that would upset the decision of the court.

LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE POSITION

ON

SENATE - HOUSE BILL

In its consideration of the Voting Rights Bill of 1965 the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights has consistently supported the widest practicable coverage and the strongest practicable provisions for protection of voters, registrants, applicants for registration, and those assisting persons to register or to vote.

Consistent with this position, it now recommends that the House and Senate Conferees, in reconciling the differences between the House and Senate versions of S. 1564, adopt the House-passed bill with the addition of two provisions of the Senate bill: 1.) extension of coverage of the bill to political sub-divisions where less than 25% of the non-white potential voters are registered; 2.) the presumption of literacy for persons who have completed six grades of school in an "American flag" school where instruction was in a language other than English.

These two Senate approved provisions would greatly increase the number of persons eligible for registration under the bill. The first would cover geographic areas outside of the "hard core" states subject to the Administration's automatic trigger. The second, not geographically limited, could add thousands of American citizens educated in American schools but not proficient in the use of the English language (mostly Puerto Ricans) to the voting rolls.

Other than in these two items of coverage, the House bill is preferable in all major respects. In the following areas of interest to the Leadership Conference, its superiority has been noted:

1.) It flatly prohibits the collection of a poll tax as a precondition to voting in any election, while the Senate bill directs the Attorney General to file suit to have such taxes declared unconstitutional. Under the House bill the remedy is quicker, clearer, and more certain to be effective in all jurisdictions. We reiterate our conviction that the House version is constitutional in all respects.

2.) The House bill does not require, as the Senate bill does, that for a state or political sub-division to be covered, its non-white population must exceed 20%.

3.) The House bill's protections are available to those who "aid or urge" others to register or vote. This would assist all persons engaged in the summer voting projects in the South.

4.) Under the Senate bill, the Attorney General can require prospective registrants to go before local registration officials before going to the Federal examiner. There is no comparable provision in the House bill.

5.) The "escape" provisions in the Senate bill are in general easier for those areas that are covered. The House bill requires five years of good behavior before a State can get out from under the bill.

6.) The House bill covers party offices; the Senate bill does not.

7.) The House bill does not require that examiners, to the extent practicable, be residents of the State.

As previously noted, these are but some of the major provisions of the House bill that are more favorable to civil rights. Because of the general superiority of the House bill, the Leadership Conference urges its adoption intact, with the two exceptions noted above.

TO: Cooperating Organizations

FROM: Arnold Aronson, Secretary

44 ORGANIZATIONS JOIN IN OPPOSING DISMISSAL OF THE MISSISSIPPI CHALLENGE

At a special meeting Tuesday night, 44 of the organizations that cooperate in the Leadership Conference joined in opposing a motion, expected to be offered on the House floor this week, that calls for dismissal of the Mississippi challenge.

Unanimity in opposition was quickly reached. All of the representatives present agreed that the challenge, which has been before Congress for nine months, has been the subject of inordinate delays and attempts, by parliamentary maneuver, to avoid dealing with the serious issues it raises.

House Committee May Act This Week

The challenge is being brought by citizens of Mississippi who call for the unseating of the state's House delegation on the grounds that its five members were illegally elected. There is, of course, abundant evidence, gathered by government agencies, to establish that more than 90 per cent of all Mississippi Negroes have been denied the right to vote largely through the use of discriminatory tests, threats of economic reprisal, terror and violence.

The challenge was referred to the House Administration Committee in January. The committee's dawdling prompted some House members to consider taking the matter out of its hands and bringing it directly to the floor for a vote. Prodded by the threat of such action, the committee has come to life. Its elections subcommittee held two closed meetings this week and after taking testimony from both sides, moved for dismissal. The full Committee is expected to adopt this recommendation and bring it to the floor, possibly this Friday.

This prospect brought the representatives of the 44 organizations together. In the statement they issued immediately, and which we include with this MEMO, they declared that Congress has given "inadequate consideration to the challenge or to alternative methods or approaches under which the House could exercise its constitutional authority to rule on the election and qualifications of its members."

What You Can Do

With only a day or so remaining before Congress acts, we send this statement on to you. If your organization endorses it, we urge you to join in and wire or phone as many members of Congress as you can, urging them to vote against dismissal and to take a searching look at the system of disfranchisement in Mississippi and the legality of its elections.

STATEMENT ON THE MISSISSIPPI CHALLENGE

Adopted by the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights

Tuesday, September 14, 1965

The undersigned organizations associated in the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights urge the defeat of the attempt by the House Administration Committee to dismiss the Challenge of Mississippi citizens to the seating of the Mississippi House delegation.

We deplore the haste with which dismissal is being proposed. The motion ignores the many questions that have been raised about the legality of the elections that brought the five Mississippi members to Congress.

The pattern of denial of the right to vote in Mississippi has been evidenced by the report and hearings of the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, by testimony taken in connection with the Challenge filed to contest the elections of the Mississippi Congressmen, by hearings on the Voting Rights Act of 1965 and by other information available to Congress.

We feel the house Administration Committee has given inadequate consideration to the Challenge or to alternative methods or approaches under which the House could exercise its constitutional authority to rule on the election and qualifications of its members.

Only two subcommittee hearings have been held, both geared to the dismissal and to no other aspect of the issue. No public hearings have been held. Copies of the evidence on which the Challenge is based have not been made available to House members. Dismissal of the Challenge at this time would close the door to full hearings and full House discussion.

Therefore, we urge all members of the House to vote against the motion to dismiss.

Few of these acts of violence have resulted in prosecutions; in those that have, a minimal number of convictions have been obtained. The reasons for this brutal state of affairs are many; some of them are: the refusal of state and local officials and local juries to enforce state laws against violence; the election of state and local officials hostile to the rights of minorities--a direct result of the disenfranchisement of Negroes; the extent of the violence and its organized nature; the inadequate use of Federal statutes and Federal authority that do exist; and the lack of national consensus that the rights of minorities are as sacred as those of the majority. Put another way, the essential cause of continued unpunished violence has been the refusal of those seeking corrective action to recognize that the conditions that exist result from a complete breakdown of law and order based on an acceptance of an unconstitutional system of "justice" administered in the spirit of white supremacy. The Negro and those who seek justice for him are confronted in general in the South with hostile white police, hostile white prosecutors, hostile white judges and hostile white juries. The institutions of law (with few exceptions) follow a policy of lily-white employment, accept the philosophy of white supremacy, and operate under a double standard of justice based on the race of parties involved. Bluntly put, these institutions of law are the fellow-travellers of anti-Negro violence and can hardly be expected to mete out justice to the violent.

All this runs directly counter to the guarantee of the 14th Amendment and other provisions of the Constitution. But it will continue nonetheless unless new tools are forged for law enforcement in the areas of violent resistance to racial equality. Although law enforcement is an extremely sensitive area of federal-state relationships and one where legislation is difficult to perfect and enact--far more difficult for example than the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965 where the Leadership Conference had its greatest legislative successes--the need for federal action is too great and immediate and the risks in the failure of law enforcement too dangerous to leave the present situation unaltered. This memorandum is intended to suggest some possible courses of action as a means of inviting proposals from all civil rights advocates which the Leadership Conference can then blend into legislation for enactment in the year 1966.

Few of these acts of violence have resulted in prosecutions; in those that have, a minimal number of convictions have been obtained. The reasons for this brutal state of affairs are many; some of them are: the refusal of state and local officials and local juries to enforce state laws against violence; the election of state and local officials hostile to the rights of minorities--a direct result of the disenfranchisement of Negroes; the extent of the violence and its organized nature; the inadequate use of Federal statutes and Federal authority that do exist; and the lack of national consensus that the rights of minorities are as sacred as those of the majority. Put another way, the essential cause of continued unpunished violence has been the refusal of those seeking corrective action to recognize that the conditions that exist result from a complete breakdown of law and order based on an acceptance of an unconstitutional system of "justice" administered in the spirit of white supremacy. The Negro and those who seek justice for him are confronted in general in the South with hostile white police, hostile white prosecutors, hostile white judges and hostile white juries. The institutions of law (with few exceptions) follow a policy of lily-white employment, accept the philosophy of white supremacy, and operate under a double standard of justice based on the race of parties involved. Bluntly put, these institutions of law are the fellow-travellers of anti-Negro violence and can hardly be expected to mete out justice to the violent.

All this runs directly counter to the guarantee of the 14th Amendment and other provisions of the Constitution. But it will continue nonetheless unless new tools are forged for law enforcement in the areas of violent resistance to racial equality. Although law enforcement is an extremely sensitive area of federal-state relationships and one where legislation is difficult to perfect and enact--far more difficult for example than the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965 where the Leadership Conference had its greatest legislative successes--the need for federal action is too great and immediate and the risks in the failure of law enforcement too dangerous to leave the present situation unaltered. This memorandum is intended to suggest some possible courses of action as a means of inviting proposals from all civil rights advocates which the Leadership Conference can then blend into legislation for enactment in the year 1966.

Corruption of State Law Enforcement Machinery and Advantages of Federal Prosecutions

We cannot agree with Attorney General Katzenbach that unpunished murders are "the price you pay for the jury system." We believe that this is the price we are paying, not for the jury system as such, but for the aberrations of the system and our own refusal to make it function in a constitutional manner.

The jury system as it now operates, both in state and Federal jurisdictions, depends for the selection of veniremen on the dis-

II - Next meeting on Administration of Justice

Wednesday, Dec.1, 2 P.M.

At our meeting on November 3 it was agreed to urge all cooperating organizations to submit proposals on this subject in order to afford us the broadest possible basis for exploring it. To give our groups time to formulate their views, we are putting the next meeting on this matter off until next month. Meanwhile, please submit all proposals and suggestions to this office by November 20.

DRAFT OF A LETTER TO FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, JR., CHAIRMAN OF THE EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY COMMISSION, ON RELATIONSHIP OF TITLE VII TO STATE LAWS ON WOMEN WORKERS

(This letter will be considered for adoption by the Leadership Conference at the meeting on November 10.)

Dear Mr. Roosevelt:

The Leadership Conference on Civil Rights has considered the relationship of Title VII to state laws which provide labor standards for women. These laws cover a wide range of subjects including, but not limited to, minimum wages, maximum hours, maximum weight lifting, night work, rest periods, et cetera.

It is the position of the Leadership Conference that Title VII does not generally supersede and invalidate these state provisions. We recognize, however, that one or more of these provisions--for example the Utah fifteen-pound weight lifting restriction--may be so arbitrary as to raise questions under the Fourteenth Amendment and authority may well inhere in Title VII for the Commission to disregard a state provision that so arbitrarily discriminates against women.

We would urge that the Commission adopt the interpretation of Title VII that state labor standards for women are not generally superseded and invalidated by that title, but that the Commission, in a case involving a state law such as that in Utah referred to above, which may be arbitrary and discriminatory in its effect and implementation, study the possibility of holding the law involved as in conflict with Title VII.

Sincerely yours,

M E M O R A N D U M

SUBJECT: Washington Leadership Conference

The leadership conference meeting was one of the best attended, as many people remarked, in a long time. Joe Rauh opened the meeting for the establishment and merely summarized the points of the memo that he and Francis Pohlhaus had prepared.

Chuck Morgan was called upon as one who had been devoting special attention to jury matters and his emphasis was a little different from Rauh's in that Rauh had emphasized personal security, with jury trial matters somewhat secondary. Chuck Morgan on the other hand indicated very clearly that he was in favor of a personal security law, major attention had to be given to the jury trial problem not only for civil rights workers white and black, but for the ordinary Negro farmer and worker who have to live in those communities regardless to whether there are civil rights workers present or not. While he was not too specific, he proposed a national jury standard for both state and federal courts, emphasizing that jury panels should be selected on a random basis, representing a cross section of the community.

I then presented our position, at first point out that the motion presented was a little over-simplified in that federal juries as they are presently constituted sometimes could be worse than state juries and we ought not to place too much reliance, without furhter analysis, on the federal court. The second thing I pointed out referred more to the personal security problem and I gave in detail some of the experiences in Bogalusa showing that the FBI had been present, by moving pictures and other photographs, showing the acts of violence and acts of police, and never doing anything about it despite the fact that crimes were committed in their presence.

I then offered those parts of our program which were different in substance from what had been offered by Rauh and Morgan. The first point I proposed was our plan on jury panels and I urged support for a federal jury registrar for state courts using the analogy of the registrar for voting and indicating that one constitutional right was as great as the other and if a registrar was proper for voting it was no less proper for jury trials. This registrar would then register everybody in the county and place them on the state jury panels. This procedure would be automatically triggered similar to the procedure in the Voting Rights Bill, even though that is not vigorously enforced. I also proposed that federal legislation do away with the discrimination against women since many states automatically exclude women, thus Negro women, for example are excluded two ways and in a case like the Lois Chaffee case where she is both a civil rights worker and a woman she is twice affected by the exclusionary jury system. I also proposed the use of the analogy of criminal laws in the District of Columbia and for many states, commonly knows as offenses. These are not crimes, and therefore a judge could try them without a jury even though fairly stiff penalties may be given out. Some of the acts of violence and deprivation of constitutional rights could be tried under a law called an offense without a jury, this to apply to cases of lesser violence but penalties could be given which might be a deterrent to acts of police or local hoodlums. This of course would not be used in cases of more serious violence.

We also proposed, again using an analogy of the Voting Rights Law where one of our people is a defendant of a state criminal court upon a showing that he can not get a fair trial the case should be removed to the federal court in the District of Columbia. Accordingly, any motion by the prosecution to remove to the state court would be heard by one of the judges in District of Columbia and not by Harold Cox or E. Gordon West and if any trial is to be had for alleged violation of a state law it would be tried in the United States court of the District of Columbia, before a jury and judge of that locality.

These were the main points of our program that were new, although I reiterated our other positions(unfortunately, we drew up the press release so hastily in order to get it ready in time, the new points, having a dramatic quality, were down at the bottom and while the meeting heard them well, I am afraid any reporters who may have received the press release thought it was the same old CORE position not realizing the the new points that we were urging.

Interestingly enough, Joe Rauh made an immediate point to say that the jury registrar was an extremely fine idea and gave us a handle with which to work on this problem.

Shortly thereafter, however, different points of view were presented. The National Council of Churches ruged a meeting with the President to get him to use the powers he already has. Marion Berry picked up this point and turned it around to try to say that this should be instead of a legislative program, not in addition, but he later softened his position.

Tom Harris of the AFL-CIO however, reacted very negatively to the legislative approach and the undercurrent was that this might detract from their fight on 14b. However, he gracefully phrased it in terms of minimum wage and so forth, but everyone understood him to mean 14b.

Discussion went on for several hours and it was decided a letter is in process of being drafted to the President which will be shown to the national organizations and there will be a new meeting a week from Wednesday, the 10th, to decide upon the letter and the tactics thereafter, it being generally agreed that it would be a pushing of the President to enforce present laws, there would be a new legislative approach and there would still be support for pending legislation.

MEMO: Position of the Leadership Conference On Civil Rights Regarding Enforcement of Existing Civil Rights Laws.

The Leadership Conference on Civil Rights deplores the inadequate enforcement of existing civil rights laws. In far too many instances, the great promise of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965 is not being realized. The authority of earlier civil rights laws meant to protect Negro citizens is hardly being used at all. And laws that are not properly enforced are little better than none. For how can we urge respect for law when laws are administered in a manner that can only create disrespect for law?

The grave failures in enforcement are exemplified for us in such areas as these:

I. Administration of Justice - The glaring inequality of justice that confronts us today--on the one hand the severe penalties imposed on civil rights workers and Negroes accused of crimes and on the other, the shocking acquittals of their murderers--demonstrates not only the weakness of existing federal laws but also a failure on the part of the Justice Department to make full use of the powers it does have under these statutes. We feel the Department has proceeded with excessive caution in its use of the post Civil War civil rights statutes, 18 U.S. C.241, 242, 243, and other laws.

A good illustration of this is afforded by the Department's own statistics. Its report for 1964 shows 2,656 complaints, 27 grand jury presentations, 20 indictments and one conviction. Prosecution may be difficult, but we suggest it is an abdication of responsibility not to undertake prosecution wherever guilt appears beyond a reasonable doubt, even at the risk of failure to convict.

In regard to Section 243 (which makes it a criminal offense for jury officials to exclude from or fail to call persons to jury duty because of race or color), the repeated exclusion of Negroes from the selection of juries in many parts of the South is so well known that it is incredible to find there has been only one reported use of this statute and that, some seventy-five years ago.

The Department's limited use of U.S. Marshalss and FBI agents to protect the constitutional rights of citizens further emphasizes the narrow view it takes of its powers; federal presence should be multiplied and Marshals and FBI agents should be authorized to make on-the-scene arrests for violation of federal law.

We believe there is authority in existing laws that has never been fully used. If the Justice Department feels these laws are insufficient, it has the clear responsibility to advocate additional legislation.

II. Voting - The Justice Department has proceeded much too cautiously in its use of federal voting examiners. Although only six percent of the eligible Negro population of Mississippi was registered to vote when the 1965 Act went into effect, only 13 examiners have been sent to that state. In spite of the many recorded instances of delay and harassment throughout the South, only 20 other examiners have been dispatched to the region. We deplore the Department's excessive reliance upon voluntary compliance in this as well as in other areas of enforcement. Such compliance must be suspect when it is offered by officials who, throughout the course of their careers, have worked to deny constitutional rights to Negro citizens.

It is apparent to us that so long as these officials control voting procedures, thousands of potential voters will refrain from registering through fear, distrust or lack of confidence that federal law has in fact changed conditions.

We demand a federal registrar in every county in which discrimination still exists. And this is many times the 32 counties which now have registrars.

III. Enforcement of Title VI - One of the most powerful weapons for the advancement of civil rights is the section (Title VI) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, that prohibits discrimination in all federally-assisted programs; but this section is being used much too sparingly. Unnecessary delays are countenanced by the Title VI regulations a number of agencies issued last year. The Leadership Conference expressed its fears about these regulations when they were first made public. There has been ample justification for those fears since then.

The Office of Education provides a good example of an agency that has done too little with the Title VI provision. It has approved school desegregation plans that amount to no more than token compliance. One of the major deficiencies in its original guidelines, as pointed out by Roy Wilkins, chairman of the Leadership Conference, was its sanction of a "freedom of choice" plan in school districts. Evidence accumulates that Negro parents who attempt to exercise their "free choice" of schools for their children risk reprisals both for themselves and their children. As a result, more than one year after the Civil Rights Act took effect and 11 and a half years after the Supreme Court school decisions, less than 8 percent of the Negro students in the South, according to an Office of Education study, are presently going to integrated schools. Studies by private organizations indicate that even that figure may be too high. Title VI needs a revitalization before its too late.

IV. Equal Employment and Enforcement of Title VII - Enforcement of the equal employment opportunity provisions of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 has been far from effective. That law authorizes the Justice Department to file suits to secure equal employment opportunity. Yet 17 months after enactment of the law and nearly five months after its effective date not a single suit has been filed. The great promise of ending employment discrimination under the 1964 Act will become a mockery if the Justice Department hesitates to enforce this law in the courts. We believe that the statute itself needs to be strengthened by authorizing the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to issue its own cease and desist orders against employers who continue to practice job discrimination. But meanwhile, suits brought by the Justice Department are an effective means of enforcing the Act. Further delay means further defeat for job equality rights.

In all of the instances we have cited here, we find two basic weaknesses in the enforcement of federal civil rights laws: an excessive reliance on voluntary compliance in the face of massive evidence that most recalcitrants will move only when vigorous enforcement compels them to; and the tendency of administrative agencies to again place upon Negroes the burden of trying to win their rights through complaints and individual initiative instead of obtaining enforcement through broad-scale programs of affirmative government action.

We recognise that a century of discrimination cannot be ended overnight. But the pace at which we work to end it can be quickened. The vigor with which we act to end it can be greatly increased. What is needed now is a crusade of enforcement by the government to end, once and for all, the terrible injustices our laws are meant to correct.

We deplore the Department's excessive reliance upon voluntary compliance in this as well as in other areas of enforcement. Such compliance must be suspect when it is offered by officials who, throughout the course of their careers, have worked to deny constitutional rights to Negro citizens.

It is apparent to us that so long as these officials control voting procedures, thousands of potential voters will refrain from registering through fear, distrust or lack of confidence that federal law has in fact changed conditions.

We demand a federal registrar in every county in which discrimination still exists. And this is many times the 32 counties which now have registrars.

III. Enforcement of Title VI - One of the most powerful weapons for the advancement of civil rights is the section (Title VI) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, that prohibits discrimination in all federally-assisted programs; but this section is being used much too sparingly. Unnecessary delays are countenanced by the Title VI regulations a number of agencies issued last year. The Leadership Conference expressed its fears about these regulations when they were first made public. There has been ample justification for those fears since then.

The Office of Education provides a good example of an agency that has done too little with the Title VI provision. It has approved school desegregation plans that amount to no more than token compliance. One of the major deficiencies in its original guidelines, as pointed out by Roy Wilkins, chairman of the Leadership Conference, was its sanction of a "freedom of choice" plan in school districts. Evidence accumulates that Negro parents who attempt to exercise their "free choice" of schools for their children risk reprisals both for themselves and their children. As a result, more than one year after the Civil Rights Act took effect and 11 and a half years after the Supreme Court school decisions, less than 8 percent of the Negro students in the South, according to an Office of Education study, are presently going to integrated schools. Studies by private organizations indicate that even that figure may be too high. Title VI needs a revitalization before its too late.

IV. Equal Employment and Enforcement of Title VII - Enforcement of the equal employment opportunity provisions of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 has been far from effective. That law authorizes the Justice Department to file suits to secure equal employment opportunity. Yet 17 months after enactment of the law and nearly five months after its effective date not a single suit has been filed. The great promise of ending employment discrimination under the 1964 Act will become a mockery if the Justice Department hesitates to enforce this law in the courts. We believe that the statute itself needs to be strengthened by authorizing the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to issue its own cease and desist orders against employers who continue to practice job discrimination. But meanwhile, suits brought by the Justice Department are an effective means of enforcing the Act. Further delay means further defeat for job equality rights.

In all of the instances we have cited here, we find two basic weaknesses in the enforcement of federal civil rights laws: an excessive reliance on voluntary compliance in the face of massive evidence that most recalcitrants will move only when vigorous enforcement compels them to; and the tendency of administrative agencies to again place upon Negroes the burden of trying to win their rights through complaints and individual initiative instead of obtaining enforcement through broad-scale programs of affirmative government action.

We recognise that a century of discrimination cannot be ended overnight. But the pace at which we work to end it can be quickened. The vigor with which we act to end it can be greatly increased. What is needed now is a crusade of enforcement by the government to end, once and for all, the terrible injustices our laws are meant to correct.

THE PRESIDENT SETS THREE CIVIL RIGHTS GOALS

One of the major developments of last week's White House meeting occurred before anything began.

At the reception for delegates, preliminary to the actual Planning Session for next year's White House Conference, "To Fulfill These Rights," the President made three important announcements:

1. He has asked the Justice Department to draft legislation that will assure fairer jury trials in the South.

2. He has called on all federal agencies to ferret out discrimination in their programs and not wait for complaints.

3. He has instructed the U.S. Civil Rights Commission to study school segregation in the North and South so that a school system can be established that is truly color blind.

The Leadership Conference should, of course, be encouraged by these advances. But do they go far enough?

MORE THAN BETTER JURY TRIALS ARE NEEDED IN THE SOUTH

The President's jury trial proposal was one of the focal points of the discussions in the Planning Session's panel on the Administration of Justice. The Leadership Conference was well-represented among the attorneys who comprised that panel and, with only one abstention, its members agreed that more than a jury trail law was needed.

Panels at that session were not supposed to issue resolutions. But this one did. Because of its importance in the ongoing discussion within the civil rights movement of the whole subject of personal security laws, we include it with this MEMO. It declares, "We commend the President for his proposal on the reform of the jury system and support it as part of such a statute (to protect the physical security of all Americans). But we assert our belief that legislation on jury reform alone is not enough."

A number of ideas on the kind of legislation and enforcement needed to save the lives of Negroes and civil rights workers in the South came out of the panel and they will be considered at the next Leadership Conference meeting.

THE LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE MOVES TO IMPROVE ENFORCEMENT

The President's call for stronger implementation of the prohibitions against discrimination in federal programs is heartening. Particularly since it comes after Washington representatives to the Leadership Conference agreed at their last meeting to send delegations to the Justice Department and to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to raise objections to the dangerous inadequacy of the kind of enforcement we are getting now.

The delegations are in the process of being formed and we shall report on the results of their visits.

NOW IS THE TIME TO HELP WASHINGTON GET HOME RULE

Representatives to the last meeting of the Leadership Conference agreed to use the remaining weeks of congressional adjournment to build support for a good Home Rule bill for the District of Columbia.

This effort centers on 40 Democrats and 11 Republicans. It is from among these House members that it may be possible to obtain the necessary votes for a bill similar to the one that passed the Senate this last session. As we have previously reported, the House by-passed the Senate bill and endorsed, instead, an almost meaningless measure proposed by Rep. B.F. Sisk (D., Cal.). There is a very good chance of overcoming this setback. We believe it is possible to get the Senate bill or something like it back before the House again. And if that happens, we need every vote for it we can get.

What You Can Do

The Sisk bill passed by a vote of 227 to 174. The swing votes must come from the 53 members whose votes for the Sisk bill spelled the difference. Enclosed with this MEMO is a story from the Washington Post that lists the Democrats in this group. We have supplied additional Republican names. As the story notes, three members, Morris K. Udall (D., Ariz.), Lester Wolff (D., N.Y.), and Robert E. Sweeney (D., O.) have already said they will change their votes and support the Senate version. Since then Rep. Lee H. Hamilton (D., Ind.) has informed Home Rule forces they can count on him. There's no need to visit these men.

But we urge you to study the other names on the list. If you have chapters or members in any of the districts, now is the time to ask them to get to work. Many of the House members will be home. Delegations are needed to call on them and ask them to support a meaningful home rule bill, the Senate version, one that will give Washington an elected government--a mayor and a city council--and bring to the city's nearly 900,000 residents the full voting rights that they, alone in the United States, have been denied for more than 90 years.

HELP FOR MINIMUM WAGE CAMPAIGNS

The close relationship between further advances in civil rights and an increase in the federal minimum wage is the subject of a pamphlet now in preparation by the Leadership Conference. As soon as it is done we will send you copies.

The Administration has already signified its readiness to make an increase in the federal minimum wage and an extension of its coverage a "must" legislation when Congress reconvenes. We hope to have this material ready to help you in your local efforts to marshall the kind of support that helped Congress enact the Civil Rights laws of 1964 and 1965.

FARM WORKERS AS A CIVIL RIGHTS PROBLEM

At their last meeting, Washington representatives to the Leadership Conference endorsed a statement that recognizes the special plight of the nation's most wretched workers, the nearly 4 million who work on its fields and farms.

Proposed by the National Council on Agricultural Life and Labor, the statement points out that these workers, at least 40 percent of whom belong to racial or national minorities, are often singled out for discriminatory treatment in state and federal laws. The representatives agreed with NCALL that such discriminations "constitute a denial of civil rights and therefor should be eliminated."

EEOC's FIRST ONE HUNDRED DAYS

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has observed the first 100 days of its existence with a comprehensive report on its operations during that period.

The summary of its activities shows it has received 1,383 complaints of discrimination in employment practices. EEOC believes it has jurisdiction over 966 of them. Almost 70 percent (670) of these come from 11 Southern states, the largest number (153) from Alabama.

- more -

In 73 percent (706) of the 966 complaints, race is cited as the basis for discrimination; 680 of these complaints came from Negroes. Sex is cited as the basis for discrimination in 16 percent (152) of the 966 cases, and national origin in only one percent (12).

About 87 percent of the complaints (844) are directed against employers, 20 percent (197) against unions and three percent (31) against state employment agencies.

A full copy of the report may be obtained by writing to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, 1800 G Street N.W., Washington, D.C.

A Visit With Katzenbach And Gardner

THE CONFERENCE URGES TOUGHER POLICY ON VOTING, PROTECTION, AND "TITLE VI"

As part of our intensified campaign for stronger enforcement of civil rights laws, a delegation from the Leadership Conference met with U.S. Attorney General Nicholas DeB. Katzenbach and John W. Gardner, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare. The session was a mixed success.

In the course of two hours, the 18 members of the delegation centered their discussion on three things: the need to step up enforcement of the Voting Rights Act; the need for greater federal protection of civil rights workers and Negroes in the South; and the need to make greater use of "Title VI," the section of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 that authorizes the government to withhold funds from any federally-assisted program that discriminates.

Mobile Examiners And More Of Them

On the matter of voting rights there was real progress. The Attorney General indicated he was ready to send more federal registrars into counties where there is evidence of discrimination against Negro voters and not wait for complaints to do so. He seemed agreeable to have registrars keep their offices open evenings and weekends in order to facilitate registration for workers who can't get off during the day. More important, he seemed disposed to make the registrars more mobile, to let them travel around a parish or county and go where the people are instead of stationing them in the Post Office or Court House--territory fraught with perilous associations for would-be voting applicants. Greater mobility for registrars was one of the main pleas heard at the U.S. Civil Rights Commission's Mississippi hearings (see below). Finally, he agreed that the arrival of federal registrars in a voting district ought to be more widely publicized and even offered to tape announcements that could be broadcast on local radio stations.

- more -

Little Give On Protection Or Withholding

There was less progress in regard to the other two issues. Mr. Katzenbach is still not ready to authorize on-the-spot arrests by FBI agents as a preventive measure against violence.

In regard to Title VI, the delegation drew a less than clear-cut response to its urgings that greater use be made of the cut-off powers in Title VI. Roy Wilkins, who led the delegation as chairman of the Leadership Conference, expressed concern at a report that the HEW was adopting a policy of not withholding funds from states or localities, even though there are complaints of discrimination, but intends instead to continue to give funds until a hearing determines that a grant should be revoked. Mr. Katzenbach denied the report. However, a subsequent discussion of how HEW handled grants to hospitals indicated that some hospitals were still getting funds during the time HEW was trying to persuade them to abandon a discriminatory policy.

However, in the matter of school desegregation, the Attorney General promised greater enforcement of Title IV of the 1964 Act. And he accepted a draft of a bill that would provide indemnification for victims of civil rights injustices.

A Partnership With Justice

If the meeting is viewed as the first in a series, there is reason to draw some encouragement from it. Mr. Katzenbach expressed interest in maintaining a partnership with the civil rights movement. Mr. Gardner, too, felt it would be valuable to meet again. The Leadership Conference hopes to maintain a continuing relationship with both men and with other agencies charged with enforcing the civil rights laws. As long as those doors are open there is a chance of improving the quality and quantity of federal enforcement.

The other members of the delegation, besides Mr. Wilkins, were, in alphabetical order:

Arnold Aronson, Secretary of the Conference; Marian Barry, SNCC; Andrew Biemiller, AFL-CIO; Marvin Caplan, Director, Washington Office; Jack Conway, IUD, AFL-CIO; Father John Cronin, National Catholic Welfare Conference; Rev. Walter Fauntroy, SCLC; Jack Greenberg, Legal Defense Fund; Tom Harris, General Counsel, AFL-CIO; Rabbi Richard Hirsch, Union of American Hebrew Congregations; Clarence Mitchell, NAACP and Legislative Chairman of the Conference; John Pratt, National Council of Churches; Bayard Rustin, A. Phillip Rando Institute; Whitney M. Young, Jr., National Urban League; Harry Wachtel, SCLC; and George Wiley, CORE.

MISSISSIPPI VOTERS AIR THEIR GRIEVANCES TO THE GOVERNMENT

On Saturday, December 4, the U.S. Civil Rights Commission held a conference on voting rights in the King Edward Hotel, Jackson, Mississippi. More than 400 persons from 52 of the state's 82 counties attended the meeting. What was heartening was to find so many of the state's rank and file among those in attendance. What was discouraging and sometimes harrowing was to hear the stories they had to tell.

While Negroes are being registered in the state in increasing numbers they are sometimes still forced to do so in the face of formidable obstacles. Intimidation may be more subtle these days--a raised eyebrow instead of a hammer blow. And physical violence may be less. But they are both still there. And so are evasion, threats of job loss and economic reprisal.

The bitterest criticism of those present was reserved for the lack of federal protection and the lack of mobility on the part of the federal examiners. The Commission, as the handiest agency of government around, sometimes drew that criticism.

Nevertheless, the meeting brought people some reassurance that the federal government is not deaf to their complaints. And in the end, one of those present rose and thanked the Commission for being "patient with impatient people."

As it has with other regional meetings, the Leadership Conference cooperated with the Commission in drawing up the invitation lists and publicizing the session. The Commission plans other regional meetings on civil rights and the related economic problems and we will keep you informed of them.

A FREE FILM ON MISSISSIPPI JUSTICE

The hearings on Administration of Justice that the U.S. Civil Rights Commission held in Jackson, Mississippi this past February, are the basis for a film that will be available soon for public distribution. Those organizations interested in obtaining a free print of the 40-minute documentary should write to Miss Edith Barksdale, U.S. Civil Rights Commission, 1701 Pennsylvania Avenue N.W., Washington, D.C. It will not be ready until after January 7. Washington representatives of the Leadership Conference are invited to a preview of the film on Tuesday, January 11, at 11 A.M. in the Interdepartmental Auditorium.

WE MOVE FORWARD ON NEW PROTECTION LAW

With the next session of Congress only a month away, lawyers in the Leadership Conference are working to reduce to writing their various ideas about the kind of law that would offer the greatest amount of protection to persons engaged in working for civil rights. We will keep you informed of the progress we make.

NEW BOOKLET TO HELP FARMERS HELP THEMSELVES

Realizing that the complicated titles of some of its agencies and the technical language of the laws it administers often keep the very people who can use its services from seeking them, the Department of Agriculture has developed a short, illustrated booklet that sets forth its major programs as simply as possible.

Entitled, "You Too Can Get Help," it reviews the kinds of assistance people can get, informs them of their rights and invites them to write directly to Secretary Orville Freeman if they are not treated fairly.

If you think you can use the booklet, you can order free copies direct from William M. Seabron, Assistant to the Secretary, U.S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D.C. 20250. The Department would be grateful if anyone ordering the publication would describe how many people he hoped to reach with it and the geographic areas in which it would be circulated.

Mr. James Farmer, Executive Director
Congress of Racial Equality
38 Park Row
New York 38, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Farmer:

I am enclosing a draft text of a statement which I hope you will join me in signing, expressing opposition to the Quality Stabilization Act, now pending in the Congress.

Under a name masking its real purpose, the Quality Stabilization Act is a price-fixing measure, vesting authority in the manufacturers, with federal sanction, to fix prices at the retail level, in addition to their power to do so at the wholesale level.

Its immediate effect would be a 20% to 27% price rise. This is the current differential between prices in States with so-called Fair Trade Laws and those without. Its most far-reaching effect would be to hobble free competition on which our economy is based.

The Act is opposed by the U.S. Departments of State, Defense, Justice, Commerce, Agriculture, Budget, the Federal Trade Commission, the President's Council of Economic Advisors, and the President's Consumers Advisory Council.

Nonetheless, the Bill has reached the Rules Committee in the House; though it is still in the Subcommittee of the Senate Commerce Committee.

There are imperative reasons why the Act should be opposed by representatives of the American community.

The Bill is a sleeper, of which the general public has little awareness. The Bill's passage is predicted in the absence of public opposition.

The proposed statement is for the purpose of registering and making visible the opposition of those who are willing to sign it, and to inform the American public of the imminent dangers. These dangers are set forth in some detail in the enclosed Fact Sheet.

Your suggestions on the text will be welcome.

The enclosed card is for your convenience. I shall look forward to hearing from you promptly.

With appreciation,

Sincerely,

Arthur S. Flemming

DRAFT STATEMENT

Under the name of "Quality Stabilization Act", there is now before the Congress of the United States, an amendment to the Federal Trade Commission Act, which forbids, under penalty of license withdrawal and injunction, the sale anywhere, of brand products at less than the retail price fixed by the manufacturer.

The Act, if passed, would destroy the major premise of a free economy which is free competition of products and their prices.

The undersigned register their opposition to this Act, as providing neither quality nor stabilization; call upon the Congress to refuse to give it sanction; and upon the President to veto the measure as inimical to the public welfare, should it pass.

Our reasons are the following:

1. The Quality Stabilization Act would legalize and place the authority of the Federal Government behind price-fixing at both the retail and wholesale levels, for products consumers buy and require for their daily living.

2. It would cause a price rise on all brand products, including food, clothing, household furnishings, conservatively estimated as between 20% and 27%; with the outlook that further price rises would ensue.

3. It would withdraw from the consumer, pricewise, the opportunity to benefit from technological advances at the manufacturing level and marketing efficiency at the retail end.

4. It would encourage manufacturers overtly or covertly, to fix prices at the wholesale level, particularly since 4 to 20 of the larger companies control up to 100% of the manufacture of commodities.

5. All consumers would be affected, from the largest, the United States Government, to the smallest, including the man on relief.

6. The Government itself, the largest consumer, would be adversely affected on the Federal, State, and local levels, through the forced abrogation of the system of competitive bidding.

7. Consumption and aggregate demand would be restricted; inflation and unemployment encouraged.

8. Real income would be reduced; the value of savings eroded, with resulting hardship particularly for those with the lowest incomes. These include some 18 million retired persons, 8-1/2 million of whom have cash incomes of less than $1,000 per year; 4 million of whom have incomes of between $1,000 and $2,000 per year; 2 million of whom now receive public assistance.

Ranged in opposition to the Bill are the United States Departments of State, Defense, Justice, Commerce, Agriculture, Budget, the Federal Trade Commission, the President's Council of Economic Advisors, and the President's Consumers Advisory Council, for the reasons above cited.

Nor will this Bill assist the small businessman, the ostensible beneficiary of the Act. The benefits to the latter would be few, temporary and illusory.

Experience has shown that there are more failures of small businessmen in States with price-fixing than in those States which do not have it.

Price-fixing, under various labels, has already been tried out at the State level. A comparison of prices with those obtaining in States without price-fixing shows a 20% to 27% rise in price for the same products in States with so-called "Fair Trade" laws.

Alleged abuses in the form of predatory "bait" advertising can be corrected by application of existing laws.

In sum, the Act is a misnomer, providing neither quality nor stabilization, which should be defeated by an informed citizenry, expressing their opposition to their representatives in the Congress, and to the President.

A BILL

To amend the Federal Trade Commission Act, to promote quality and price stabilization, to define and restrain certain unfair methods of distribution and to confirm, define, and equalize the rights of producers and resellers in the distribution of goods identified by distinguishing brands, names, or trademarks, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

~~That (a) this Act may be cited as the "Quality Stabilization Act".~~

~~(b) Section 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:~~

~~provision to any person or circumstance shall be held invald for any reason it is the intention of the Congress that the remaining provisions thereof shall not be affected but shall remain in full force and effect."~~

That (a) this Act may be cited as the "Quality Stabilization Act".

(b) Section 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(7) The owner of a brand, name, or trademark shall be deemed to retain his property rights therein, and in the trade and public goodwill symbolized thereby, regardless of any sale or transfer of the goods to which such brand, name, or trademark relates, and no such sale or transfer shall be deemed to diminish or extinguish any such rights.

"(8) Any person who resells goods identified by a distinguishing brand, name, or trademark, either on the label, container, or dispenser thereof, may rightfully employ such brand, name, or trademark, but only in effecting the resale of such goods and subject to the following provisions of this paragraph. If goods usable for the same general purpose are available to the public from sources other than the owner of such brand, name, or trademark, and are in free and open competition therewith, the right of any person to employ such brand, name, or trademark in effecting resale of goods so identified may be revoked for a period not exceeding one year by the owner of such brand, name, or trademark, subject to the provisions of paragraph (10) of this subsection, on written and dated notice of revocation, if, within ninety days prior to the date of the written notice of revocation—

"(A) such person has employed goods bearing such brand, name, or trademark in furtherance of bait merchandising practices;

"(B) such person, after written notice given by such owner of such owner's currently established resale price or price range, has advertised, offered for sale, or sold any such goods, acquired by such person after he has been given such notice, at a price other than such currently established resale price or at a price not within such currently established resale price range; or

"(C) such person, with intent to deceive purchasers, has published a misrepresentation or misrepresentations concerning such goods.

The owner of a brand, name, or trademark who avails himself of the provisions of paragraphs (7) to (17) of this subsection for the purpose of establishing a resale price or price range shall thereby subject himself, without respect to the amount in controversy, to the jurisdiction of the district court of the United States for any district in which goods identified by such brand, name, or trademark are offered for sale, but such jurisdiction shall apply (i) only for the adjudication of issues involving the goods covered by such paragraphs (7) to (17), and (ii) only if the owner of such brand, name, or trademark is not subject to process in the courts of the State in which such purchaser acquired such goods.

"(9) Notwithstanding revocation pursuant to paragraph (8) of this subsection of the right of a person, in reselling goods, to employ the brand, name, or trademark which identifies such goods—

"(A) such person may, in the regular course of his business and within a reasonable time after the date of such revocation, sell all such goods of which, on such date, he is possessed: Provided, That in such sale he shall commit none of the acts described in subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of such paragraph (8); or

"(B) if such person, promptly upon such revocation, shall have supplied to the owner of such brand, name, or trademark a correct itemized listing of the inventory of such goods with a statement of the price paid per item and the total price (including transportation costs) paid therefor, together with a firm offer to sell and deliver all such inventory to such owner at any time within ten days thereafter upon payment of such total price plus the cost of transportation to the owner in the manner directed by such owner, then such person, upon expiration of the ten-day term of such offer without acceptance may so sell such goods in such inventory, in the regular course of his business and within a reasonable time thereafter, without restriction as to price, in which event each advertisement of, or offer to sell, such goods, shall state plainly that the right of the reseller, offering such goods, to employ in any way the brand, name, or trademark carried by the goods has been revoked as to any such goods not in that reseller's possession at the time of such revocation.

"(10) Any person whose right to employ a brand, name, or trademark has been revoked by the owner thereof pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (8) of this subsection, and who thereafter, except as authorized by paragraph (9) of this subsection, resells goods identified by such brand, name, or trademark, or who otherwise employs such brand, name, or trademark in effecting resale of such goods or any other goods, shall be liable in a civil action for damages and injunctive relief by the owner of the brand, name, or trademark, to prevent and restrain further violations of paragraphs (7) to (17), inclusive, of this subsection. Such owner may sue in any district court of the United States in the district in which defendant resides or does business or in which the alleged violation occurred, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall be entitled to (i) recover the amount of any damages sustained, (ii) injunctive relief to prevent and restrain further violations of paragraphs (7) to (17), inclusive, of this subsection, whether or not specific money damages are established, and (iii) recover the cost of suit. Any injunction granted under clause (ii) of this paragraph shall remain in effect for not more than one year from the date it is granted unless it is the second or a subsequent such injunction issued against the same defendant in favor of the same plaintiff in which case it may be a permanent injunction; except that any such injunction, upon petition of such plaintiff, may be vacated unconditionally by the court granting it.

"(11) In any proceeding under paragraph (10) it shall be a defense for the defendant (A) to establish that the plaintiff has not used due diligence to effectuate observance or enforcement of plaintiff's rights under paragraphs (7) to (17), inclusive, of this subsection against other persons who are in substantial competition with the defendant and who are known to plaintiff to be violating the same subparagraph of paragraph (8) of this subsection on which revocation of the defendant's right to employ the brand, name, or trademark was based or (B) to establish that the plaintiff has sold the same kind of goods of like grade and quality as the goods involved in such proceeding to another person similarly situated under terms more favorable or at lower prices than those under which the plaintiff offered such goods for sale to the defendant.

"(12) No action pursuant hereto shall preclude remedial action otherwise available for wrongful use of a brand, name, or trademark.

"(13) Paragraphs (7) to (17), inclusive, of this subsection shall apply to all acts and transactions of the character referred to therein, in or affecting commerce, which Congress may lawfully regulate, but where the owner of a brand, name, or trademark avails himself of any right or remedy provided in paragraphs (7) to (17), inclusive, of this subsection, such action shall not cause any act or transaction not otherwise in, affecting, or related to, commerce to be an activity or transaction in, affecting, or related to, commerce. If any State, by any provision of its constitution adopted, or by any law enacted, after this paragraph takes effect, prohibits resale price maintenance in such State through the exercise of paragraphs (7) to (17), inclusive, of this subsection, then, while such provision or law is in effect, such paragraphs shall not authorize the establishment or enforcement of any resale price or resale price range with respect to any resale in such State of any goods if such goods so resold are to be delivered from a place in such State to a purchaser in such State and are not to be resold again for delivery to a purchaser outside of such State.

"(14) As used in paragraphs (7) to (17), inclusive, of this subsection—

"(A) The term 'person' means any individual, partnership, association, or corporation.

"(B) The term 'goods' means goods, wares, and merchandise.

"(C) The term 'currently established resale price' means the price for goods identified by a brand, name, or trademark specified by written notice invoking paragraphs (7) to (17), inclusive, of this subsection given by the owner of such brand, name, or trademark to the person reselling such goods.

"(D) The term 'currently established resale price range' means all prices including and between the minimum and maximum resale prices for goods identified by a brand, name, or trademark, specified by written notice invoking paragraphs (7) to (17), inclusive, of this subsection given by the owners of such brand, name, or trademark to the person reselling such goods.

Each such currently established resale price and resale price range shall be uniform at each level of distribution, except for reasonable marketing costs. Such owner of the brand, name, or trademark may so establish, for resale of a combination of two or more items of goods, a resale price or price range different from the sum of the currently established resale prices or price ranges for the items when sold individually. Such owner of the brand, name, or trademark may also engage in other promotional activities not made unlawful by any other statute.

"(15) All rights and remedies provided in paragraphs (7) to (17), inclusive, of this subsection, to owners of a brand, name, or trademark, shall be also available to any owner of a brand, name, or trademark who, in the sale of goods identified by such brand, name, or trademark, shall compete, at any level of distribution, with any reseller offering such goods: Provided, That such owner shall sell such identified goods, at whatever level of distribution, only at the price or within the price range currently established by such owner for that level of distribution.

"(16) The following transactions shall be exempt from paragraphs (7) to (15), inclusive, of this subsection—

"(A) Sales of bulk commodities when sold without wrappers or containers.

"(B) Sales by any officer acting under the orders or authority of any duly constituted court; or sales by any person in mitigation of damages or enforcement of a lien or other secured interest in said goods, when such person is not primarily engaged in the distribution of goods for resale.

"(C) Sales of damaged, deteriorated, defaced, or secondhand goods, when plain notice of the condition of the goods is given to the public.

"(D) Sales of drugs, medicines, and devices for which either Federal or State law or regulations requires a prescription from a physician, dentist, or such other persons as the various States may authorize to prescribe such items.

"(E) Sales to or by the Federal, State, or municipal governments or their political subdivisions or agencies.

"(F) Sales to charitable, educational, medical, and religious organizations, for their own use and not for resale.

"(17) If any provision of paragraphs (7) to (17), inclusive, of this subsection or the application of any such provision to any person or circumstance shall be held invalid for any reason it is the intention of the Congress that the remaining provisions thereof shall not be affected but shall remain in full force and effect."

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN :

Automatic AGE discrimination in employment is a foul but most profitable system that brands "UNEMPLOYABLE" job applicants in the age brackets that include parents with growing children to be raised and educated, as well as veterans of past wars who spent part of their youth defending country and democracy.

The enclosed analyses explain the greedy purpose of automatic AGE discrimination and show what was done in the Senate two years ago, during the civil rights bill debate, to protect and encourage this sinful practice.

Perhaps if the so well guarded secret about the unholy reasons for automatic AGE discrimination in hiring, or firing, or laying off were to become common knowledge, then Congress may have to outlaw this malpractice under the civil rights bill, as was proposed two years ago. You may be able and want to help bring this about.

SALIENT ARGUMENTS AND COUNTER-ARGUMENTS

JUNE 11, 1964 DEBATE

ON SENATOR SMATHERS' AMENDMENT 569

To include AGE discrimination in Article VII of the civil rights bill and abolish age discrimination along with all other job discriminations such as race,color,religion.origin.

-.-.-.-.-

SEN. SMATHERS: Title VII goes to great lengths to eliminate discrimination against race, color, religion or sex, but there is considerable discrimination the section overlooks: I believe I can establish there is more discrimination in a certain area without basis or justification than in any other area: discrimination with respect to age.

For several years the Special Committee on Aging - a study prepared by the White House Conference on aging - has produced statistics:

In St. Louis - applicants 35 years old are automatically excluded because of age, from 16.9 % of openings reported.

At 40, they are excluded from an additional 11.6 %.

At 45, from an additional 9.6 % - making it roughly 40 % of jobs not available for people who have reached their 45th birthday.

At 55, the percentage is 55 %.

The President's Council on Aging conducted another study through the U.S, Employment Service.

They considered 25,000 employer job orders received in May 1963 for Federal and State Agencies in 8 major cities.

45 % specified various age limits.

18 % specified under 35 years. An applicant who lost his job at 36 could not be considered

25 % specified under 45 years.

42 % under 55 years.

This is the worst kind of discrimination that exists in the country.

Another study by the U.S. Employment Service and our Committee showed that this type of discrimination is bad, as the study of 500 larger firms in the U.S. showed they rated the records of employees over 40 equal or better than young workers in 9 out of 10 of the following characteristics: dependability, lack of absenteism, quality of work, quantity of production, accident rates, physical capacity, versatility of skills, ability to get along with other people, speed in gaining proficiency on a new job.

Let us put a provision with respect to age in the bill and stop discrimination with respect to white citizens, colored citizens, Puerto Ricans and the rest on the ground of age, because they are discriminated against on that basis just as all the rest of us are.

We find more poverty in the aging group of 55, 60 and 65. They can't get a job because too many companies - even the Federal Government and many State Governments say: We do not take on anyone who has reached the age of 35 or 45.

OBJECTION: I am in favor of this type of legislation, but putting it on the civil rights bill will confuse the issue rather than clarify it.

OBJECTION: I oppose the age discrimination amendment for the same reason. A study is now under way by the Secretary of Labor. Time for the completion of the study is June 1965. We should wait till the Department of Labor report is received, then draw legislation.

SEN. SMATHERS: The statistics presented have been accumulated from the 10 past years records.

SEN. LONG OF LA.: In big industrial plants in my State much automation is being used. These companies do not wish to employ anyone over 40 because they do not want to be stuck with the retirement bill.

They hire Negroes and anyone, they are not worried about race, but a person over 40 does not have a chance of getting a job there. He cannot draw welfare because he is too young and healthy, and no Social Security because he is able-bodied and capable of working. These are the people discriminated against more and more.

When the civil rights bill passes, there will still be terrible discrimination against those 40 years and over. If the Senate wants to do something about discrimination, this is one of the worst and rankest form of discrimination.

OBJECTION: All Senators know that age is often a factor in employment. But everybody knows age is important in selective types of employment where there are dangerous pursuits and occupations, such as working on a superstructure on the 86th floor of a skyscraper.

It is strange to me that we get all hot and bothered at this hour when the Senate has had years to do something about it.

I recall no bill introduced on that subject. Yet there has been about 50 bills introduced relating to elimination of race discrimination.

OBJECTION: We are busy conducting hearings on the problem of the aged. In due course a recommendation will be submitted to the Senate after adequate hearings.

The pending amendment (to eliminate age discrimination) is irrelevant to the purpose of the bill before us (civil rights bill), which is one to deal with discrimination based on color and race.

IN SUPPORT: If the provision were standing alone, I would oppose it because one who employs another and pays with his own money should have the right to discriminating judgment regarding age, character, education, personality, appearance, experience or any other fitness or suitability. But since the bill seeks to prevent discrimination on account of race, sex, religion or other factors, I join Senator Smathers in saying that the largest numbers who are suffering the most crushing form of discrimination are suffering because of age. Therefore I support the amendment to prevent discrimination on account of age.

SEN. LONG OF LA.: Nothing in the amendment would prevent the employer from declining to hire if age is the reason why a person does not qualify. But when certain employers have a policy of not hiring anyone age 40 years so they won't pay the cost of retirement, they are discriminating against persons because of age.

SEN. SMATHERS: The amendment excludes bona fide situations where occupations require young people. Or when religious organizations want their own kind.

OBJECTION: It is absolutely impossible to predict what impact this amendment would have upon group insurance policies carried by industry from one end of the country to another. If such a provision is to be adopted, there should be sustained hearings. There is a special Committee on Aging. It has authority to look into the question. We do not have the slightest idea of the impact of such a provision in terms of coverage. It seems to me therefore that it should be rejected.

We discussed this subject in various conferences. We left it very much alone because of the tremendous implications such a provision would have.

Amendment voted on and defeated.

IN SUPPORT OF SENATOR SMATHERS' GENEROUS ATTEMPT TO BAN WIDESPREAD AUTOMATIC AND SYSTEMATIC AGE DISCRIMINATION IN HIRING, FIRING AND LAYING OFF.

TO ALL SENATORS PARTICIPATING
IN THE JUNE 11, 1964 DEBATE:

Not much printer's ink was flowing, nor were there many sound waves in the air on June 11, 1964, or thereafter, to keep the public informed of what went on in the Senate that day, although it was tantamount to a miracle: Age discrimination had been discovered and was now given full recognition through presentation by Senator Smathers of Amendment 569 intended to ban age discrimination along with race, color, religion and origin discrimination.

Not so surprising was the defeat of this laudable amendment by a large majority vote, which could as easily as not, be construed as a declaration of loyalty to the source of age discrimination more than an act of sadism against people past 35 years seeking employment.

As pointed out by the supporters of Amendment 569, to ban race, color, religion and origin discrimination and at the same time to defend and protect AGE discrimination, cannot be considered a sincere piece of legislation. Banning of racial discrimination was a long overdue move, but it has no meaning after the age of 35 or 40 as far as job opportunity is concerned.

As explained to the protectors of age discrimination, selection of the right person to fill some particular job has never been interpreted as age discrimination. There are numerous instances where either youth or maturity may be requisites for perfectly good reasons.

Unjust, consequently objectionable age discrimination applies to the automatic and systematic rejection of applicants past some set age limit prescribed by group insurance plans paid for 50 % by employers and 50 % by Government subsidy through tax deduction as business expense. Objectionable age discrimination applies as well to the automatic and systematic elimination of older workers under these plans. Where no such plans are in effect, employers show very little or no interest at all in applicants' birth dates or in the number of birthdays their employees have gone through, as long as their work is entirely satisfactory.

However, group plans are now offered for national pool membership even where a single person is employed which, of course, further reduces the ever diminishing job opportunities left for middle-aged people, and which of course, increases the insatiable demand for applicants in the 25-35 years age bracket, which happens to be the insurance industry's predilection age bracket. The often publicized shortage of skilled people would practically disappear but for those - anything but young themselves - who had the nerve to refuse to others past the age of 35 the same right to obtain a job for which they qualify.

The remark made by the opposition of equal opportunity, that there had never been any bill against age discrimination prior to Senator Smathers' Amendment 569 only shows how successfully old workers have been intimidated into silent acceptance by continuous rejection until they doubt their own worth despite their tested qualifications, experience and know-how. Even seniority pay has been and still is being invoked as a good excuse to eliminate older engineers, other professionals and skilled craftsmen whose precious knowledge and ability, acquired through long experience, are lost to the country, which must now or soon compete not only with Russia, but with many other highly developed countries not plagued and handicapped by any age discrimination and consequently not robbed of their best talents.

The country, therefore, has a right to expect a change when the question of age discrimination comes up again, in June 1965, as promised last June 11, 1964.

Gentlemen —

The Immigration Bill is probably due to be revised.

It seems to me that any revision should be tied into the unemployment rate. If the unemployment rate is high there should be less immigration, & the rate could rise or fall depending on good or bad times. Frankly there shouldn't be immigration while there are so many unemployed, but that is up to the politicians.

Yours sincerely.

An immigrant, White.

January 11, 1965

FROM: Jerome G. Kovalcik, Assistant Superintendent

Please find enclosed a list of proposed legislation for the 1965 Session of the New York State Legislature for which the Board of Education is seeking public support.

On bills aimed to bring about a substantial increase in State aid to education, the Board is cooperating with the Conference of Large City Boards of Education of New York State including Albany, Buffalo, New York City, Rochester, Syracuse, and Yonkers. You will find also enclosed a booklet explaining the program of the Large City Conference.

With the help of Mr. Thomas Fitzpatrick, legislative representative for the school system, we will send you additional information on legislation as it comes up.

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
110 Livingston Street, Brooklyn, N. Y. 11201

PROPOSED LEGISLATION FOR THE 1965 SESSION OF THE NEW YORK STATE LEGISLATURE

Area	Objective
State Aid to School Districts	1. To include in the state aid formula, at realisitc weightings, the attendance of summer school, evening school, trade and vocational school pupils.

Under the present educational cost-sharing formula, the attendance of pupils in summer schools and evening schools is not included in determining a school district's weighted average daily attendance. As a result school districts which offer these programs must assume their entire cost.

Since educational cost difference is recognized as an important factor in the state's shared-cost formula (as evident in formula weightings of .5, 1.0, and 1.25 for kindergarten, elementary and secondary pupil attendance, respectively) the cost difference incurred in the programs required for pupils in the vocational schools, schools for the handicapped, and those for the retarded should be provided for by a modification of the formula. This is especially important for two reasons: first, the cost differences run from two to five times those of pupils in the regular programs; and second, the concentration of these specialized programs is in the larger cities.

2. To replace the $500 state-sharing ceiling with one representing the average per-pupil cost for all the school districts in the state and to raise the $180 floor correspondingly.

No matter how much a school district may expend per pupil, the present formula limits the amount in which the state will share to $500 per pupil. The estimated average state per-pupil cost is approximately $620 for 1963-64 and $668 for 1964-65. This bill would raise the $500 ceiling to this figure. It would also raise the present floor of $180 correspondingly. The floor is the minimum amount per pupil that a school district may receive regardless of its ability to pay the education bill.

3. Since school site costs per acre in urban areas average approximately $146,000 as against $1,355 in the non-urban areas it is only fair that state aid be based on full site cost instead of including such site cost as a fraction of the construction cost.

State aid to education is not limited to a sharing of the operating costs, but includes also the costs involved in the construction of new buildings. The present formula provides for the addition of a fraction of the construction cost for a group of additional items, including site cost, grading, architects' fees, equipment of building, machinery, etc. These items represent a fairly uniform state-wide cost except for site acquisition which may vary from a quarter of a million dollars per acre in New York City to an average of less than $1,500 in non-city school districts. This bill seeks to maintain equity by providing for a separate sharing for the site, without disturbing the formula with regard to the other items in the group.

4. In urban areas only 28¢ of every tax dollar is available for educational needs as against 51¢ in the non-urban areas. The cost of providing essential governmental functions outside of education takes almost three-quarters of the tax dollar in the cities. Coupled with a constitutional taxing limitation, this burden seriously impedes a municipality's ability to provide for education. Legislation will be sought to compensate for this inequity.

The costs of governmental services, other than education, tend to increase with the size of a district and reach very large proportions in the major cities where many services are rendered to non-residents as well as residents. Police and fire protection, sanitation services, and maintenance of streets are examples of the services to which a greater portion of the large-city tax dollar must be committed than is the case in most of the smaller districts. The ability of the large city to support education is thus reduced.

5. To include the attendance of 3- and 4-year-old children in the computation of State aid for school districts conducting approved programs of instruction for such children, primarily in disadvantaged areas of the districts.

The State Education Commissioner's Advisory Committee on Human Relations and Community Tensions in its report "Desegregating the Public Schools of New York City" stated:

"The talents of New York City children must be cultivated earlier than ever before. Only a new, citywide program of pre-kindergarten education will stimulate this change."

Research has indicated that the ages of three and four are of great importance in the education of children. Many of the younger children receive educational experiences in the home that adequately provide a basis for the formal instruction in the early grades. However, there are many other children who fail to obtain these learnings and to develop the abilities necessary for them to start abreast of their peers.

The Allen Committee Report also includes the following statements:

"...it is at this level (pre-kindergarten) that what we have elsewhere called compensatory education can have a significant impact. The materially or socially deprived child can gain most from extra enrichment at the age of 3 and 4. This program is both compensatory and preventative. It would cost less and have greater benefits than remedial programs for adolescent dropouts."

The State Education Law presently provides for a state sharing of the educational costs only for pupils between ages five and twenty-one.

Preventing interruption of School Schedules	6. To amend the Education law so as to a) prevent direct or indirect interference with the compulsory education of children b) permit the Commissioner of Education to make the necessary adjustment in the area of state aid for those school districts whose pupil attendance has been affected adversely by acts of outside groups.

	Any loss of classroom learning is detrimental to a child's development. Moreover, state aid to education is based on pupil attendance, and any reduction of attendance is reflected in a loss of such aid. On a scheduled school day, total absence could mean for New York City a loss of approximately two million dollars. Education Law makes provision for the compulsory education of children and prohibits parents and other persons from inducing "a minor to absent himself from attendance upon required instruction ...". School boycotts were not a matter of concern when the law was formulated, and the wording, therefore, is not specifically addressed to this kind of inducement to absence from school. Nor does the law provide a remedy for the loss of state aid incurred by a large-scale absence. These bills would empower the Commissioner of Education to make an adjustment in the computation of attendance for state aid for those school districts incurring such attendance losses and would make it a violation of law for any person or persons to counsel, aid or abet not only the pupils but also their parents in violating the compulsory education law.
Construction of School Buildings	7. To raise from $50,000 to $100,000 the cost of construction which may be subject to single or multiple bidding. 8. To amend the Education Law so as to exempt school construction from the requirement of multiple contract letting. Under present law, construction, renovation or repairs to public buildings costing in excess of $50,000 require the preparation of separate specifications and the letting of separate bids in four areas: lighting, heating and ventilating, plumbing and general contracting. This provision entails excessive time delays, expense, and because of the lack of one responsible coordinator, frequently involves the Board of Education in extensive litigation. The Board of Education will seek to have school construction exempted from this restriction, so that one contract may be let covering all the work to be done. Concurrently it will seek to reduce the number of jobs requiring multiple bidding by having the present ceiling of $50,000 raised to $100,000. Of course, legislation raising the present ceiling would not be needed if the bill seeking to exempt school construction is successful.
Disciplinary Trials	9. To amend section 2573 of the Education Law so as to promote efficiency in the handling of disciplinary cases that require Board action. Section 2573 of the Education Law describes the procedure whereby the Board of Education is to conduct hearings on disciplinary charges against employees. It provides for two steps: 1) an original hearing to be held before a committee of the Board itself, or before a trial examiner selected by the Board, and, 2) a reading of the entire testimony by the Board of Education for the purpose of confirming, rejecting, or modifying the trial examiner's or committee's recommendations.

Area	Objective
	Stenographic minutes are taken at all such hearings, and some of these reach extensive proportions as trial examiners frequently elicit testimony in order to acquaint themselves with school practice and procedure. Under present law, members of the Board of Education must spend inordinate amounts of time in reading introductory materials and testimony on matters already familiar to them. The proposed amendment, by substituting the words "review the testimony and acquaint themselves with the evidence" for the term "read" would permit members to devote less time to the irrelevant and the introductory and provide time for a more intensive examination of that which is relevant and significant. It would accord Board members a discretion now commonly given to all review or appellate groups. The amendment would permit a more efficient handling of the increased number of disciplinary cases that require Board action.

Dear Friends:

As you know, a number of us who worked to defeat the Dirksen anti-reapportionment rider last fall are again working in opposition to the Dirksen and other proposed constitutional amendments which would halt the fair apportionment of the state legislatures.

Royce Hansen and Marvin Kaplan have prepared a brochure on the current threats to fair reapportionment of which a mimeographed copy is enclosed. In its final form the brochure will be attractively printed with illustrations.

Representatives of a number of groups have expressed an interest in obtaining these brochures in quantity for distribution to their memberships and others. If you would like to order some of these brochures yourself, please call Mrs. Thelma Lucas at EX.3-5581, extension 43, before 5 p.m. this Thursday, February 25.

The cost will be $6.00 a hundred for such orders in advance of printing and the brochures will be available about March 5.

Sincerely yours,

Kenneth E. Gray

NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR FAIR REPRESENTATION

2027 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20036

22 February 1965

Dear Friends:

We enlist your help, as leaders in the fight for fair representation, in defeating the most recent attempt to perpetuate malapportionment in our state legislatures. Senator Dirksen has introduced a resolution to amend the federal constitution to maintain malapportionment in legislatures. There is a simultaneous attempt in the state legislatures to petition Congress to call a convention to propose the amendment.

We feel the Dirksen Amendment poses a grave threat to representative government in the United States.

1. It would be the first amendment ever enacted to take away constitutional rights.

2. It would make the effectiveness of an individual's vote depend on where he lives. A person, performing the same job, would have less political power simply by moving from one place to another--even in the same state.

3. The amendment would destroy the right of a voter to seek his right to political equality in the courts. It would be the first time that basic individual rights could be voted away.

4. Where there is no power to initiate legislation by petition (most states have none), one generation of voters could impose its will on all generations which follow it, whatever the changes in opinion, population or social conditions. Debate on the subject of fair representation would be forever precluded once one system was adopted.

5. The amendment establishes no standards whatever for non-population factors, leaving the door open to all forms of discrimination. It would be possible, for instance, in states where urban residents have a majority, to deprive rural interests of any sort of representation, and conversely, a state with a 51% rural majority could take 90% of the representation, just because it has the power to do so. The Court decisions protect all citizens equally.

We feel compelled to speak out against this dangerous amendment. We hope you will join us in warning your legislature of the dangers in the amendment and in urging your Senators and Representatives to work for its defeat in the Congress. In particular, please note the enclosure prepared for us by Senator Douglas' office.

SENATE HEARINGS ON ANTI-REAPPORTIONMENT CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

In the opinion of many of us who wish to attain the fair apportionment of the state legislatures, it is urgently necessary and proper to work for the defeat of the resolutions now introduced in the Congress to propose a constitutional amendment permitting one house of a legislature to be based on factors other than population.

In this connection, it is extremely important that there be extensive and thorough testimony before the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments. Senator Birch Bayh, the chairman of this subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, has announced hearings on the legislative apportionment constitutional amendments to be held in Washington, D. C. on March 3, 4, 5, 9, 10, and 11, 1965. March 3, 4, and 5 have been set aside to receive the testimony of Senators and Representatives.

We hope you will want to testify in person, or at least submit a statement. In addition to developing the constitutional arguments, there is a need for detailed testimony on how a single malapportioned house can block progressive legislation and administration.

If you wish to testify, you should write Senator Bayh that you request to be heard. We would appreciate receiving a carbon copy of your letter.

The main provisions of the joint resolutions to be considered by the Senate subcommittee are reprinted below.

S. J. Res. 2 - By Mr. Dirksen and 37 Senators:
SECTION 1. The right and power to determine the composition of the legislature of a State and the apportionment of the membership thereof shall remain in the people of that State. Nothing in this Constitution shall prohibit the people from apportioning one house of a bicameral legislature upon the basis of factors other than population, or from giving reasonable weight to factors other than population in apportioning a unicameral legislature, if, in either case, such apportionment has been submitted to a vote of the people in accordance with law and with the provisions of this Constitution and has been approved by a majority of those voting on that issue.

S. J. Res. 38 - By Mr. Church:
SECTION 1. Any State having a legislature composed of more than one house may depart from the principle of equal representation in one house by adopting another reasonable system of representation with the approval of a majority of the electorate, provided review be permitted periodically. See the Congressional Record for February 2, 1965, pages 1769-70.

S. J. Res. 44 - By Mr. Javits:
SECTION 1. Nothing in this Constitution shall prohibit the people of a State from apportioning the membership of one house of a bicameral legislature upon the basis of factors other than population, from giving reasonable weight to factors other than population in apportioning the membership of a unicameral legislature, or from providing for any such apportionment following each enumeration provided for in article 1, section 2 of this Constitution if such apportionment or provision is submitted to a vote of the people through a statewide referendum held in accordance with law and with the provisions of this Constitution, and such apportionment or provision is approved by a majority of those voting on that issue. See the Congressional Record for February 8, 1965, page 2147.

THE VOTE-SHRINKERS ARE ON THE MOVE AGAIN! (Cover and Picture)

Where?

In Congress and in nearly every state of the Union, They're leading a new drive to perpetuate an old injustice. They want to preserve the old systems of electing state governments, systems that often mean a vote cast in the city counts 4 or 5 or 10 times less than a vote cast in a small town.

What Are They Doing?

They are trying to amend the Constitution of the United States to fix unequal representation for all time. They hope in this way to nullify one of the U. S. Supreme Court's major decisions. On June 15, 1964, the Court declared, "as a basic constitutional standard, the Equal Protection Clause requires that the seats in both houses of a bicameral state legislature must be apportioned on a population basis." - in short, "one man, one vote."

What Was Behind The Supreme Court's Ruling?

A long history of inequities. When the United States was an agricultural country with people spread fairly even throughout each state, the legislatures did represent the population. But as more and more people moved from the farms to the cities the legislatures tried, with considerable success, to keep the reins of power in the old rural county seats, areas sparsely settled and easily controlled. Legislatures that once provided equal representation became distorted parodies of democratic government. Systems of representation that were reasonable enough when 75 per cent of our people lived in towns and villages had become intolerable when 75 per cent lived in metropolitan areas.

These were some of the facts that confronted the Supreme Court in the cases it decided last year:

1. In Alabama, only one-fourth of the total population lived in districts that elected the majorities of the state's House and Senate. A voter in the smallest district has 15.6 times more to say about how the House is run than a voter in the largest one.

2. In Maryland, the Court said, "the five most populous political-subdivisions, with over three-fourths of the State's total 1960 population, are represented by only 10 Senators, or slightly over one-third of the membership" of the State Senate. The state's other 19 counties, with less than one-fourth of its people have 19 Senators, almost two-thirds of the Senate's members.

3. In Colorado, it takes more than two-thirds of the population to elect only a bare majority of the state's Senators.

4. In Georgia, a voter among the 1,876 people in the smallest district has 99 times the voting influence of a voter among the 185,442 people in the largest one.

And these are not the worst examples of unequal representation: In Nevada, a majority of the state Senate can be elected by a mere 8 per cent of the people; in California, by 10.7 per cent; in Vermont, by 11.9 per cent.

As the Supreme Court remarked in its June 15th decision, "it would appear extraordinary to suggest that a state could be constitutionally permitted to enact a law providing that certain of the state's voters could vote two, five or ten times for their legislative representatives, while voters living elsewhere could vote only once." Yet, the Court points out, that is the effect of the present districting schemes based on some other standard than one man one vote.

Shouldn't the States Correct These Inequalities?

Of course. But so far they have shown little disposition to change until citizens who felt themselves under-represented went into court and sued to force reapportionment.

For instance:

1. Delaware has not reapportioned since 1897.

2. New York has been using an apportionment formula unchanged since 1894.

3. Alabama, in spite of a constitution that requires it to redraw district lines every ten years, didn't reapportion for almost 60 years and then it did not act until faced with a court order in 1962.

After considering such situations, the Supreme Court said the principal responsibility for reapportionment lay with the legislatures. It did not tell the states what to do; it simply pointed out their duty to them. Only then did most states begin to listen. As Professor Royce Hanson of American University puts it, "Before the courts took jurisdiction of apportionment cases, the state legislatures consistently told the people petitioning for fair representation to go to Hell. Now they do not have to go." But most states still have a great deal to do before they can be said to have complied with the Court's ruling.

A Plan to Nullify the Court

The campaign to overturn the Supreme Court's decision is being waged right now in Congress and the state legislatures.

In Congress, the principal threat lies in the constitutional amendment proposed by Senator Everett M. Dirksen (R., Ill.). This bill (S.J.Res.2) would permit a state to apportion one house of its legislature on a basis other than population if a majority of the people voted for the change.

That may sound fair, but here's what's wrong with it:

1. Some things - and your right to vote is one of them - were never meant to be determined by a majority. The Dirksen amendment would let a majority decide that you are not to have a full vote in electing the men who run your state. The essence of constitutional government lies in the restraints it places on the power of the majority to impair individual rights. As Mr. Justice Jackson said in 1943, "One's right to life, liberty, and property, to free speech, a free press, freedom of worship and assembly, and other fundamental rights may not be submitted to vote; they depend on the outcome of no elections." And in 1964, the Court, when it struck down Colorado's plan for reapportionment, even though it had been approved by the voters in the state, said, "A citizen's constitutional rights can hardly be infringed simply because a majority of the people choose to do so."

2. Unless both houses of your state legislature are fairly apportioned, your vote may not have full value. An obstinate minority, representing as few as 10 per cent of the people, can, if it controls one house, veto improvements in schools, housing, urban renewal, mass transportation, public welfare, state taxation, fair labor standards, state cooperation in Federal poverty programs, etc. No one special interest group has a right to control one house of a state legislature forever. Yet that could be a result of the Dirksen amendment.

3. The men who oppose reapportionment often point to the U. S. Senate as proof of their argument that at least one house of a state legislature ought to be based on something other than population. But state and Federal governments cannot be compared. The Federal government represents both states and people. State governments were meant to represent people only. Congress cannot alter state boundaries to achieve more equal representation and so the Senate limits itself to two Senators from each state no matter what its size. But states, within their boundaries, can create and abolish counties and effect any arrangement they please in order to give equal weight to the votes of all their residents. Representation in the U. S. Senate is a state's right. Representation in the state legislature is a citizen's right.

4. The Dirksen proposal is so vague, it would appear to authorize the use of any standard of apportionment. That opens the way to vicious discrimination against some citizens or groups. Mississippi, for instance, might apportion its Senate on the basis of income and effectively deny state representation to Negroes who are just beginning to win the right to vote.

5. Another vice of the amendment is that it would become valid when three-fourths of the state legislatures ratified it. This means the very forces in a state legislature whose political future depends on keeping the old system intact would be asked to vote on whether or not it should be changed.

In the States - the opponents of full and fair representation are launching a campaign to bypass Congressional consideration of the Dirksen amendment. They fear the kind of searching national debate that killed it last year. By means of a procedure never used before they are now trying to get the legislatures of two-thirds of the states, 34 of them, to petition Congress to call a constitutional convention. They think they can get such a convention to approve the kind of changes Mr. Dirksen wants without too much trouble and sneak the amendment into the constitution through the back door.

Even if the opponents fail to get two-thirds of the states to apply to Congress they might conceivably build up enough local pressure to persuade Congress to enact the Dirksen amendment.

People or Trees?

The Supreme Court put the issue clearly in its decision of June 15, 1964:

"Legislators represent people, not trees or acres. Legislators are elected by voters, not farms or cities or economic interests. As long as ours is a representative form of government and our legislatures are those instruments of government elected directly by and directly representative of the people, the right to elect legislators in a free and unimpaired fashion is a bedrock of our political system."

(Kansas Star cartoon)

HERE'S A CHECKLIST OF WHAT YOU CAN DO TO PROTECT FAIR REPRESENTATION FROM THE VOTE-SHRINKERS.

( ) Wire or write your Senators and Representatives, urging them to oppose the Dirksen amendment and any attempt in the House or Senate to keep the Supreme Court decision from having its full effect. Tell them so when you visit them in Washington or when they are at home.

( ) Organize delegations to visit your state legislators and express your opposition to any move at the State level to support the Dirksen approach. Stress your opposition to a constitutional convention.

( ) Send delegations to visit the governor. Try to get him on record for equal representation.

( ) Since mayors and city managers and suburban county officials all have a proper interest in changes that would give them a fair voice in how the state is run, be sure to visit them. Try to get them to issue statements or resolutions calling for fair reapportionment.

( ) Don't try to work alone. Wherever you can, try to set up local committees broadly representative of civic, labor, business, religious, women's and civil rights groups who are backing reapportionment.

( ) Make everything you do count double. Send copies of resolutions and press releases on your visits to newspapers, radio and TV stations. Letters to the editors of city and suburban papers help educate the public on the issue. So do editorials, if you can get them. And so do radio and TV forums.

( ) Finally, please keep the National Committee For Fair Representation informed of any developments in your state.

* * * *

The men who want to keep malapportionment know their time's running out. Under court orders, more and more state legislatures are beginning to reapportion themselves. We must see that nothing interrupts this process. Work for reapportionment! Help make sure your vote in state contests counts as much as anyone's.

Dear Sir:

I was interested to read your recent editorial regarding the Administration's proposal to change our immigration policy. I think it is important for people to realize that the proposal would increase net immigration by only an estimated 8,000 persons over what is allowed under our present law. Part of this increase would come by giving the new African nations a quota of 200 persons a year instead of only 100 allowed to immigrate under our present law.

The key factor, however, is that the President's bill (S-500, HR-2580) would abolish our ethnically and racially based selection system for admittance of immigrants. Called the National Origins Quota System, it assigns 157,000 annual quota numbers to all countries outside of the Western Hemisphere (except Jamaica, Tobago and Trinidad) in proportion to the persons of that nationality or descent in our white population in 1920. This formula results in wide discrepancies giving Switzerland a quota larger than for all of Africa, and tiny Andora with a population of 6,000 the same as India with 357,000,000. To compound these difficulties, persons with a 50 percent Oriental ancestry, whether they be Canadian, British or of any other nationality, are placed on a special quota of 100 which almost precludes their admittance.

The Administration's proposal which Senators Clark and Scott have sponsored, would substitute for the current formula a non-racially based selection system by pooling 166,000 quota numbers over a five year period,, and allocating them on a first come first served basis within preference categories including skills needed in the United States and on family reunion.

According to the Department of Labor and other sources, immigration into the United States over the last fifteen years has, in fact, constituted a "Peace Corps in reverse" that has substantially enriched the economy and benefited the American community in many ways. In the decade ending in 1961, among the immigrants who have found new homes in the United States were 7,132 scientists, 9,025 machinists, 22,425 teachers, 14,340 doctors, 28,235 masons, and 30,000 engineers. All occupations in which there are labor shortages. The contributions of immigrants in these fields have in no way jeopardized opportunities for Americans, but have acted as a stimulant to keep our economy expanding.

Critics of our current law are not asking for more immigrants but that they be selected on a nondiscriminatory basis.

Sincerely,

J. Theodore Peters, Chairman

March 31, 1965

Mr. James Farmer
National Director
Congress of Racial Equality
38 Park Row
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Farmer:

Since April 1963 there have been thirteen highly publicized murders of men, women and children, participating in legitimate civil rights activities.

The victims of these murders have all been attempting to exercise rights under the First Amendment, guaranteed against State infringement by the Fourteenth Amendment, or guaranteed by the Fifteenth Amendment.

Yet no Federal statute makes murders such as these a Federal crime; and in none of these cases have there been convictions under any statute.

On April 1, 1965 I will introduce legislation to make murder committed to deprive another of any federally guaranteed right an offense against the United States. Enclosed materials provide further information on the legislation.

I would welcome your comments and your support.

Sincerely yours,

Gaylord Nelson

Washington, D. C.

For Release Wednesday, March 31, 1965

WASHINGTON, D. C, -- Senator Gaylord Nelson of Wisconsin today introduced legislation to make murder in connection with civil rights cases a Federal crime.

He said he hoped it would also strike a blow against the Ku Klux Klan and other hate organizations.

The legislation would authorize Federal prosecutions for murder in such cases as the shooting of Mrs. Viola Gregg Liuzzo on an Alabama highway, and the brutal clubbing to death of the Rev. James Reeb in Selma, Alabama.

Existing law does not authorize Federal prosecutions for such murders, only for the lesser crime of "conspiracy" to deprive another of his Federally guaranteed rights.

Nelson said that the new legislation would also allow prosecutions in cases such as the slaying of three civil rights workers in Mississippi last summer.

"Since April 1963 there have been thirteen highly publicized killings in connection with civil rights cases," Nelson said. "None have been solved; no one could have been indicted for murder under existing Federal law. How many other unreported cases there are we can only speculate."

(See attached list of killings)

Nelson said the suggestion that murder in connection with civil rights cases be made a Federal crime was made by the Right Rev. Paul Moore, Jr., Suffragan Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Washington. Rev. Moore made the suggestion while addressing a civil rights rally of 15,000 in Washington, Sunday, March 14, 1965.

"It is a crime, punishable by death, to kidnap a child and carry him across a state line," Nelson said. "Clearly, we do not want to over-extend the power of the Federal government, but today brutal murders in connection with legitimate civil rights activities are a far greater threat to the nation than kidnapping ever was. Murder of this kind is a crime against the nation and should be treated as such."

Nelson recalled that the nation was shocked and surprised to learn that the assassination of President Kennedy was not a Federal crime.

Recent Murders in Connection With Civil Rights Activities

The adequacy of present Federal criminal legislation is illuminated by its application to a few recent examples of violence directed against civil rights activities:

1. On April 23, 1963, near Keener, Alabama, W. L. Moore, a Baltimore postman, was shot and killed on an interstate highway while marching through the south with a sign espousing racial equality. No trial or conviction in either state or federal courts resulted from this murder;

2. On June 23, 1963, Medgar Evers, Mississippi state field director of the NAACP was shot from ambush while entering his house in Jackson. Byron de la Beckwith was twice tried in Mississippi state courts without a verdict being reached. No federal indictment was requested;

3. On September 15, 1963, Denise McNair, Addie Mae Collins, Cynthia-Wesley and Carol Robertson, four Negro children, were killed in a church-bombing in Birmingham, Alabama. No state or federal court tried anyone for these murders;

4. On June 21, 1964, James Chaney, Michael Schwerner and Andrew Goodman, three civil rights workers, were killed by gunshot and/or beating in Philadelphia, Mississippi. Federal felony indictments were recently dismissed because of inapplicability of the statute. Federal misdemeanor indictments still stand. No state action has been taken;

5. On July 11, 1964, Lt. Col. Lemuel Penn, a Negro officer travelling under army orders on an interstate highway, was shot and killed near Colbert, Georgia. His accused killers were acquitted in a state trial and a federal indictment was dismissed because of inapplicability of the statute;

6. On February 19, 1965, James Lee Jackson, a Negro civil rights demonstrator, was killed in Marion, Alabama by a state trooper. Witnesses reported that the trooper was attacking Jackson's mother (also a demonstrator) with his nightstick and Jackson interfered. No state or federal action has been taken against the trooper;

7. On March 8, 1965, the Rev. James Reeb, having just arrived to aid the civil rights drive in Selma, Alabama, was beaten to death on a city street. Those allegedly responsible have been arrested by both state and federal authorities, but no federal indictment has yet been tested in court.

8. On March 25, 1965, Viola Gregg Liuzzo, wife of a Detroit, Michigan teamster, was shot to death while driving her car in rural Alabama after having taken a load of civil rights marchers from Montgomery to Selma.

In any case in which employees (covered by the provisions of this paragraph) of any employer are paid on a piecework basis, the actual wage paid such employees shall not be less than prescribed in the foregoing provisions of this paragraph. A BILL

To amend the Act of June 6, 1933, as amended, to authorize the Secretary of Labor to develop and maintain improved, voluntary methods of recruiting, training, transporting, and distributing agricultural workers, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Act of June 6, 1933, as as amended (48 Stat. 113; 29 U.S.C. 49 et seq.), is amended by inserting the heading "TITLE I" before the first section, and by adding at the end of such Act a new title as follows:

"TITLE II—VOLUNTARY FARM EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

"LEGISLATIVE FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SEC. 201. (a) The Congress finds that (1) an adequate supply of agricultural labor is essential to the Nation's health and welfare; (2) the insecurity and instability of agricultural employment has rendered such employment relatively unattractive; (3) in many cases agricultural workers have traveled unnecessarily long distances to obtain agricultural employment when such employment was available at relatively shorter distances; (4) shortages of agricultural labor in some areas have existed at the same time that surpluses of such labor existed in other areas; (5) the filling of such shortages with qualified, dependable agricultural workers would aid in reducing the serious rural unemployment and underemployment in this country; (6) the need for agricultural labor can be met and fuller employment for agricultural workers can be provided in many cases only through assisting such workers to travel, in many instances across State boundaries, to areas in which agricultural labor shortages exist; (7) steadily increasing mechanization has resulted in greater demand for skilled agricultural workers; and (8) the need for agricultural labor can be better met, agricultural employment can be made a more stable and attractive means of earning a living, and fuller employment can be promoted through improvements in the recruitment, training, transportation, and distribution of agricultural workers.

"(b) It is hereby declared that the policy of the Congress is to meet the Nation's needs for agricultural labor, to make agricultural employment a more stable and attractive means of earning a living, and to promote fuller employment. It is the purpose of this title to effectuate such policy by authorizing the Secretary to develop and maintain, through the voluntary cooperation and the voluntary participation of employers and workers, improved methods of recruiting, training, transporting, and distributing agricultural workers.

"SUPPLEMENTAL NATURE OF PROGRAM

"SEC. 202. The authority of the Secretary under this title shall be in addition to and not in place of any authority under title I of this Act.

"PRESERVATION OF INDIVIDUAL CHOICE

"SEC. 203. Nothing in this title shall be construed as denying (1) the right of any worker to accept or refuse agricultural employment with any employer, or his right to refuse to enter into an agreement to perform work of a nature he does not wish to perform, or (2) the right of any employer to refuse to offer agricultural employment to any worker, or the right to offer agricultural employment to any worker of his choice.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 204. As used in this title—

"(1) The term 'agricultural employment' means services and activities defined in section 3 (f) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or section 3121 (g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended.

"(2) The term 'employer' means any person for whom agricultural employment is performed, or association of such persons, but shall not include any employment or labor contracting agent.

"(3) The term 'worker' means any individual who is a permanent resident of the United States and engaged in or available for agricultural employment.

"(4) The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Labor or his duly authorized representative.

"(5) The term 'United States' means the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

"PROGRAM AUTHORIZED

"SEC. 205. (a) In order to effectuate the purposes of this title, the Secretary is authorized to—

"(1) recruit qualified, willing, and able workers to fill orders placed by employers for workers recruited under this title;

"(2) provide for the medical examination of such workers to assure that they are physically capable of performing agricultural employment and suffering from no communicable disease;

"(3) furnish such workers with transportation to and return from areas of agricultural employment;

"(4) furnish such workers with food, housing, and emergency medical care during such transportation and while arrangements are being made for the employment of such workers or their departure from an area of agricultural employment;

"(5) provide such facilities as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this title; and

"(6) establish a revolving fund sufficient to pay the cost of transportation, food, housing, and emergency medical care authorized under this title.

"(b) An order by an employer for agricultural workers recruited under this title shall include such information as the Secretary finds necessary to enable him to carry out the purposes of this title, including information with respect to the type of agricultural employment to be performed, the time and place at which such employment is to be performed, and any particular qualifications or experience that the employer desires the workers to possess.

"(c) No worker shall be made available under this title to an employer unless the Secretary has determined that—

"(1) sufficient qualified, willing, and able workers who reside permanently in the area where the agricultural employment is to be performed are not available for such employment; and

"(2) reasonable efforts have been made to attract such workers for such employment (including the offering of wages, hours, and working conditions comparable to those specified under section 207 for workers recruited under this title).

"EMPLOYEE AND EMPLOYER QUALIFICATIONS

"SEC. 206. (a) No worker shall be made available under this title to an employer unless—

"(1) the Secretary has determined that such worker is (A) qualified, willing, and able to perform the agricultural employment specified in the employer's order, and (B) physically fit to perform such employment and suffering from no communicable disease, as determined by a medical examination;

"(2) such worker has been interviewed by the employer (or an opportunity for an interview has been afforded) and has not been rejected by him;

"(3) such worker has agreed (A) to accept agricultural employment, specified as to type, time, and area; and (B) to enter into an agreement, as provided in section 207, with each employer with whom he accepts such employment; and

"(4) such worker has agreed that if, without good cause, he fails to comply with any agreement entered into by him pursuant to paragraph (3) of this subsection and such failure is a material violation of such agreement, such worker will reimburse the United States for expenses incurred by it in furnishing him transportation, food, housing, and emergency medical care under this title. The amount of the reimbursement in any such case shall be determined by the Secretary, taking into account the amount of employment performed by the worker pursuant to his agreement under paragraph (3) (A) of this subsection.

"(b) No worker recruited under this title shall be made available to an employer unless such employer has agreed that if he employs such worker he will—

"(1) pay the United States a fee, not to exceed $15 (without charging the worker therefor) to cover expenses incurred by the United States in furnishing tranportation, food, housing, and emergency medical care to workers recruited under this title;

"(2) furnish transportation (without charging the worker therefor) from a point designated by the Secretary in the area of employment to the point of such worker's employment and return;

"(3) enter into an agreement with the worker, or his representative, as provided in section 207; and

"(4) maintain such records relating to the earnings, deductions, and hours of employment of the worker, as the Secretary may by regulation require.

"EMPLOYMENT AGREEMENT

"SEC. 207. Any agreement between any employer and any worker, or such worker's representative, entered into pursuant to subsections (a) (3) (B) and (b) (3) of section 206, shall clearly specify—

"(1) the period of the employment, and a guarantee that the worker shall have the opportunity to work at least three-quarters of full time during the period of the employment (forty-eight hours per week to be considered full time); but in the event an agreement is terminated by an employer for reasons beyond his control, the three-quarters work guarantee shall apply only to the period beginning on the day after the worker's arrival at the place of employment and ending on the date the agreement is terminated;

"(2) the wage rate to be paid the worker, which shall be not less than the prevailing wage rate paid by employers to workers similarly employed in the area in which the work is to be performed;

"(3) the intervals at which wage payments will be made, which shall be no less frequent than those established for other workers similarly employed by the employer, and in no event less frequent than semi-monthly;

"(4) that any housing and sanitary facilities made available by the employer will conform to minimum standards prescribed by the Secretary;

"(5) that the employer will provide, at no cost to the worker, workmen's compensation insurance;

"(6) that the worker will perform all agricultural work required of him with proper application, care, and diligence during the period of employment agreed upon; that he will exercise reasonable care and diligence in the use of any housing and sanitary facilities made available to him by the employer; that he will comply with all rules and regulations specified in the agreement relating to safety, discipline, and the care and maintenance of property; and that he will not, except by mutual agreement, perform work for any other employer during the period of the agreement.

"REPLACEMENT WORKERS AND REIMBURSEMENT

"SEC. 208. In any case in which the Secretary determines that a worker has failed to carry out the terms of an agreement entered into by him pursuant to section 206 (a) (3) (B), and that such failure is a material violation of the agreement, the Secretary shall—

"(1) supply a replacement worker to the employer and furnish such worker transportation to the place of employment without charging an additional fee under section 206 (b) (1), or reduce the amount of the fee paid or to be paid with respect to the worker who violated the agreement by an amount that is directly proportional to the period of the agreement that such worker failed to complete; and

"(2) in any case in which a replacement worker is supplied, reimburse the employer in an amount equal to any amount expended for transportation under section 206 (b) (2) in excess of the amount such employer would have had to expend if no agreement violation had occurred, or, in any case in which a replacement worker is not supplied, reimburse such employer for transportation expenses incurred under such section with respect to the worker who violated his agreement, taking into account the portion of the period of employment provided for in the agreement not completed by the worker.

"COMPLIANCE

"SEC. 209. (a) The Secretary may refuse to make the services afforded under this title available to any employer or worker upon a determination, made after notice and an opportunity to be heard, that such employer or worker has failed, without good cause, to comply with (1) any provision of this title, any rule or regulation implementing this title, or any agreement with the Secretary entered into pursuant to this title, if such failure is of such a nature as substantially to impair the effective administration of this title, or (2) any agreement entered into pursuant to section 206(a)(3)(B) or section 206(b)(3), if such failure is a material violation of such agreement.

"(b) The services afforded under this title may be furnished to an employer or worker who has previously been refused such services pursuant to subsection (a) if such employer or worker demonstrates, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary, that he will in the future comply with the requirements of this title.

"GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 210. (a) The Secretary shall provide for the establishment and maintenance of a system of recording, utilizing, and making available to employers information concerning the willingness, ability, and specific qualifications of individual workers to perform agricultural employment.

"(b) The Secretary may provide, and may require reimbursement from the worker for the expenses of, transportation, food, housing, and emergency medical care to the members of such worker's family if he determines that the furnishing of such services is a practicable and desirable means of carrying out the purposes of this title.

"(c) Private employment agencies and labor contracting agents may be permitted, to the extent authorized under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, to participate under this title in the recruitment and placement of workers.

"(d) The Secretary is authorized to enter into such agreements with State and local agencies as he deems proper for carrying out the purposes of this title, and may utilize the services of any other department or agency of the Federal Government for such purposes on a reimbursable basis.

A BILL

That this Act may be cited as the "Agricultural Labor Reform Act of 1965".

TITLE I—MINIMUM WAGES

SEC. 101. Section 3 (e) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 is amended to read as follows:

"(e) 'Employee' includes any individual employed by an employer, except that such term shall not, for the purposes of section 6(a)(4), include any individual employed by an employer engaged in agriculture if such individual is (1) a member of the employer's immediate family, or (2) a sharecropper, or a member of the sharecropper's immediate family, working on or in connection with the sharecropper's tract of land."

SEC. 102. Section 3 of such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(u) 'Hired farm labor' means the labor of any employee employed in agriculture;

"(v) 'Sharecropper' means any individual who works in whole or in part a particular tract of land from planting through harvesting under general supervision and is entitled to receive as the primary return for his labor on the tract a share of the crop or crops produced thereon or of the proceeds realized therefrom."

SEC. 103. Subsection (a) of section 6 of such Act is amended by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (3), inserting a semicolon, and by adding the following new paragraph:

"(4) if such employee performs hired farm labor for an employer who during any one of the four preceding calendar quarters used more than three hundred man-days of hired farm labor, such employee shall be paid by his employer (i) not less than $1.15 an hour during the first year following the effective date of this paragraph, (ii) not less than $1.20 an hour during the second year following such effective date, (iii) not less than $1.25 an hour during the third year following such effective date, and (iv) thereafter, not less than the rate prescribed in paragraph (1) of this subsection. If such employee performs hired farm labor for such an employer on a daily, weekly, monthly, or annual basis, such employee shall be paid at a rate which will, for the period covered by the wage payment, provide him wages at least equal to compensation he would have been entitled to receive had he been employed at the minimum hourly rate prescribed in this paragraph. In any case in which employees (covered by the provisions of this paragraph) of any employer are paid on a piecework basis, the actual wage paid such employees shall not be less than prescribed in the foregoing provisions of this paragraph. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this Act, this paragraph shall apply only with respect to an employee whose services during the workweek are performed within a State of the United States or the District of Columbia."

"(B) is 14 years of age or over, or

"(C) is 12 years of age or over and is employed on a farm to which he commutes daily within twenty-five miles of his permanent residence, and (i) such employment is with the written consent of his parent or person standing in place of his parent, or (ii) his parent or person standing in place of his parent is also employed on the same farm.

"(2) No employee below the age of 18 may be employed in agriculture in an occupation that the Secretary of Labor finds and declares to be particularly hazardous for the employment of children below age 18, except where such employee is employed by his parent or by a person standing in the place of his parent on a farm owned or operated by such parent or person.

area: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall set aside the final proviso to section 8(a)(3) of this Act: Provided further, That any agreement which would be invalid, but for clause (1) of this subsection, shall not be a bar to a petition filed pursuant to section 9(c) or 9(e)."

SEC. 303. Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, the amendments made by this title shall take effect on the first day of the sixth month following the month in which this Act is enacted.

"TITLE II—VOLUNTARY FARM EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

"LEGISLATIVE FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SEC. 201. (a) The Congress finds that (1) an adequate supply of agricultural labor is essential to the Nation's health and welfare; (2) the insecurity and instability of agricultural employment has rendered such employment relatively unattractive; (3) in many cases agricultural workers have traveled unnecessarily long distances to obtain agricultural employment when such employment was available at relatively shorter distances; (4) shortages of agricultural labor in some areas have existed at the same time that surpluses of such labor existed in other areas; (5) the filling of such shortages with qualified, dependable agricultural workers would aid in reducing the serious rural unemployment and underemployment in this country; (6) the need for agricultural labor can be met and fuller employment for agricultural workers can be provided in many cases only through assisting such workers to travel, in many instances across State boundaries, to areas in which agricultural labor shortages exist; (7) steadily increasing mechanization has resulted in greater demand for skilled agricultural workers; and (8) the need for agricultural labor can be better met, agricultural employment can be made a more stable and attractive means of earning a living, and fuller employment can be promoted through improvements in the recruitment, training, transportation, and distribution of agricultural workers.

"(b) It is hereby declared that the policy of the Congress is to meet the Nation's needs for agricultural labor, to make agricultural employment a more stable and attractive means of earning a living, and to promote fuller employment. It is the purpose of this title to effectuate such policy by authorizing the Secretary to develop and maintain, through the voluntary cooperation and the voluntary participation of employers and workers, improved methods of recruiting, training, transporting, and distributing agricultural workers.

"SUPPLEMENTAL NATURE OF PROGRAM

"SEC. 202. The authority of the Secretary under this title shall be in addition to and not in place of any authority under title I of this Act.

"PRESERVATION OF INDIVIDUAL CHOICE

"SEC. 203. Nothing in this title shall be construed as denying (1) the right of any worker to accept or refuse agricultural employment with any employer, or his right to refuse to enter into an agreement to perform work of a nature he does not wish to perform, or (2) the right of any employer to refuse to offer agricultural employment to any worker, or the right to offer agricultural employment to any worker of his choice.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 204. As used in this title—

"(1) The term 'agricultural employment' means services and activities defined in section 3(f) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or section 3121(g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended.

"(2) The term 'employer' means any person for whom agricultural employment is performed, or association of such persons, but shall not include any employment or labor contracting agent.

"(3) The term 'worker' means any individual who is a permanent resident of the United States and engaged in or available for agricultural employment.

"(4) The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Labor or his duly authorized representative.

"(5) The term 'United States' means the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

"PROGRAM AUTHORIZED

"SEC. 205. (a) In order to effectuate the purposes of this title, the Secretary is authorized to—

"(1) recruit qualified, willing, and able workers to fill orders placed by employers for workers recruited under this title;

"(2) provide for the medical examination of such workers to assure that they are physically capable of performing agricultural employment and suffering from no communicable disease;

"(3) furnish such workers with transportation to and return from areas of agricultural employment;

"(4) furnish such workers with food, housing, and emergency medical care during such transportation and while arrangements are being made for the employment of such workers or their departure from an area of agricultural employment;

"(5) provide such facilities as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this title; and

"(6) establish a revolving fund sufficient to pay the cost of transportation, food, housing, and emergency medical care authorized under this title.

"(b) An order by an employer for agricultural workers recruited under this title shall include such information as the Secretary finds necessary to enable him to carry out the purposes of this title, including information with respect to the type of agricultural employment to be performed, the time and place at which such employment is to be performed, and any particular qualifications or experience that the employer desires the workers to possess.

"(c) No worker shall be made available under this title to an employer unless the Secretary has determined that—

"(1) sufficient qualified, willing, and able workers who reside permanently in the area where the agricultural employment is to be performed are not available for such employment; and

"(2) reasonable efforts have been made to attract such workers for such employment (including the offering of wages, hours, and working conditions comparable to those specified under section 207 for workers recruited under this title).

"EMPLOYEE AND EMPLOYER QUALIFICATIONS

"SEC. 206. (a) No worker shall be made available under this title to an employer unless—

"(1) the Secretary has determined that such worker is (A) qualified, willing, and able to perform the agricultural employment specified in the employer's order, and (B) physically fit to perform such employment and suffering from no communicable disease, as determined by a medical examination;

"(2) such worker has been interviewed by the employer (or an opportunity for an interview has been afforded) and has not been rejected by him;

"(3) such worker has agreed (A) to accept agricultural employment, specified as to type, time, and area; and (B) to enter into an agreement, as provided in section 207, with each employer with whom he accepts such employment; and

"(4) such worker has agreed that if, without good cause, he fails to comply with any agreement entered into by him pursuant to paragraph (3) of this subsection and such failure is a material violation of such agreement, such worker will reimburse the United States for expenses incurred by it in furnishing him transportation, food, housing, and emergency medical care under this title. The amount of the reimbursement in any such case shall be determined by the Secretary, taking into account the amount of employment performed by the worker pursuant to his agreement under paragraph (3) (A) of this subsection.

"(b) No worker recruited under this title shall be made available to an employer unless such employer has agreed that if he employs such worker he will—

"(1) pay the United States a fee, not to exceed $15 (without charging the worker therefor) to cover expenses incurred by the United States in furnishing transportation, food, housing, and emergency medical care to workers recruited under this title;

"(2) furnish transportation (without charging the worker therefor) from a point designated by the Secretary in the area of employment to the point of such worker's employment and return;

"(3) enter into an agreement with the worker, or his representative, as provided in section 207; and

"(4) maintain such records relating to the earnings, deductions, and hours of employment of the worker, as the Secretary may by regulation require.

"EMPLOYMENT AGREEMENT

"SEC. 207. Any agreement between any employer and any worker, or such worker's representative, entered into pursuant to subsections (a) (3) (B) and (b) (3) of section 206, shall clearly specify—

"(1) the period of the employment, and a guarantee that the worker shall have the opportunity to work at least three-quarters of full time during the period of the employment (forty-eight hours per week to be considered full time); but in the event an agreement is terminated by an employer for reasons beyond his control, the three-quarters work guarantee shall apply only to the period beginning on the day after the worker's arrival at the place of employment and ending on the date the agreement is terminated;

"(2) the wage rate to be paid the worker, which shall be not less than the prevailing wage rate paid by employers to workers similarly employed in the area in which the work is to be performed;

"(3) the intervals at which wage payments will be made, which shall be no less frequent than those established for other workers similarly employed by the employer, and in no event less frequent than semi-monthly;

"(4) that any housing and sanitary facilities made available by the employer will conform to minimum standards prescribed by the Secretary;

"(5) that the employer will provide, at no cost to the worker, workmen's compensation insurance;

"(6) that the worker will perform all agricultural work required of him with proper application, care, and diligence during the period of employment agreed upon; that he will exercise reasonable care and diligence in the use of any housing and sanitary facilities made available to him by the employer; that he will comply with all rules and regulations specified in the agreement relating to safety, discipline, and the care and maintenance of property; and that he will not, except by mutual agreement, perform work for any other employer during the period of the agreement.

"REPLACEMENT WORKERS AND REIMBURSEMENT

"SEC. 208. In any case in which the Secretary determines that a worker has failed to carry out the terms of an agreement entered into by him pursuant to section 206(a)(3)(B), and that such failure is a material violation of the agreement, the Secretary shall—

"(1) supply a replacement worker to the employer and furnish such worker transportation to the place of employment without charging an additional fee under section 206(b)(1), or reduce the amount of the fee paid or to be paid with respect to the worker who violated the agreement by an amount that is directly proportional to the period of the agreement that such worker failed to complete; and

"(2) in any case in which a replacement worker is supplied, reimburse the employer in an amount equal to any amount expended for transportation under section 206(b)(2) in excess of the amount such employer would have had to expend if no agreement violation had occurred, or, in any case in which a replacement worker is not supplied, reimburse such employer for transportation expenses incurred under such section with respect to the worker who violated his agreement, taking into account the portion of the period of employment provided for in the agreement not completed by the worker.

"COMPLIANCE

"SEC. 209. (a) The Secretary may refuse to make the services afforded under this title available to any employer or worker upon a determination, made after notice and an opportunity to be heard, that such employer or worker has failed, without good cause, to comply with (1) any provision of this title, any rule or regulation implementing this title, or any agreement with the Secretary entered into pursuant to this title, if such failure is of such a nature as substantially to impair the effective administration of this title, or (2) any agreement entered into pursuant to section 206(a)(3)(B) or section 206(b)(3), if such failure is a material violation of such agreement.

"(b) The services afforded under this title may be furnished to an employer or worker who has previously been refused such services pursuant to subsection (a) if such employer or worker demonstrates, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary, that he will in the future comply with the requirements of this title.

"GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 210. (a) The Secretary shall provide for the establishment and maintenance of a system of recording, utilizing, and making available to employers information concerning the willingness, ability, and specific qualifications of individual workers to perform agricultural employment.

"(b) The Secretary may provide, and may require reimbursement from the worker for the expenses of, transportation, food, housing, and emergency medical care to the members of such worker's family if he determines that the furnishing of such services is a practicable and desirable means of carrying out the purposes of this title.

"(c) Private employment agencies and labor contracting agents may be permitted, to the extent authorized under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, to participate under this title in the recruitment and placement of workers.

"(d) The Secretary is authorized to enter into such agreements with State and local agencies as he deems proper for carrying out the purposes of this title, and may utilize the services of any other department or agency of the Federal Government for such purposes on a reimbursable basis.

"(e) Any money received by the Secretary pursuant to section 206(a)(4), section 206(b)(1), or subsection (b) of this section shall be credited to the revolving fund established pursuant to section 205(a)(6) of this title.

"(f) The Secretary is authorized to promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

"JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 211. Any person aggrieved by any order or determination of the Secretary made under this title may obtain judicial review of such order or determination by filing in the United States district court for the district in which such person resides or has his principal place of business, or in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, within sixty days from the date such order or determination was made, a written petition praying that the order or determination of the Secretary be modified or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the Secretary and thereupon the Secretary shall file in the court a transcript of the record upon which such order or determination was made. Thereupon the court shall have jurisdiction of the record and shall have power to affirm, set aside, modify, or enforce the order or determination of the Secretary, in whole or in part. The findings of the Secretary as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. Service of process in such action shall be made in accordance with the rule for service of process upon the United States prescribed by the Rules of Civil Procedure for the United States District Courts.

"SPECIAL STUDIES AND PROJECTS

"SEC. 212. In carrying out the provisions of this title the Secretary is authorized to undertake such special studies and conduct such experimental, pilot, and demonstration projects as he determines have promise of leading to fuller utilization of underemployed rural Americans and to meeting the labor requirements of employers. Such studies and projects may include, but shall not be limited to, special job training, counseling, resettlement, overnight transient camps, community exchange services, and special placement services. The Secretary is authorized to expend an amount not to exceed $200,000 per annum for the purpose of carrying out such studies and projects.

In carrying out such duty, the Council shall consider, among others, the following matters:

TO: Board of Directors

FROM: The Office

RE: Immigration

David Carliner has asked that the June 21 Board meeting consider the question of the Union's position on the immigration bill now before the Congress, particularly the question of whether we should endorse immediate abolition of the national origins quota system or abolition over a five year period.

The background is presented in the attached correspondence from Mr. Carliner and Ed Ennis.

Dear Jack:

Dave Carliner telephoned recommending you write Chairman Celler expressing our approval of the provisions of H.R. 8662, introduced by Congressman Feighan, which would eliminate the national origins quota system immediately instead of 20% a year under the Celler bill heretofore supported by the Administration and disclaiming any position on other provisions of the new bill which do not involve civil liberties questions.

I agree with Dave that immediate elimination of the National origins system is better than an elimination over a five year period but I have some hesitation about firing this shot immediately at Celler who is feuding with Feighan and wants his name on any immigration bill which is passed and with whom we want to keep good relations on other civil rights matters. The immigration agencies are disturbed that with the President behind the Celler bill and good hopes for passage this session Feighan at this late date has introduced a different bill to accomplish much the same purpose and will divide the forces pressing for immigration reform. Personally I would like to hold off a bit until the smoke clears in expressing our view which has not yet been invited, but Dave is right in stating that in principle a national origins feature alone in the Feighan bill is better and there is no reason we should not say so. I don't see why we have to say so immediately.

Sincerely,

Dear Jack:

As you possibly know, I appeared again for the ACLU before the House Immigration Subcommittee. My testimony was substantially the same as before the Senate Subcommittee except that I used the occasion to oppose the imposition of any new quotas upon immigration from Western Hemisphere countries.

I am writing you now because Congressman Feighan has given a number of speeches recently in which he advocates the immediate elimination of the national origins quota system. This is to be distinguished from the Administration's bill which phases the program out over a period of 5 years. In my testimony I endorsed Feighan's position.

However, he has a number of provisions in his proposal to which the Administration would probably be opposed. These relate to an overall ceiling on admissions and the distribution of priorities within the ceiling based upon relationship or occupation.

I believe there will be meetings in Washington among the organizations concerned with immigration within the next week. Legislation is being drafted now and a bill will probably be introduced by Feighan during the coming week.

As you realize, we have been playing this somewhat by ear. I would feel much more comfortable if the Board or some constituted authority within the ACLU would determine what our position should be.

I am sending a copy of this letter to Ed so that you and he can review it. I have only one copy of Feighan's speech and because Ed is primarily concerned I am sending it to him.

Best regards,

Sincerely,

/s/

David Carliner

The Hon. James H. Scheuer
House of Representatives
Washington, D.C.

Dear Jim:

I have read with much interest and enaitement your Bill to provide for the establishment of a Museum of Negro History and Culture. The Museum is a splendid idea and could do much to stimulate respect for the Negro and self-respect in the Negro. Our public schools, unfortunately, do not perform this service with any kind of adequacy. I find your prpposal most worthwhile. It could prove enormously helpful toward all of our efforts to achieve equality.

There will be those who will charge that such a plan, singling out the Negro's contribution to our culture and history, would be a racist or separationist. I would reject such a charge outright.

The Museum that you propose is thoroughly in line with the most advanced thinking in the civil rights movement today. The only meaningful integration will come when the Negro can come into an open society as a proud and equal partner, respecting himself and respected by others. The Museum will further that objective.

VerySsincerely yours,

James Farmer

Dear Jim:

Knowledge of the Negro's contribution to our culture and history is a necessary concomitant to the achievement of full equality for the Negro. The majority of Americans, both white and Negro, are unaware of this.

I have, therefore, introduced in the House of Representatives, H.R. 10638, which would lay the groundwork for the establishment of a Museum of Negro History and Culture. This Museum could conduct a program of public education which would include permanent and changing exhibitions of art and artifacts, literature; the sponsoring of lectures, forums and film programs dealing with the contribution of the Negro to history and culture; library facilities; and the preparation of printed historical materials for use by schools and universities, civic groups, churches, government agencies, etc.

I would greatly appreciate your comments on this proposal.

Sincerely,

Jim

November 1965

Dear Friend:

At this time we can render an invaluable service to our brave young generation by helping put an end to the McCarran Internal Security Act.

This law hangs as an active threat and scourge against those who undertake meaningful steps to influence government policies - at home and abroad.

Under the provisions of the McCarran Act, opposition to Administration policy is equated with subversion; the democratic rights of free thinking individuals and peace, civil rights and student organizations may be arbitrarily curtailed; and minority groups face harassment and cruel punishment.

Constitutional liberties are the muscles and sinews of a democracy. If we do not use them, they shrivel and die; if we do, they become purposeful and strong.

We urge that you exercise your right of petition, and participate in this national campaign to send a "Message to The President". This is based upon an advertisement signed by over 300 prominent citizens, which appeared in the Washington Post on March 10, 1965. (See Petition.)

Please try to fill at least one petition among your family, friends and members of organizations. Return them as quickly as possible to the Citizens Committee for Constitutional Liberties, so that the signatures may all be presented together to the President.

Sincerely,

Willard Uphaus.

Dr. Willard Uphaus,
Chairman

P.S. Whatever you can give is needed to build a more powerful campaign for Constitutional Liberties.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT:

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED, ARE IN AGREEMENT WITH THE MESSAGE HEREIN.

WE URGE THAT YOU ESTABLISH, AS SOON AS POSSIBLE, A PRESIDENTIAL COMMISSION TO RE-ASSESS THE MCCARRAN INTERNAL SECURITY ACT.

WE ASK THAT ALL PROSECUTIONS UNDER THIS LAW BE SUSPENDED, AT THIS TIME, PENDING RECOMMENDATIONS OF SUCH A COMMISSION.

NAME	ADDRESS

In order to present all of the petitions at one time to the President, please return them as soon as possible to:

TO THE PRESIDENT AND
CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES

The 1964 Election was a clear order to create institutions and laws for public order that are appropriate to social fact.

But the freedom to meet the problems which confront us cannot be secure if the democratic process is jeopardized by repressive legislation that discourages and threatens to throttle free discussion.

The McCarran Act (Internal Security Act of 1950) is still on the statute books. This Act...

Was vetoed by President Truman as "unnecessary"...putting "the United States Government into the thought control business". It was passed over his veto.

Contains provisions that have been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

Is a powerful resource for right-wing groups, and whenever so used arouses fear and general suspicion of dissenting thought and speech.

Makes it always possible to place the stigma of heresy on precisely that dynamism and creativity of mind which alone can envision, and enable, and sustain a Great Society.

Has been condemned by many individuals and groups in our society concerned with the integrity of the democratic process.

The signers of this announcement, in profound concern, and with confidence in freedom's ability to see and do what the moment requires, call upon our Executive and Legislative representatives to reassess an Act which, born in panic and productive of fear, adds nothing to our security and diminishes the honor of a democracy.

2. THE COMMISSION SHALL HAVE THE FOLLOWING FUNCTIONS, POWERS, AND DUTIES:

(b) To establish its principal office and such other offices as it may deem necessary, and to travel, meet and function anywhere within the jurisdictional limits of the United States.

(c) To appoint such attorneys, expert counsel, agents and employees as it may deem necessary, fix their compensation within the limitations provided by law, and prescribe their duties.

(d) To obtain, upon request, and utilize, the services of any or all city commissions, councils, boards, departments, officers and agencies.

(i) To confer immunity within the limitations and in the manner prescribed under section (5) subsection (k) herein.

(j) To issue such publications and such results of investigations and research as in its judgment will tend to promote good-will and minimize discrimination because of age, sex, race, creed, color or national origin.

(k) To submit each year to the mayor and to the City Council a full written report of all its activities and of its recommendations.

(l) To create such advisory agencies and conciliatory councils as in its judgment will aid in effectuating the purposes of this Article; and the Commission may empower them to study the problems of discrimination in all or specific fields of human relations, to foster voluntary cooperation and conciliation among the groups and individuals of this city, and make recommendations to the Commission in instances general or specific. Such advisory agencies and conciliation councils shall be composed of representative residents of this city, serving without pay but with reimbursements for actual and necessary travel expenses, who have been approved by the Biracial Committee; and the Commission may make provision for legal, technical and clerical assistance to such agencies and councils.

(m) To carry into effect the recommendations of the Biracial Committee insofar as the Commission shall find consistent with the purposes of this Article and its functions, powers and duties under the same.

Sec. 4: Unlawful Discriminatory Practices

1. It shall be an unlawful discriminatory practice:

(a) For an employer, because of the age, sex, race, creed, color or national origin of any individual, to refuse employment or to discharge from employment such individual, or to discriminate against such individual in compensation or in terms, conditions or privileges of employment.

(b) For a labor organization, because of the age, sex, race, creed, color or national origin of any individual, to exclude or to expel from its membership such individual or to discriminate against a member, or against an employer, or against an individual employed by an employer, in terms of conditions or privileges of membership or other benefits furnished by such organization.

(c) For an employer, labor organization or employment agency to discharge, expel, or otherwise discriminate against any person because he has opposed any practice prohibited under this Article or because he has filed a complaint, testified, or assisted in any proceeding under this Article.

(d) For any employer, labor organization, or employment agency, to print or circulate, or cause to be printed or circulated, any statement, advertisement, or publication, or to use any form of application for employment, or to make any inquiry in connection with prospective employment, which expresses, directly or indirectly, any limitation, specification, or discrimination as to age, sex, race, creed, color, or national origin, or any intent to make any such limitation, specification, or discrimination, unless based upon a bona fide occupational qualification, as determined by said employer, labor organization, or employment agency, with the approval of the Commission. Subject to the particular facts in every specific case, the race, creed, age, sex, color, or national origin of an employee or applicant for employment shall not be deemed a bona fide occupational qualification, unless the Commission finds that these attributes are material to job performance; and the intent of said employer, labor organization, or employment agency, to challenge the provisions of this Article, or the lack of such intent, shall not prejudice the power of the Commission to act under this Article. Prohibited pre-employment inquiries shall include, but not be limited to, the following:

(1) Any question as to any applicant's age, sex, race, creed, color, or national origin, unless based on bona fide occupational qualifications, as determined by the inquiring employer, labor organization, or employment agency, with the approval of the Commission.

(2) Any question which does not inquire directly into an applicant's age, race, creed, color or national origin, but calls for an answer which will probably disclose one of these attributes, whether or not with premeditated intent to elicit the same.

(3) The attachment of a photograph of any applicant or applicant's face on a pre-employment inquiry form.

(4) Original name of any applicant, whose name has been changed by court order or otherwise.

(5) Birthplace of any applicant, applicant's spouse, parents, or other relatives, or the requirement to submit any birth certificate, naturalization, or baptismal record, or any proof of age other than in the form of a work permit issued by school authorities.

(6) Coloring or complexion of any applicant, color of skin, or texture of hair.

(7) Inquiry as to any foreign country of which any applicant may be a native, subject, or citizen, inquiry whether the applicant is or has ever been a naturalized or native-born citizen of the United States or of any other country, inquiry of the date, place, or method, where or according to which any applicant may have acquired any citizenship, or any requirement that any applicant produce any passport or naturalization papers. Prohibited inquiry under this section shall extend to include similar inquiry as to applicant's family or any member thereof.

(8) Inquiry into any applicant's lineage, ancestry, national origin, descent, parentage, nationality, mother tongue, or the method whereinby any applicant may have acquired ability to read, write, or speak any language. Prohibited inquiry under this section shall extend to include similar inquiry as to applicant's family or any member thereof.

(9) Name of any relative other than person to be notified in case of emergency.

(10) Foreign address of any relative of applicant other than person to be notified in case of emergency.

(11) Inquiry into any applicant's military service in foreign armed forces.

(12) Inquiry into identities, names or addresses of any clubs, societies, churches, lodges, boards, committees, councils, unions, conferences, congresses, commissions, organizations, or movements of which any applicant is or has ever been an officer or a member, or intends or has ever intended to join, excepting those being material to performance on the job for which such applicant is applying.

(13) Inquiry into any applicant's voting record, or his assistance to, membership in, or attendance at any political meeting, rally, organization, party, or group.

(14) Inquiry into any applicant's religious denomination or affiliation, church, temple, synagogue, parish, pastor, priest, minister, rabbi, Sunday School, Parochial School or religious holidays observed; for the purposes of this Article, prohibited inquiry shall extend to the practice of informing any applicant that employment is restricted to any particular creed, age, race, sex, color, or national origin, or that employment is excluded from any of them, except as based on bona fide occupational qualifications, as determined under this section.

(15) Inquiry into any applicant's general or specific beliefs on racial, religious, political, social, or any other issues not material to job performance.

(16) Inquiry into any applicant's length of residence in any country, or any political subdivision thereof, unless material to performance on the job for which such applicant is applying.

(17) Any inquiry which the Commission may find unlawful, pursuant to its powers under this Article, but nothing herein shall preclude exemptions under section (4) subsection (2) of this Article.

(e) For any person, being the owner, lessee, proprietor, manager, superintendent, sub-lessee, agent, or employee of any place of public accommodations, because of the age, race, sex, creed, color, or national origin of any person, directly or indirectly to refuse, withhold from, or deny to such person any of the accommodations, advantages, facilities or privileges thereof, or, directly or indirectly, to publish, circulate, issue, display, post, broadcast, telephone, teletype, telegraph, deliver, send, mail or otherwise proclaim any notice, communication, or advertisement, written, printed or oral, or to cause such notice, communication, or advertisement to be so published, circulated, issued, displayed, posted, printed, broadcast, telephoned, teletyped, telegraphed, delivered, sent, mailed, or otherwise proclaimed, to the effect that any of the accommodations, advantages, facilities, or privileges of any such place shall be refused, withheld from, or denied to any person because of age, sex, race, color, creed, or national origin, or that the patronage, custom, use, or enjoyment of any of the accommodations, advantages, facilities, or privileges thereat of any person purporting to be of any particular age, sex, creed, race, color, or national origin is unwelcome, objectionable, not acceptable, not desired, not solicited, or that it is welcome, acceptable, desired, or solicited exclusively, or that, because of age, race, sex, creed, color, or national origin, the patronage, custom, use, or enjoyment of any of the accommodations, advantages, or privileges thereat is more welcome, less objectionable, preferred, more acceptable, more desired, or more solicited with respect to any particular group of persons of any given race, color, sex, age, creed, or national origin, in contradistinction to another. But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent such refusal, withholding, or denial of the foregoing accommodations, advantages, or privileges to minors in pursuance to law or established public policy, nor otherwise in the interest of national security or public safety pursuant to law, nor to prevent any religious or denominational institution or organization not operated for private profit, or any educational or charitable subsidiary operating under the same, from limiting admission to or giving preference to persons of the same religion or denomination, nor to prevent segregation by sex and age in such facilities as lavatories or playgrounds, respectively, nor to preclude exemptions from the provisions of this section in cases of bona fide business qualifications approved by the Commission under section (4) subsection (3) of this Article.

(f) For any person, being the owner, lessee, proprietor, manager, superintendent, agent, or employee of any place of public accommodations, or any person commissioned or employed to sell, lease, sublease, or finance the same, to discriminate against any person because he has opposed any practice forbidden under this Article, or assisted in any proceeding under this Article or, because of his race, color, age, sex, creed or national origin, in the terms, conditions, loans, financial assistance, furnishings of accommodations, advantages, facilities or privileges connected therewith, or to make any record of inquiry in connection with any prospective purchase, loan, financial assistance, use, consumption, rent, lease or exchange of such public accommodations, or place of public accommodations, which expresses, directly or indirectly, any such limitation, specification or discrimination, or any intent to make the same. Prohibited inquiries under this section shall include the categories specified under section (4) subsection (1) paragraph (d) of this Article, but not be limited thereto, subject to bona fide business qualifications.

(g) For any person to aid, abet, incite, compel, or coerce the doing of any of the acts prohibited under this Article, or to conspire or attempt to do so.

(h) Nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the termination of employment, or refusal of employment to, any person found physically, emotionally, mentally, or educationally unable to perform his duties, or to affect the retirement policy or system of any employer where such policy or system is not merely a subterfuge to evade the purposes of this section; nor shall anything in this section be deemed to preclude the varying of insurance coverage and terms according to a person's sex and age, nor shall anything in this section preclude inquiry into the minority or majority status of any applicant for employment or public accommodations.

2. Any employer, labor organization, or employment agency, wishing to make a pre-employment or other inquiry which the Commission has ruled unlawful, or which is prohibited by this Article, may apply to the Commission for a ruling that, in the particular circumstances, the inquiry relates to a bona fide occupational qualification and is therefore lawful. Such application may include, but not be limited to, request for exemption from the prohibition of inquiry as to foreign citizenship or political belief and affiliation for reasons connected with national security, as may be the case where the work involves certain government contracts.

3. Any person desiring an exemption from any provision under section (4) subsection (1) paragraph (e) or (f) of this Article on grounds of bona fide business qualifications may apply to the Commission for a ruling that, in the particular circumstances, the exemption relates to a bona fide business qualification and is therefore lawful.

Sec. 5: Procedure

(a) Any person or organization claiming to be aggrieved, whether personally or otherwise, by any unlawful discriminatory practice may, by himself, or by his legal guardian, or by his legal representative, make, sign and file with the Commission a verified complaint in writing, which shall state the name, address, or other identification of the party alleged to have committeed the unlawful discriminatory practice complained of, and which shall set forth the particulars thereof and contain such other information as may be required by the Commission. The City Attorney may, in like manner, make, sign and file such complaint. Any employer, labor organization, employee, employment agency, or any owner, lessee, proprietor, manager, superintendent, agent, employee, patron, or prospective patron of any place of public accommodations whose employees, patrons, co-workers, owners, lessees, proprietors, managers, superintendents, or agents, or some of them,or any of them, refuse, or threaten to refuse, to comply with the provisions of this Article, may file with the Commission an anonymous or verified complaint asking for assistance, investigation, or other remedial action.

(b) After the filing of any complaint, the Chairman of the Commission shall forthwith designate one of the Commissioners to make, with the assistance of the Commission's staff, prompt investigation in connection therewith; and if such Commissioner shall determine, after such investigation, that probable cause exists for crediting the allegations of such complaint, he shall immediately endeavor to eliminate the unlawful discriminatory practice complained of by conference, mediation, negotiation, conciliation, or other informal settlement which the parties involved may agree thereto. No member of the Commission, or any of its staff, shall ever disclose the proceedings, methods or results of such investigation, except insofar as the Commissioner may deem necessary during the course of the ensuing conference, mediation, negotiation, conciliation, or informal settlement; nor shall any member of the Commission, or any of its staff, disclose the proceedings of such conference, mediation, negotiation, conciliation, or informal settlement, which shall take place in private and remain secret; but the provisions of this section shall not prevent disclosure if all the parties involved shall agree thereto.

(c) In case of failure to eliminate any verified unlawful discriminatory practice by conference, mediation, negotiation, conciliation, or informal settlement, as determined by the Commissioner designated, he shall forthwith cause to be issued and served, in the name of the Commision, a citation, together with a copy of such complaint, as the same may have been amended, summoning any party alleged in the complaint as having committed any unlawful discriminatory practice, hereinafter referred to as defendant, to answer the charges of such complaint at a hearing before three members of the Commission, sitting as the Commission, at a time and place to be specified in the citation. The case in support of the complaint shall be presented before the Commission by a member of its staff, but the Commissioner who shall have previously made the investigation and caused the citation to be issued shall not participate in the hearing except as a witness, nor shall he participate in the deliberations of the Commission in such case; and the aforesaid endeavors at conference, mediation, negotiation, conciliation or informal settlement shall not be received in evidence. The defendant may file a written answer to the complaint and shall appear at such hearing, with or without counsel. The defendant shall have the right to submit testimony and to subpoena and examine witnesses. In the discretion of the Commission, the person or organization filing the original complaint, hereinafter referred to as complainant, may intervene in the hearing and present testimony in person or by counsel. The Commission and the complainant shall have the power, reasonably and fairly, to amend any complaint, and the defendant shall have like power to amend his answer. The testimony taken at the hearing shall be under oath and be transcribed, but the Commission shall not be bound by strict rules of evidence, nor shall this Article be construed to prevent the Commission from deciding any case ex aequo et bono if the parties thereto agree to it.

(d) If, for some special reason, a Commissioner considers that he should not take part in the decision of a particular case, he shall so inform the Chairman. If the Chairman considers that, for some special reason, any particular Commissioner shall not sit in a particular case, he shall give him notice accordingly. If in any such case the Chairman and the Commissioner disagree, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Commission. In the event of a dispute as to whether the Commission has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Commission.

(e) The Commission shall establish its own rules of practice to govern, expedite, and effectuate the procedure herein and its own actions thereunder. In particular, the Commission shall adopt rules for the conduct of hearings, the form and time in which each party must conclude its arguments and make all arrangements connected with the taking of evidence. The Commission may call upon any party to voluntarily produce any document or to supply any explanation; formal note shall be taken of any refusal.

(f) Should any defendant fail to appear, or fail to answer a charge, not only will he be liable to a penalty as prescribed under section (6) of this Article but, in addition, any other party may call upon the Commission to find and decide in favor of its claim; but the Commission must, before doing so, satisfy itself that the claim is well founded in fact and in law.

(g) The hearing before the Commission shall be public, unless the Commission shall decide otherwise, or unless both parties move that the public be not admitted. When, subject to the rules of the Commission, all parties to the hearing have completed the presentation of their case, the Commission shall declare the hearing closed and shall forthwith withdraw to consider the findings.

(h) The deliberations of the Commission shall take place in private and remain secret. All questions shall be decided by majority vote of the Commissioners sitting in the hearing. If, upon the evidence, the Commission shall find that a defendant has engaged in any unlawful discriminatory practice prohibited under this Article, the Commission shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on such defendant an Order requiring such defendant to cease and desist from such unlawful discriminatory practice and to take such affirmative action, including, but not limited to, hiring, reinstatement, or promotion of employees, with or without back pay, restoration of membership in any defendant organization, or the extension of full, equal and unsegregated public accommodations, as in the judgement of the Commission will effectuate the purposes of this Article, and including a requirement for report of the manner of compliance. If, upon the evidence, the Commission shall find that a defendant has not engaged in any unlawful discriminatory practice prohibited under this Article, the Commission shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on the Complainant an Order dismissing the said complaint as to such defendant. The findings of fact shall state the reasons on which they are based and contain the names of the Commissioners taking part in the decision; if the statement of fact does not represent, in whole or in part, the unanimous decision of the Commissioners sitting, any Commissioner sitting in the hearing shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion. The statement of fact shall forthwith be countersigned by the Chairman of the Commission; it shall be served upon every complainant, defendant, and such other persons or organizations as the Commission may deem proper. In the event of dispute as to the meaning and scope of the statement of fact or of any Order pursuant thereto, the Commissioners sitting shall jointly construe it upon the request of any party. The statement of fact and any Order pursuant thereto has no binding force except between the parties to the complaint, and in respect of that particular complaint. Any complaint filed pursuant to this section must be so filed not later than ninety days after the initial discovery of the alleged unlawful act of discrimination.

(i) Any person claiming to be aggrieved by an Order of the Commission may obtain judicial review thereof, and the Commission may obtain an order of court for its enforcement, in a proceeding as provided in this section. Such proceeding shall be brought in the Recorder's court, located in the City of Tuskegee, Alabama. Such proceeding shall be initiated by the filing of a petition in such court, together with a written transcript of the record upon the hearing before the Commission, the statement of fact and any Order issued, and the issuance and service of a notice of motion returnable at a special term of such court. Thereupon, the court shall have jurisdiction of the proceedings and of the questions determined therein, and shall have the power to grant such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper, and to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such transcript an order enforcing, modifying, or enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part an Order of the Commission; but no objection that has not been urged before the Commission shall be considered by the court, unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused because of extraordinary circumstances. Any party may move the court to remit the case to the Commission in the interest of justice for the purpose of adducing additional specified and material evidence and seeking findings thereon, provided he shows reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence before the Commission. The findings of the Commission as to the facts shall be conclusive if supported by sufficient evidence on the record considered as a whole.

(j) All proceedings of judicial review shall be heard and determined by the court, and by any appellate court, as expeditiously as possible, and with lawful precedence over other matters. The jurisdiction of the Recorder's court shall be exclusive and its judgement and order shall be final, subject to review by the appellate division of the Circuit Court and the Supreme Court of the State of Alabama, in the same manner and form and with the same effect as provided by law for appeals from a final order in a special proceeding. The Commission's copy of the testimony shall be available at all reasonable times to all parties for examination without cost and for the purposes of judicial review of an Order of the Commission. The appeal shall be heard on the record without the requirement of printing. The Commission may appear in court by one of its attorneys. A proceeding under this section, when instituted by any person claiming to be aggrieved by an Order of the Commission, must be so instituted not later than thirty days after the service of the Order of the Commission.

(k) In any investigation or proceeding under this Article, the Commission is authorized to confer immunity by any Commissioner, or his staff representative, if a person refuses to answer a question or produce evidence on the ground that he may be incriminated thereby, and, notwithstanding such refusal, an order is made by the Commission, or any member thereof, or his staff representative, that such person answer the question or produce the evidence; if such person complies with this order, and if, but for this order, he would have been privileged to withhold the answer given or the evidence produced by him, then immunity shall be conferred upon him by the Commission. "Immunity," as used in this Article, means that no such person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for, or on account of, any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which, in accordance with the said order, he gave answer or produced evidence, and that no such answer given or evidence produced shall be received against him in any criminal proceeding; but he may nevertheless be prosecuted or subjected to penalty or forfeiture for any perjury or contempt committed in answering, or failing to answer, or in producing or failing to produce evidence, in accordance with the order, and any such answer given or evidence produced shall be admissible against him upon any criminal proceeding concerning such perjury or contempt. The Commission shall have power to enforce such an order compelling any person to answer a question or produce evidence, and any person so ordered shall comply with the order forthwith. If a person complies with such order and it is thereafter determined that the appropriate city attorney having an official interest therein was not notified, such failure or neglect shall not deprive such person of any immunity otherwise properly conferred upon him.

Sec. 6: Penal Provision.

Any person or organization who or which shall willfully resist, prevent, impede or interfere with the Commission or any of its members or representatives in the performance of duty under this Article, or shall, willfully and inexcusably, fail to appear at any hearing to which he shall have been lawfully summoned or fail to answer a charge thereat, or shall willfully violate any Order of the Commission, or shall willfully conspire with, contrive, incite, aid, abet, cause, compel or coerce others to violate the same, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be punishable by imprisonment in the city jail for not more than two years, or by a fine of not more than two thousand dollars, or by both such imprisonment and fine; but procedure for the review of an Order, as provided under Section (5) of this Article, shall not be deemed to be such prohibited willful conduct.

Sec. 7: Construction.

The provisions of this Article shall be construed liberally for the accomplishment of the purposes thereof. Nothing contained in this Article shall be deemed to repeal any law, but, as to acts declared unlawful under section (4) of this Article, the procedure provided herein shall, while pending, be exclusive; and the final determination therein shall exclude any other action, civil or criminal, based on the same grievance of the person or organization concerned. If such person or organization institutes any action based on such grievance without resorting to the procedure provided by this Article, he or it may not subsequently resort to the procedure herein.

If any clause, phrase, sentence, paragraph, subparagraph, section, subsection, word, numeral, letter, or portion of this Article, or the application thereof to any person, organization, or circumstances, shall, for any reason, be adjudged by a court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgement shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of this Article.

Dear Ben:

Thanks very much for your letter of Marsh 24, giving me a run down on the constructive actions of the Liberal Party with regard to bills in the State Legislature affecting civil rights. I was aware of some of these actions, but am pleased to have a more complete breakdown. Needless to say, we greatly appreciation the Party's activities in the interest of our mutual cause.

Dear Jim:

I would like you to know that the Liberal Party has been very active with regard to bills in the State Legislature that affect civil rights and the economic and social problems of people in the minority groups of the community. I would like to indicate a few items on which we have acted. We have tried to bring our influence to bear on legislators through letters, telegrams, delegations to legislative leaders and chairmen of the various committees in Albany, a picketing line in front of the State Capitol and a legislative conference in Albany.

1- Immediately upon hearing of the State Assembly action defeating the bill outlawing discrimination in apprenticeship and job training, we telegraphed calling for a reversal of that Assembly action.

2- We called for the defeat of such bills as those introduced by Assemblyman George VanCott of Mt. Vernon and Senator Norman Lent of East Rockaway that would prohibit transfer of school children on racial grounds and that would prevent the Boards of Education in the various cities from doing anything with regard to effecting integration in education. Over the week-end we contacted many legislators insisting on the defeat of such measures.

3- We called for the enactment of legislation granting power to initiate investigations to the Commission on Human Rights, granting the Commission injunctive powers, prohibiting discrimination in insurance and mortgage financing, and granting amnesty to peaceful demonstrators for civil rights.

4- We called for the enactment of the $1.50 hourly wage.

5- We called for the adoption of the $165,000,000 program for low income housing and the subsidization of low income families in middle income dwellings. The fact is that we indicated that this was inadequate and that the $500,000,000 bond issue should be carried.

6- We called for the authorization of rent strikes where housing is hazardous to health and safety.

7- We urged mandating free tuition in the City University.

8- We opposed strenuously the attempt to cut the rent control budget by $1,000,000,000. (We argued strongly at the New York City Council hearings for the continuation of strong rent control and against any weakening of such.)

9- We argued for the abolition of the literacy test for voting.

10- We argued against the "Stop and Frisk" and "No Knock " bills.

11- We called for an additional appropriation of $10,000,000 in State Aid for Education, to be ear-marked for the objectives of integration in education and improving schooling in the disadvantaged areas.

12- We introduced a Liberal Party bill for democratic economic planning for a full employment economy.

13- We urged action on various unemployment measures that would protect the rights and improve the benefits for the unemployed.

We acted on many other questions but the above indicate the measures and the type of measures on which we put major emphasis. We are using our strength to the utmost to promote the cause of equality of rights and opportunities for all irrespective of race, color, creed or national origin and to promote the welfare of the people, particularly those in the low income groups.

We shall continue our endeavors until the Legislature adjourns and in the period when the Governor signs or vetoes bills.

Sincerely yours,

Ben Davidson

BE SURE TO READ
THIS LETTER

To All Members of the State
Policy Committee:

We must apologize for the complications with regard to the date of the meeting of the State Policy Committee. After having made a change to Monday, December 14th and having sent out the notices to you, we were informed that the New York State Electors for President and Vice-President of the United States have been summoned to meet in Albany on that date and would be unable to return in time for the Policy Committee meeting. This would involve Dr. Timothy W. Costello, David Dubinsky and Alex Rose.

We are therefore compelled to change the date of the meeting once again to TUESDAY, DECEMBER 15th at 8 P.M. at State Headquarters, 165 West 46th Street, 14th Fl. Please bear with us but there is an element of rejoicing with the cause of the problem- namely, that 3 officers of the Liberal Party were elected as Electors for President and Vice-President of the United States.

We therefore ask you to make a special effort to attend the Policy Committee meeting which will take place on TUESDAY, DECEMBER 15th at 8 P.M.

Sincerely yours,

Ben Davidson

CORE's FARMER TALK WITH LINDSAY

New York City, November 8th, 1965 - James Farmer, National Director of CORE, will be meeting with Mayor-elect John Lindsay today at 2 p.m. at the Hotel Roosevelt. The meeting, requested by Mr. Farmer, follows Mr. Farmer's analysis of the Negro vote as the "decisive swing vote" in the election of Mr. Lindsay, with 43% of the Negro vote cast in favor of Mr. Lindsay. Mr. Farmer made concrete proposals in such areas as Schools, Housing, Employment, Anti-Poverty, Hospitals, Welfare and Appointments.

I. Mr. Farmer urged the extension of the concept of citizen participation in all areas of city life. Not only should the poor play the dominant role in the policy-making for the anti-poverty program but there should be representatives of those served by the city hospitals, the city's welfare programs in policy-making positions for those and other programs. There should be "No service without representation."

II. On Schools Mr. Farmer proposed (a) that the Mayor-elect act to end the shocking discrepancy in fully licensed teachers between Negro and white schools. The CORE leader proposed that this discrepancy be cut in half by September, 1966 and eliminated by September, 1967. (b) He also urged the establishment of at least 125 all-day neighborhood elementary schools, and year-round programs at all grade levels. (c) Further, Mr. Farmer proposed that a commitment be made to all children that they will attend full sessions by the fall of 1966.

(d) School integration must be accelerated by the use of educational parks with a "freeze" placed on all new school construction of permit accumulation of capital funds to build large numbers of educational parks. (e) In the interim, a proposal was made whereby each school district would consist of six (or multiples of six) schools, each serving a single grade for the entire district and when the year ends, all of the pupils would remain in the same school with it now serving the next higher grade.

III (a) On Housing, Mr. Farmer insisted that there be no displacement of families by public programs without at least an equivalent amount of new low-income housing constructed. (b) In order to accomplish the necessary rehabilitation of the city's present housing stock, increased housing inspectors are necessary and the (c) Municipal Court judges must come to treat violators of the housing code as the criminals they are. (d) The rights of tenants in public housing must be respected by the housing authority which means an end to all-hours inspections and arbitrary regulations. (e) To enhance integration of public housing, all applicants should be placed on a single central list with no individual project preferences respected unless it favors integration. Further, Mr. Lindsay was urged to take the lead in seeking adequate funding of the rent subsidy program now mired in Congress without an appropriation.

IV In employment, (a) the city must work to generate new jobs both in the public and the private sector. (b) Further development is necessary in the area of non-professional jobs, (c) while Mr. Farmer urged that city contracts be signed only with companies and unions who can show both no present racial discrimination and the taking of affirmative steps to increase minority-group employment. (d) On all city contracts, expecially new construction, a stated precentage of all jobs should be reserved for the umemployed and the underemployed. (e) To assure a decent wage for all who work, Mr. Lindsay was urged to work for a national minimum wage of $2.00 for all employers of four or more persons, and pending that to seek such a program in New York City and New York State.

V An entirely civilian police review board was (a) called for as an essential step in developing police-community confidence. (b) Also, there must be increased recruitment of minority-group members for police work and extended human relations training for all policeman. (c) The present rule requiring off-duty officers to carry their service revolvers should be revoked as a danger to policeman and civilians alike.

VI The anti-poverty program must be vitalized by the (a) heavy infusion of citizen participation. (b) The head of the city's anti-poverty program should be other than a city official. Further, (c) all anti-poverty programs as well as the city's central program should include a dominant role for the poor in policy-making. (d) The anti-poverty program must emphasise job generation with training built into the job, and the increased use of non-professionals with the opportunity for career development as a result of a combination of job experience and formal schooling.

VII The city's hospitals (a) must serve their poor patients no less well than the best private hospitals, (b) and the hospitals clientele should play a role in setting its policies.

VIII The Welfare program must serve to rehabilitate its clients not seek to catch them as "cheaters" nor to maintain them on "the dole." Again the principle of citizen participation should be extended so as to give the welfare client a major role in shaping the welfare programs.

IX Making no individaul recommendations for appointments, Mr. Farmer did point out (a) the critical importance to the Negro community of such postitions as members of the Board of Education, Commissioner of Housing, Police Commissioner, head of the city's anti-poverty program, Commissioner of Hospitals, and Commissioner of Welfare. (b) Mr. Farmer also noted the dominantly minority-group polulation served by these agencies and suggested that in the selection of department heads and senior officials cognizance be taken of the importance of a Negro appointee.

These issues should serve as guide lines for discussion and questions with John V. Lindsay. Be most interested in what his positions are regarding the following.

1. Taxes. Are you in favor of a major revision of the city's tax structure so as to eliminate recessive taxation which casts an undue burden on New York's poor? Specifically, will you seek a revision of the basic dual concept of sales taxes and real estate taxes?

2. Housing. Of New York's 8000,000 structures, 43,000 are slums. These slums are occupied by nearly one-fifth of New York's total population. Will you institute an immediate program for the rehabilitation of existing slum buildings and a program for the construction of new buildings which will ultimately replace the existing slums? To be specific, would you be prepared for an aggressive use of existing legislation permiting tax abatement and loan funds and assistance in securing Federal or Federally guaranteed loan funds for rehabilitation? Would you be willing to use the receivership law agressively? Would you be willing to triple the number of housing inspectors and, in addition, put substantive inspection duties on the health and fire departments so as to bring the number of active inspectors up to necessary levels? Would you be in favor of legislation assisting rent strikes? Would you terminate the sale of city land, much of which can be immediately used or will be required for use within the next few years for redevelopment by the public? Would you favor the use of under utilized areas, such as old commercial structures in downtwon New York, Hunt's Point section and so forth, for the development of new housing? Would you be in favor of racially and economically integrated public housing in lieu of the new style ghettos which have been built in the last few years? Would you be prepared to allocate not less than five per cent of the City's annual budget for the eradication of slums?

3. Welfare. Would you be prepared to revise the welfare system so as to provide for public recognition of the right to welfare on the part of those who cannot find their economic situation, with dignity and honor? For example, would you favor permitting people on welfare to earn at least some money so that welfare funds could be used to give them a start rather than posing people, as a present, with the alternative of welfare or earning too little to maintain their families?

4. Wages. Do you favor $1.50 minimum wage, to be extended to all so-called charitable institutions? Do you favor removing the exemptions from the labor laws which certain institutions now enjoy?

5. Education. What would you do to secure quality integrated education in New York City? Specifically, what allocations would you make in terms of teachers and funds to bring slum schools up to parity in quality and what steps would you take to eliminate the impact of gerrimandering of school districts which plagues New York City?

6. Police. Would you be in favor of a civilian review board with substantial powers to revise police department procedures and to punish policemen who brea the law? What other steps would you take to return the Police Department to civilian control? What steps would you take to eliminate such unlawful pplice activities as the Bureau of Special Services, widetapping, searches without warrants and the like? What steps would you take to protect New York citizens against beatings at police precincts and the kind of practices which led to the Whitmore case? What steps would you take to limit the police use of deadly force, such as in the Gilligan case and in the many other cases in New York when citizens are shot by policemen without sound reason? Do you believe that it is better that a criminal escape or that he be shot and killed?

7. Air Pollution. What steps would you take to reduce the dangerous air pollution which now infects New York City? Specifically, would you be prepared to curb abusive practices by the New York City Transit Authority, Con Edison and other major contributors to pollution? Would you be prepared to give the Department adequate budgetary funds?

8. Administration of Justice. The situation in New York today is that a poor man has the devil's own time securing justice, particularly in the criminal courts. Would you favor substantial neighborhood legal assistance programs and a strong public defender system to counteract the helpnessness of New York's poorer citizens when in contact with legal problems? Would you be prepared to institute a substantial campaign against consumer frauds, particularly on the retail financing level? Would you be prepared to institue a campaign to curb neihgborhood price discrimination by chain stores? Would you be prepared to appoint or to cause the appointment of judges in the criminal courts and the housing courts who are not subject to pressure by District Attorneys and landlords?

9. Rent Control. Do you favor continued rent control? Specifically, do you favor the principle that it is the community's obligation to provide housing of adequate quality for a dignified life at a price which people can afford?

10. City Owned Housing. What steps will you take to eliminate the City as the community's worst and largest slumlord? Will you require the Welfare Department to find housing for its clients? In buildings which rigidly meet city codes? Will you end the system whereby relocation intensifies ghetto segregation and population density in the ghettos?

11. Employment Discrimination. What steps will you take to cause the enforcement of all laws relating to employment discrimination in New York City? For example, will you require all city contractors to show that they have an integrated labor force before they can be considered as bidders? Will you cause the institution of prosecutions against employers and unions under the Civil Rights Law? Will you institute an intensive program of remedial education to compensate for the impact of discriminatory education suffered by many New York City residents? Will you provide for substantial enforcement and investigative facilities, as well as employment office facilities, to help minority groups secure employment?

12. 12. Administrative Structure. Will you appoint a deputy mayor with plenary powers to plan and execute housing programs and land use programs? Will you replace the City Commission on Human Rights with a strong and fully empowered agency?

13. War on Poverty. Will you take measures to utilize WOP money properly, that is to say will you remove it from political control and cause it to be applied to significant ends?

14. Public Authorities. Will you take steps to recapture for public purposes the vast sums which have been accumulated by the Triborough Bridge and Tunnel Authority, the Port of New York Authority and other public authorities operating in the New York Area and which are being adminstrators private fiefs by a few willful men?

15. Cultural Activities. What steps will you take to further cultural activities in the City of New York at prices which all the people can afford? Will you make public funds available for theatre, modern dance and music, motion picture making etc? Will you develop a program to assist the fine arts? Will they be controlled objectively or by the usual professional cliques?

16. New York City Broadcasting. One of the most intolerable wastes of a public resource is Channel 31. This enormously valuable television channel is being utilized for the showing of sponsored films and a few vaguely educational programs. Will you allocate to Channel 31 a sufficient budget to make this public resource into what it should be?

Draft CORE paper for presentation to John Lindsay

Negro voters in New York and elsewhere demonstrated in the recent election that they respond to candidates who offer programs focused on their needs and who take into account their desires, regardless of the candidate's party. We believe that the prime concern of an elected official who seeks to serve that constituency, and indeed to serve his entire constituency, is to take that constituency seriously. That means to seek out its members, solicit their views, listen to their ideas, respond to their suggestions. It means giving the people a real voice in the decisions which affect the vital areas of their lives. It means, in no original phrase, "giving the government back to the people."

The neighborhood campaign centers of the recent campaign were, we believe, a step in the right direction. For the first time, in recent history, a candidate brought his campaign to the people in their own neighborhoods. We believe that this is an area where further development can and should take place. These neighborhood centers can become the focus of community concern, serving not only as a dispensor of information about and services from the municipality, but also as a forum for the direction of ideas, complaints, proposals, etc., to the borough and city government. The concept of the government as the "servant" of the people should be broad enough to encompass both the idea that the government must provide necessary services for the people but also that the people themselves must play a continuing and important role in the definition of what these services are to be and how and by whom they are to be performed.

The language of the Economic Opportunity Act, which provides that programs should be "developed, conducted, and administered" with the "maximum feasible participation" of the affected groups, provides a model for the type of citizen involvement which we seek. And such involvement ought not be limited to the anti-poverty program alone, but can and should be extended to include such areas as hospitals, welfare programs, schools, etc. (See below for further amplification.) Indeed, one may state the slogan of, "No services without representation."

And it is important that the Mayor of New York not only seek the implementation of such ideas within the City itself, but also take a leading role on the national scene to promote the idea of citizen participation.

Within the context of increased citizen responsibility for and in their government, we would like to make a number of comments in several areas of city life. These comments are not meant to be an exhaustive examination of all the relevant issues, but rather to be suggestive and give an indication of areas of concern and priority. In each of these areas what is of utmost importance is that concerned attention be given to the needs of the community and that responsible and responsive action be taken--promptly and in more than token fashion. The people of New York"s ghettoes have undertaken an act of faith--an act of faith in the possibility of a good life for them in this city. This faith must be rewarded for their well-being and for the well-being of the entire city.

SCHOOLS

An arsenal of evidence is available to demonstrate that New York mistreats and miseducates its ghetto youth. Whatever their state of cultural or environmental deprivation when they enter the school system--and we question the entire concept of such deprivation it is clear that the school"s do little to offset that and indeed serve to perpetuate and even accentuate this deprivation. There can be no more damning indictment of the public schools of the City of New York that to point to the fact that in the very schools which need competant teachers the most, there are the fewest such teachers. The Russell Sage Foundation's report, "Pupils and Schools in New York City," shows that as the school composition becomes blacker the percentage of teachers with Permanent Licenses decreases, such that there is not a single junior high-school in the City of New York with 85% or more Negro student population which has as many as 65% of its teachers with Permanent Licenses; while, on the other hand, over half of the predominantly white schools have more than 65% of their teachers with Permanent Licenses (Table 44; of Table 26 for Elementary School statistics. Eleanor Bernet Sheldon and Raymond A.Glazer, PUPILS AND SCHOOLS IN NEW YORK CITY: A FACT BOOK, Russell Sage Foundation, New York, 1965).

*A first priority item of the new administration is to bring to a rapid end this type of discrimination against Negro pupils. This administration must commit itself to this goal and must set a timetable to bring it about. We urge that this discrepancy in the qualifications of teachers serving black and white children be cut in half with the opening of school in September, 1966, and ended entirely by September, 1967.

That there are very real shortcomings in the educational performance of Negro and Puerto Rican youth is evident to all. It is less than useful for us here to argue about the causes of such failures. We can all agree, however, that the need is for more and not less schooling, for better and not less equipped schools, for fewer and not more children per teacher, for more and not less help for teachers.

*We propose that a major program be undertaken to open at least half of the 225 special service elementary schools and 60 junior high schools as all-day neighborhood schools by the fall of 1966. Further, we urge that a substantial number of the city's elementary, junior high schools, and senior And most obvious, all students must have the opportunity to receive a full day's schooling; high schools remain open as all-year schools. This goal must be reached by the fall of 1966. Through such means as longer school days and a longer school year, as well as improved teacher training, and curriculum materials (especially geared to the needs and environment of the urban child), the shockingly poor product which is turned out by the schools of New York City in its pupils can be improved. And while we favor sharp increases in such programs as "Operation Headstart, " we must not allow concern for the pre-school child to mask the need for massive changes in the upper grades lest we not only "give-up" on the pupils there but also lose the gains made in "Operation Headstart" as pupils encounter the debilitating effect of the "regular" system. (Unfortunately preliminary evidence already indicates that much of the gains of such special pre-school programs are being lost by the children presently in grades 2 and 3.)

*In addition, steps must be taken to reduce the pupil-teacher ratio so that children may receive more individualized attention from their teacher. Serving both the end of freeing increased teacher time for attention to individual students, as well as increasing the effectiveness of communication between pupil and teacher, there should be a stepped-up use of -- nonprofessionals as school aides. These non-professional positions should not be viewed as "dead-end" jobs but rather should offer further career opportunities up to and including the opportunity of becoming a fully-certified teacher through a combination of work experience and formal education.

*We approve the so-called "Allen Plan" for school reorganization as a means for further school integration on a 4-4-4 basis and urge that action be taken to implement it to that end. The present situation where but one instance of implementation of the 4-4-4 plan now exists shows considerably less than the necessary drive from the Board of Education. Further, we believe that the present system of trade schools must be eliminated entirely--they have become little more than "parking places" for children whom the system has given up for lost. All children should attend a comprehensive high school for four years, and vocational training should follow such general schooling. And we urge efforts to seek maintenance allowances, paid through federal anti-poverty funds, for such students.

Along with and at the same time as we provide quality education for all the city's children, we must provide integrated education. Educatiors are unanimous in stating that only through integrated educational experiences can children learn to live in the polycultural world which will characterize their future lives. And long experience has taught us that only where white children are is their significant municipal concern for the educational facilities. Because it is right educationally, and because its absence serves to mark the Negro child as a pariah, we insist that forthright steps be taken to turn back the tide of the increasing segregation of Negro children in the New York City public schools.

*It is clear that no one step or technique will integrate New York's schools, and we are bound to the use of no single means toward that end. However, as illustrative of the dimension of the problem and the necessity for broad and far-reaching solutions we suggest for your consideration the proposal that a commitment be made to the use of educational parks as the single best solution to the problem of school integration--a method which also provides important susbstantive educational and financial advantages too. In order to implement such a commitment--that is to expend the large sums of money to erect many such educational parks--we propose an immediate "freeze" on all new school construction, so as to accumulate the necessary funds and sites for these parks. In the meanwhile, we propose that all elementary schools be grouped in school districts in multiples of 6 (that is 6, 12, or 18, etc. elementary schools in each district) and that each school house all pupils in the entire district in a single grade, viz. School A contain all the 1st grade pupils in the district. School B all the 2nd grade pupils. etc. At the end of each school year, rather than the pupils moving to a new school for the next grade, the school itself advance a year so that the school which had housed all of the district's 1st grade pupils, now be used by the same pupils for the 2nd grade, etc. For junior high schools a similar plan can be used. And for high schools we propose that all "district" high schools be eliminated, and that all high school students be eligible to attend any high school in the city, based on a first-come first-served basis; of course retaining the special eligibility high schools based upon meaningful and non-culture-bound examinations. We offer the above proposal not as one to which we are irrevocably bound but to emphasize the need for creative thought applied to the problem of school integration.

We present it as a proposal and not as a firm plan, not because we value integration the less but because we know that the urgency of the need demands the most constructive solution.

HOUSING

The fact of massive numbers of our fellow citizens living in slum housing is one which we can neither tolerate nor suffer for very much longer. As the residents of Harlem or Bedford-Stuyvesant could have told all who would listen, the housing conditions of the city's Negroes is far worse than ever reported in official figures and acknowledged by city spokesmen. The reduction and ultimate elimination of slums must be a matter of the highest priority for the new administration.

*The very depth and intensity of the problem demands the broadest range of solutions. First, there must be no more public programs which result in a net loss to the city of low-rent apartments. Before any new urban renewal or other public programs are built, low-cost housing equivalent or greater than that to be destroyed must be constructed and be made available on a first priority to those to be displaced. In addition the displacees must receive adequate relocation allowances and services from the federal government where possible, from the city where Necessary.

*The housing stock presently existing must either be brought up to minimum code standards or rehabilitated if possible, and if not rehabilitatable torn down and the new sites used either for small "vest-pocket" housing or parks. Those who maintain substandard housing must be treated as the criminals they are, identified by an enlarged corps of housing inspectors and punished by an increasingly concerned judiciary.

*The role of the judiciary in the enforcement of the housing code has often been neglected. However, the shocking statistics that the average fine for a housing code violation was little more than $10. last year, reveals the cavalier attitude with which most municipal court judges apparently treat such violations. As the appointer of such judges, the mayor can act to impress upon his nominees to the bench the high role which they can and should play in the provision of decent housing for their fellow citizens. The use of jail sentences should become a standard punishment for the repeated violator.

*The resource of public housing must continue to provide for many of the city's low-income families. Because housing is public, that should not mean that the tenants rights are invaded or his dignity denied. The right of each New Yorker to decent housing should be recognized, and the arbitary and unreasonable invasion of individual rights which characterizes many of the procedures of the city's housing authority must be brought to an end.

In order to reduce the segregation of the public housing projects, the practice of giving to each individual applicant the right to select a particular project must be ended. There should be a single city-wide list of applicants, and applicants should be assigned to apartments in the order of their application, making exceptions only for such legitimate reasons as access to needed public facilities as hospitals, etc.

*The present segregation of the poor in public housing has a deleterious effect not only on the projects themselves, but serves to increase the segregation of all aspects of the city's life. Therefore the government's proper subsidy of housing for those who cannot afford to provide safe and sanitary housing for themselves must come increasingly in the form of rent subsidies, thus allowing the tenant a freer choice of housing facilities. The new major should take the lead in assuring that the funding of this federal program is adequate for the city's needs and, if necessary, in seeking additional state and city funds.

EMPLOYMENT

The city's role in the employment area is varied; it can help to encourage the generation of jobs by private industry; it can provide jobs itself; it can assure all of equal access to jobs; it can serve the interests of the underemployed and the unemployed; and it can assure that those who have work receive a decent wage. We urge the new administration to act in all of these areas.

*Both in the area of private employment and public employment the city has a responsibility to push for increased jobs for minorities and for jobs in a broader range of job areas and with broader job responsibilities. An area where important progress can be made is in the development of non-professional jobs in both the public and private sector. The city can help in this area by providing training programs for non-professionals, liberalize its own civil service requirements to allow for the extensive use of non-professionals, and re-examine its own job requirements and job specifications to increase the availability of jobs to non-professionals.

*To assure all of equal access to jobs the city must first put its own house in order. An immediate step would be the adoption of a rule that no city agency will sign a contract with any employer or union which cannot demonstrate that it has taken affirmative action to increase minority employment. We demand here not a mere showing of no present discrimination but the necessity for an indication of present affirmative action. A system of pre-award conferences should be instituted to assure that all contractors, subcontractors, and unions meet these requirements.

The system of kinship inheritance of job access, particularly virulent in the construction trades unions, must be brought to an immediate end wherever it exists. Further, union entrance and apprenticeship rolls must be appropriately adjusted in order to take into account the previous pattern of exclusion of Negroes and other minorities. Having deprived Negroes of opportunities for a century it is not enough to now offer each his present starting point and dub that "equal treatment."

To meet the needs of the under-employed and the unemployed, we believe that a stated percentage of jobs on all city contracts be reserved for such persons. The massive school and housing building, housing rehabilitation and hospital building programs, park and recreation facility provision, as well as the servicing of these new facilities, will mean thousands of new jobs. To improve the quality of service offered to our citizens and to provide jobs for tens of thousands, such a provision for affirmative action is demanded.

*The poor of our city consists not only of those unable to find work but also include many who work but at substandard wages. Therefore, we support a federal minimum wage of $2.00 an hour covering all employers of four or more persons, regardless of their business. We urge the new Mayor to support such national legislation, and we urge the new mayor to seek its adoption in New York City and New York pending such national action.

POLICE

There is no more awesome power than that characterized by the club, the gun, and the badge of the policeman. And there is no more necessary service in a free society than that of providing law and order. And there is no agency with greater power to abuse its authority than the police. To match responsibility with that power, justice with law and order, and to check abuse is the responsibility of the mayor.

*In a free society the police provide law and order only to the degree to which they receive citizen confidence and respect. Such confidence and respect come to the police not as a matter of right but as something which is earned. As a step toward increased citizen confidence and respect in the police, we urge the appointment of a civilian review board. Such a board should be comprised entirely of civilians not as a way to punish policemen but as a way to increase the likelihood of citizen confidence in the work of such a board. No institution is capable of sitting in judgment of unbiased observers more than the police.

*No arm of the government comes into more frequent contact with the citizenry than the police. And no arm of the government comes into contact with the citizenry in what must be described as a quasi-punitive role more often. This being the case, there is no more important matter than the training of the police in human relations. Such training must encompass far more than textbook lessons on brotherhood. The police trainee must come to hear and listen to the views of a broad segment of our citizenry, gain an understanding of their aspirations and fears, their hopes and desires. And the policeman must know in terms so unequivocal that he will never forget that having donned the uniform of a police officer he may never use its power to project his private prejudices or predelections, for to do so weakens not only his position as an officer but the very worth of the entire police force.

*In order to represent all of the people of the city, the police department must conduct an immediate and intensive recruitment drive to seek out qualified minority group members to become police officers.

*There is increasing evidence that the present police regulation requiring officers to always carry their service revolvers presents a danger not only to themselves but also to the public at large. We call for an immediate reconsideration of this regulation by the new police commissioner.

*There is no justice when it is gained by deceiving of the ignorant or persecution of the poor. Immediately following detention and being brought to the station house, a prisoner should be informed of his full constitutional rights, including his right to remain silent and his right to counsel. When the individual is unable to afford counsel, funds for counsel should be provided by the city. And the system of bail--which is little more than a form of economic discrimination against the poor must be reformed so that only those whose return for trial can be shown to be in serious doubt should be required to post bond. The reforms in this area begun by theVera Foundation now merit rapid application throughout the city.

ANTI POVERTY

The role of the citizen in his government has been discussed before. It is in regard to the anti-poverty program that a significant break-through has occured in American life, epitomized in the phrase "maximum feasible participation" of the affected groups. This participation in its development, conduct, and administration is essential to the success of the anti-poverty program. Without such participation the anti-poverty program becomes little more than another hand-out, doomed to failure.

*As a first step in the expression of its commitment to the principle of meaningful citizen participation, the new administration should replace the present director of the anti-poverty program with someone who is not a city official. Further, the policy-making board of the city's anti-poverty program, as well as the boards' of all anti-poverty programs which recieve any city support, should and must include dominat representation of the poor by people selected by the poor themselves. In no other way can there be an adequate expression of the people's right to decide for themselves.

*As for program, there are three areas which we wish to see stressed. The first is that training without jobs is less than nothing for it only further discourages the trainee while creating an army composed of an ever higher skilled group of the unemployed. Instead of training and then job, the training must be built into the job with the government providing subsidies to the employer for training. Second, anti-poverty programs in the field of education must not neglect the upper grades by exclusive attention to pre-school. We must not give up on these already beyond pre-school, and must at least equal if not exceed the imput into the pre-school program at each grade level. And third, the anti-poverty program itself should encourage the development of non-professional career lines.

HOSPITALS

The city hospital system is indeed the medical care system for the poor. There can be little doubt that they now do not provide quality medical attention for their patients. The horror of a Harlem Hospital must end immediately.

*Immediate steps must be taken to bring all city hospitals up to standards of cleanliness, staff, and medical care no lower than those maintained at the best private hospitals.

*Welfare work, as well as hospital work, should provide opportunities for non-professionals. And these jobs should offer the opportunity for career development so that the non-ppofessional can combine work experience and formal education in order to reach professional status.

WELFARE

The present welfare system is now more a system of policing the client than serving his needs. The present regulations, national and local not only encourage avoidance of the rules, but may indeed be said to contribute affirmatively to the further deterioration of the clients' condition. Not the perpetuation of itself, nor the purging from the rolls of alleged "welfare cheaters" but the pffering to all the services of the society as their right and the goal of rehabilitation should be the guiding principles of New York's welfare program.

*Just as the poor should have a voice in the anti-poverty program and in the policies of the city's hospitals, so too should the welfare clients have a say in the policits and operation of the city's welfare program. Not a dole given by a beneficent society but a right taken by those who need it.

*Welfare work, as well as hospital work, should provide opportunities for non-professionals. And these jobs should offer the opportunity for career development so that the non-professional can combine work experience and formal education in order to reach professional status.

APPOINTMENTS

At this time we wish to make no recommedations regarding individuals for city office. We do this not because we are unaware of the importance of the individual who administers program--we are fully aware of the individual's importance. We do not do it because we believe that more important now is the setting out of programs which we feel are necessary to serve the interests of the Negro community and the entire city.

There are several positions of particular importance to the Negro community. Some of these are the members of the Board of Education, Commissioner of Housing, Police Commissioner, head of the city's anti-poverty program, Commissioner of Welfare, and the Commissioner of Hospitals. As you endeavor to fill these positions and the other senior officials in these departments and we hail the standards of non-partisanship and qualifications which you have announced--we request the opportunity to consult with you and your staff about them.

We urge that in your consideration of candidates for these positions you take cognizance of the fact that the population served by these agencies is predominantly Negro and thus the importance of a Negro departmental head.

CONFIDENTIAL

December 21, 1965

The Hon. John V. Lindsay
Mayor-Elect, City of New York
Hotel Roosevelt
Madison Avenue and 45th Street
New York, New York

Dear John:

Already, even before assuming office, you have injected a much needed element of excitement and motion into New York City's administration. Your moves in many areas have already been with sureness and skill. We are all very happy about this, but we realize that the most difficult decisions lie ahead.

I know how you must be wrestling with the problem of a police commissioner. And I know that conflicting advice and suggestions must have come from many different sources on this particular matter, so that I hesitate to add to the morass a recommendation of my own. But the issue is such a crucial one and the possibilities so great for creative action to make New York a peaceful community of progress, that I decided to send you, quite privately, a recommendation.

The man I am recommending to you for this post is not a Negro; all factors considered, I do not feel that a Negro police commissioner would have a ghost of a chance of succeeding in New York City at the present time. He is a first rate and highly qualified policeman, having served in New York City from 1940 until 1962. He has exceptional knowledge and skill in intergroup relations activities, having been a member of the National Advisory Committee on Police and Community Relations of the NCCJ since its inception. He moves easily in the Puerto Rican community as well as in the Negro community. He is a scholar holding degrees in sociology and psychology, as well as a Ph.D. in Public Administration with major fields in correctional and police administration.

I can think of no one in the country better equipped for the job than this man, Dr. William P. Brown. I have had the privilege of lecturing in two pioneering seminars conducted by Dr. Brown at New York University for police officials from cities all over the country, North and South.

If appointed, like any good policeman, Dr. Brown would be an impartial administrator of law enforcement. In other words, while he has a deep and abiding interest in intergroup relations, he would without hesitation arrest me or anyone else if we violated the law. He would bring to his task the kind of imagination and modern thinking which is so rare in police departments. I believe that his appointment would prove to be a major asset to your administration. It is for this reason that I respectfully submit his name for your consideration.

Sincerely yours,

James Farmer
National Director

Dear Ed:

I do remember Bill Brown and think most highly of his qualifications for such an appointment. While I am not sure that I have sufficient influence with Lindsay to insure his consideration, I would very much like to talk with Bill Brown any time he will be available. If he is coming back to New York very shortly, I would like to meet with him.

I would be glad to drop a line to Lindsay making such a recommendation if you think that it would be useful.

Dear Jim,

I was very grateful to Norman Thomas for sharing the letter you sent him explaining the circumstances of CORE'S action with respect to the CORElator and Jim Peck. Unfortunately, Jim's interpretaion of events created an adverse image of CORE which none of us wanted to accept. I shall of course try to reconcile Jim to the import of the events as you described them. I do hope and expect that Jim's devotion or willingness to serve CORE will in no way be diminished.

While I'm writing I should like to recall to you a memorandum which you and I and a number of others received perhaps a year ago from Roger Baldwin. It incorporated a profile of Professor William Brown of the State University and retired inspector in our city Police Department. In addition to the nice things Roger said, I happen to know that he was individually and solely responsible for the first school integration moves in the Glendale-Ridgewood area. He worked all summer with all manner of groups in Queens to secure a peaceful integration. Thoughthe children from Bedford Stuyvesant were met by a howling mob this was, nevertheless, an isolated opposition due to Bill Brown's efforts.

Baldwin had hoped that Bill might be appointed by Wagner when Murphy left. But he should be even more acceptable to Lindsay. I know you would be interested in the paper he will read this Wednesday in St. Louis on a City Civilian Review and Ombudsman. I think it well meets the test of Civil Rights and Civil Liberites.

You undoubtedly recall the Conference he ran in 1963 on Civil Disobedience for the American Police Executive at which I spoke on Monday and you and Wyatt Tee Walker on Tuesday.

Bill be stopping off on his way back fro St. Louis on Whursday, and maybe stay over for Friday. If you can find time to meet him you can call me at school, Ac 2 0689.

Bill should be a credit to any administration Lindsay may organize.

With best wishes,

Ed

THE QUESTION
WHO BOUGHT JESSE CUTRER?

Was it CORE? Was it LBJ?

In the beginning of the Racial troubles in Bogalusa, the Mayor assured the people that he COULD & WOULD handle this invasion of trouble makers. When the problem began the Mayor said that he would not give a Parade Permit. Cutrer did give the Parade Permit. The people of Bogalusa respected the Mayor's judgement. The tax-paying people gave up their streets and humbled themselves. The people were ORDERED off THEIR own streets, by a Police Force, whom the people pay. This was done by direct order of the Bogalusa Mayor, the man that was trusted. NO VIOLENCE ERUPTED. The people did EVERYTHING in their power to see that the Mayor and his Council were not interfered with in their efforts to save the city from this DEGRADATION. As the people tried to preserve our Southern way of Life, the Mayor and Council were slowly selling the people out at every turn. The Mayor has repeatly GIVEN in. James Farmer did not have the support of the local Negroes. Mayor Cutrer is not giving the city of Bogalusa to the negro citizens of Bogalusa. No. He is giving the city to James Farmer and a handful of Negro Teenagers. NO PRESSURE was put on James Farmer and Dick Gregory to keep them out of Bogalusa. Not by the Mayor, the State Representative, the State Senator, or Congressman Morrison. This was not so when the WHITE CONSERVATIVES wanted to stage a Rally. Pressure was exerted from all levels, even the invited guest speakers were "leaned on".

The Governor, the Congressman, Jimmy Morrison, or his com-rats, Suksty Rayborn, and Buster Sheridan. John McKeithen asked for our vote and promised to serve the PEOPLE. We now ask, Big John, isn't this TRUE? What is happening under your administration?

Here is the list of elected officals who COULD & AND SHOULD have helped the People of Bogalusa. All these should be tarred and feathered.

MAYOR JESSIE CUTRER
REPRESENTATIVE SHERIDAN
SENATOR SIXTY RAYBORN
SHERIFF DORMAN CROWE
CONGRESSMAN JIMMY MORRISON
GOVERNOR JOHN MCKEITHEN
SENATOR RUSSELL LONG

Now the QUESTION. Why have these men, elected by the WHITE people turned their back on us in our time of need?

Is Communism so close? Who bought them? Who bought their HONOR and FOR HOW MUCH?

MAYBE SOME OF THESE PEOPLE:

1. Rowan Burris-Homosexual; he is free on bond at the present time, charged with contributing to the delinquency of a minor.
2. Robert Hicks-Official of the Negro Voters League.
3. A. Z. Young-Official of the Negro Voters League.
4. Michael Jones-Local Program Director for CORE.
5. Robert Taylor-Official of the Negro Voters League.
6. Victor Bussie-State President of ALF-CIO, Chairman for the committee of OUTSIDERS imported into Bogalusa by Mayor Jesse H. Cutrer, Jr., to solve our LOCAL problems.
7. Camel Gravel-Member of this IMPORTED MEDIATION BOARD.
8. Bascom D. Talley, Jr.,-Local representative for LBJ's federal compliance agency, "The Community Relations Service."
9. Ronnie Moore-State Field Representative for CORE.
10. Dick Gregory-Negro Comedian.
11. James Farmer-National Director for CORE.

Mr. James Farmer
Chairman, Congress for Racial Equality
38 Park Row, NYC

Dear Mr. Farmer:

Our agency is preparing for distribution to the magazine press in France, Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Belgium, Denmark, Norway, and Great Britain a series of four articles, which will be illustrated with photographs, giving the fullest possible coverage of the subject "The Anti-Segregation Struggle in the USA."

Therefore I am writing to ask you to be kind enough to grant me an interview, in the course of which I hope to gather a complete picture of your organization's activities on a national scale against racial inequality.

The renown which you have won as chairman of the Congress for Racial Equality make this interview with you of primary importance for our series.

I should, therefore, be most grateful if you could fix a date for an interview in the near future. The sooner the better, since I shall thus be in a better position to pursue other lines of inquiry on this subject.

Please accept in advance my warm thanks for your courtesy in this matter.

Most respectfully,

Lillian Tonnaire-Taylor

I thank you !

1. Our organization is the Congress of Racial Equality, which we call CORE, founded in 1942 in Chicago, Illinois. It was founded by thirteen or fourteen young people who were students at the University of Chicago, who were studying Gandhi in India, and felt that the techniques used by Gandhi, nonviolent direct action, could be applied to the United States. We felt that the techniques would be very effective in race relations problems. There were tactical reasons that Negroes could not fight violently against discrimination--we are one-tenth of the total population of the United States; we do not have weapons. Many of us, in addition to that, felt that there was a principle involved, and that it would be more effective to fight with goodwill and nonviolence, rather than with violent weapons. We would try to create a society of friends, you might say.

2. Well, since 1942, our organization has held sit-ins--let me explain what I mean by that. Negroes and whites in an interracial group go into restaurants and when the Negroes are refused service, the party will just sit there and wait for service and sit as long as necessary, and go back the next day and after that, to seek service. We have held sit-ins at restaurants, stand-ins at cafeterias and theater lines, wade-ins in swimming pools and at public beaches, and so forth. Also, we have worked on employment discrimination and housing discrimination.

3. Well, I think it lis largely because of the sit-ins and stand-ins and the other demonstrations such as we have held in Northern cities since 1942, that discrimination in public places--at least places of public accommodations such as restaurants, hotels, theaters and so forth--is quite rare in Northern cities now. It has been done by our demonstrations and court cases, and by other organizations. In the South, we have also had successes--the student sit-ins, which began February 1, 1960, spread throughout the Southern part of the United States, succeeded in desegregating lunch counters in 150 Southern cities. In our Freedom Rides, Negroes and whites got on buses as interstate passengers, and rode throughout the South, seeking to use bus terminal facilities: waiting rooms, rest rooms, the lunch counters and so forth, without discrimination. The Supreme Court said that we had that right, and we were testing the enforcement of the Supreme Court ruling. As a result of the Freedom Rides, some of us were beaten and many others had to spend long periods of time in Southern jails. The Interstate Commerce Commission, which is an agency of the federal government, issued an order which went into effect on November 1, 1961, saying that all the signs for colored and white in waiting rooms in the South must come down, and in their place must be put up signs saying that discrimination on the grounds of race or color was a violation of the federal order. These signs were to be posted not only in the waiting rooms but also in the buses. Since November 1, 1961, we have been testing throughout the South to see whether this order was being enforced. We found that in most of the Southern states and most of the Southern cities, this order is being enforced and Negroes can now use the facilities without segregation. There are exceptions to that; in the state of Mississippi there are only two cities where the bus terminals are no longer segregated. In the state of Louisiana, most of the cities are still segregated. Yes, I was arrested in Jackson, Mississippi on June 24, 1961 in the bus terminal waiting room. I had entered the waiting room with a group of my friends who were Freedom Riders. We started for the restaurant and there we were stopped by a policeman and arrested. The charge was breach of the peace, in spite of the fact that we were all peaceful and non-violent. I served 20 days in the Mississippi jail.

4. Our present program is, first of all, a mopping-up operation in interstate transportation: that is, to see to it that the federal laws are fully enforced in all the waiting rooms used by buses, trains and airplanes. We will not be satisfied until compliance with federal orders is one hundred per cent. In addition to that we are going to see to it that discrimination in so-called private restaurants comes to an end in the South, and that in hotels and other places of public accommodation. Schools? Yes, the Supreme Court ruled back in 1954 that segregation in public schools is a violation of the Constitution. However, since that time, it was been seven years, and only seven percent of the Negro children in the South are attending integrated schools: just a few. We would consider it "token integration," and this is what we are trying to fight against. We feel that it is not much of a victory to have three or four Negro children in a city of 150,000 attending school with white children.

5. Well, we have different types of representatives. Now, we have chapters, or branches, in 60 or more cities about the country. About half of these are in the South and about half in the North. In the North, we have chapters in such cities as New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit, San Francisco, Los Angeles. We have 8 chapters in the state of South Carolina. We also have a chapter in New Orleans, Louisiana; in Baton Rouge, Louisiana and Shreveport, Louisiana; we have chapters in Tennessee and in Kentucky as well.

6. Well, we have many, many supporters. We have a list of members and associate members totalling 40,000, both white and Negro--I would say that they are about equally divided. All over the country, these persons help to contribute to the organization and support us financially. We send out membership appeals to them and they send us contributions annually, and this is our major method of keeping going financially. There are many more Americans who sympathize with what we are doing and we reach them through radio and television. I myself frequently appear on radio and television, as do other members of our staff, sometimes on networks, coast-to-coast hookups, so that millions of Americans listen to what wehave to say. We get their letters expressing sympathy and support for what we are trying to do. I would say that many of the trade unions sympathize with what we are trying to do and send their contributions as well as aid in personnel. When we have picket lines picketing a company that discriminates in employment, very frequently some of the trade unions will send some of their members to join our picket lines. Also, we get support from churches both white and Negro, all over the country. Both Protestants and Catholics support the organization. We have a public education department which publishes a great deal of literature which we distribute as widely as we possibly can. We distribute it through mass meetings and a few organizations such as churches and trade unions. We also are preparing a documentary film about the Freedom Rides which we hope to show before two or three million American citizens all over the country in the next two years to let them know what CORE is doing and to urge their continued support.

7. We have no official relationship with the federal government. We are a voluntary organization, as distinguished from a governmental organization, but we do consult with friendly agencies in the federal government. On many occasions we have consulted with the Department of Justice in the federal government and have informed them of our plans. We do not ask their permission, nor can they tell us what to do; we decide on our own policies. As a matter of courtesy and as a matter of getting their support, we inform them of our plans in most situations. Now, as to our demands upon them, we urge the Department of Justice to take action; we pressure them, we push them. Whenever there is an incident of violence or denial of civil rights in a southern town that we know about, I immediately contact the Department of Justice and urge them to investigate and to take appropriate action. We also put pressure upon the President of the United States to take a firmer stand on these issues.

8. No, not really. We are an incorporated organization in the United States so that our operation is strictly within the confines of this country. However, we do have a friendly relationship with some of the officials of the new nations in Africa--we correspond with them and when they are over here we consult with them. However, this is strictly informal.

9. Yes, I would try to. It will have to be a summary picture, because this is an enormous problem. There are roughly twenty million Negro citizens in the United States. A little more than one tenth of the total population. Now, the great majority of the Negroes are in unskilled labor, though that situation is changing; more and more Negroes are getting education now and are intending to move to semi-skilled and skilled trades. A growing number of Negroes are entering the professions. There is a growing Negro middle class in this country: doctors, lawyers, governmental officials, and so forth. Now, roughly one million of the Negro workers in this country are organized in trade unions, not as separate Negro unions, but in integrated trade unions. There are many others that are not in unions. For example, the large number of farm workers and migratory workers are not organized in trade unions as yet, but plans are under way to seek their organization. Now, in housing, still the great bulk of Negroes are in rental housing, rather than owning their own homes. In most of our cities, the Negro population is confined, and I say confined because there is an area of the city which is occupied by Negroes--sort of a ghetto, you might say--and this is largely because of housing discrimination. It is difficult, and in some cases impossible, for a Negro to buy or to rent property outside of his prescribed area. Of course, we are trying very hard to change that kind of situation, with some successes. These ghettos, Negro sections of our large cities, tend quickly to become slums because of the fact that there is so much congestion. The population is so great in these areas, and the area is so small in comparison. Now, in the schools, education among Negroes has increased very rapidly, since the Reconstruction days which followed the Civil War. The number of Negro college graduates has mushroomed, because there are scores of Negro colleges in the South, some of them quite good colleges, others struggling because of inadequate funds and so forth. Since the Supreme Court ruling in 1954 on school segregation, we have found that a larger number of Negroes have entered state universities, which were previously for whites only. Even in the South--in the North this has been an old pattern--Negroes have been going to state universities and private colleges and universities. Still, as I might have indicated earlier, in the Southern states only 7 per cent of the Negro school children are in integrated schools. That means that 93 per cent are still in segregated schools. Now this is very slow progress toward the enforcement of the Supreme Court order.

The Army is fighting discrimination as follows: up until the late 1940's there was segregation in the Armed Forces. Most of the troops who fought in World War II were segregated troops--Negro units fighting by themselves and white units fighting by themselves and so on. In the Navy, most of the Negroes were in segregated service, such as mess attendants, working in the kitchen and so forth. However, following the war, Harry S. Truman issued an executive order outlawing discrimination in all of the Armed Forces. Investigation has indicated that this order is being enforced and that Negro and white troops are now integrated into the same units. This we look at with a great deal of pleasure. There are Negro officers; there is at least one Negro Brigadier General in the Army of the United States.

10. Well, our solution is, of course, integration, where Negroes of the United States are citizens like anyone else and they should have the same rights and the same privileges. We do not believe in enforced separation or segregation, we are opposed to the idea of a black state - it is a fantastic notion. We think that the solution to all of these problems is integration. In other words, treating each individual as an individual on the grounds of his own merits as an individual. We do not ask that any certain percentage of Negroes be employed in businesses; we ask that people be employed in business according to their qualifications regardless of race and if this is done, we feel that Negroes will have their share of the jobs, and that up-rating and promotion in employment be without regard to race. We feel that housing should be available to anyone who is able to pay for it, regardless of his race, Negro or white, and that all places that serve the public - restaurants, theaters, hotels, and so forth - should serve the public without regard to race. This is the solution which we are looking for.

(Question about Negroes who want to go back to Africa)...
Well, there are a few. I think that there are only a few, however, because most of the Negroes in this country consider themselves Americans. This is their land, most of their parents were born here, and their grandparents were born here, as slaves, so their culture is considerably different from the culture of Africa. I should point out, however, that there is a great and growing identification between the Negro in this country and Africa. This identification began when the Gold Coast, the former Gold Coast, became independent Ghana, the first of the former colonial areas to be independent. Before that time, Negroes in this country had the same stereotypes or mental image of Africa as most other Americans did. We thought of Africa as being a backward land, the Dark Continent where a few people were riding around on the backs of elephants and throwing spears at each other. But with the independence of Ghana and the other nations, we saw that here were dignified people and civilized people and began to take increasing pride in our ancestry and our African heritage. There is this growing spirit of identification. I myself was in Africa on a tour, visiting fifteen countries in Sub-Sahara Africa and I found that the Africans received me and accepted me immediately as a brother. The feeling is mutual indeed. Yet we see no solution in a return of Negroes in this country to Africa. We would be out of our culture, out of our environment. Furthermore, the economies of these new nations could not possibly absorb any mass migration of Negroes to their country. While they welcome in Africa individuals who have capital, skills and talents, they could not accept mass migration. We, therefore, are not in favor of any return to Africa. We will stay here in this country and fight for equality.

11. Oh, I think the U.N. can serve a valuable service in this regard, its service being largely one of education and public pressure, the pressure of public opinion throughout the world. We know for a fact, that people all over the world are aware of what happens here in the field of race relations. They are aware of every incident of violence that takes place in the South; they are aware of discrimination. Sometimes we feel that they do have inaccurate and distorted views about what is taking place because they are so far away from it. But their opposition to discrimination helps us a great deal. It gives us moral support and we are able then to point out that the situation should be changed, primarily because the present situation is wrong and ought to be adjusted so it is right. But it ought to be changed also because our nation is put in a very bad light abroad whenever there is discrimination here, and we simply cannot tolerate that discrimination

12. Ah, very good question! Segregation in the United States is one of the results of the long period of human slavery which existed until 1863 when the slaves were freed. Following the Emancipation Proclamation in that year there was a period of some twenty or thirty years of Reconstruction, so-called Reconstruction

That ended with the setting up of the pattern of segregation. Many of the white persons feel that they are superior to Negroes. This is particularly true in the South, where is has been felt necessary to keep a hard and fast pattern of separation of races, so as to avoid intermixture. This is historical, it is traditional, especially in the Southern part of the United States, but not exclusively in the South. I think it also ought to be pointed out that the problem is partly economic. Negroes and whites are competing for the same jobs in the South and whenever you find people competing for the same jobs, all sorts of differences rise up between them, and fears and suspicions.

13. Oh, I think so. Not as much as we would desire. The new Kennedy Administration is certainly doing more than the old Eisenhower Administration which preceded it. In my opinion, the Eisenhower Administration did very little if anything on this problem. What little it did was far too late, and too little. The Kennedy Administration has good instincts on this; I think their hearts are in the right place. However, we disagree on their timing, we want freedom and equality now, and we don't want to wait. The President feels that he can attack the problems through the Justice Department and through his own office, the Executive Department; in other words, through Executive Orders and through enforcement of Federal law through the Department of Justice. We feel that this is good as far as it goes, but it is also necessary to have further supervisory legislation -- we don't have enough and strong enough laws. The laws that exist should be strengthened. We would like the President to take much more rapid action along these lines. His position is that this is not the time to push for civil rights legislation. We think that there is no better time than the present. We feel that the President should issue an executive order outlawing discrimination in housing which is in any way subsidized by Federal funds. Such an order is on his desk, pending his signature, but to date he hasn't signed it. We hope that he will sign it soon, and are pressuring him to do so.

14. Well, I certainly hope so. The Administration, before it was elected, pledged that it would take strong and bold action to eliminate discrimination on grounds of race. That strong and bold action has become weaker as we go along. We would like to see it strengthened. There are some observers who indicate that the Administration will take a much firmer stand after the first four-year term. Then, it will not have to look forward to a political campaign for re-election and will be able to do what it thinks ought to be done. We hope we don't have to wait that long, because I must indicate that our people are not in a mood to wait; we have waitdd a hundred years.

15. Very good relationship. I myself was on the staff of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for two years as program director before coming here as National Director of CORE. I was one of the founders of CORE, back in 1942. We work closely with them, on the local level as well as the National level; many of our projects are joing projects. However, they do emphasize a different level. Their emphasis is on legal action through the courts, litigation and modeling for legislation, whereas our action is direct action of a nonviolent type. There are other organizations, such as the Urban League and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, with which we work closely on occasions. Here again, the emphasis is a different one. The Urban League is the social service approach, largely. This is a very valid approach and a valuable one, but it is not our approach. Our approach is direct action. The Southern Christian Leadership Conference, led by Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. uses nonviolent direct action as we do, their organization is regional, ours is national--they are a Southern organization. Theirs also is a group within the churches, the Negro churches in the South, the clergy largely Whereas CORE is a secular organization; we are not a religious organization. Though many of our members have a religious motivation, we do not limit it to religious motivation Some of our members have a humanitarian, or philosophical motivation which drives them to do something about our racial inequalities.

(Question about Black Muslims)

We have no relations with them, but I have debated against one of the Muslim leaders on one occasion and have scheduled now a debate the month after next with Malcolm X, who is the Muslim leader in New York. We disagree with them and they with us; we are an interracial organization and they an all black organization We believe in integration, they believe in separation, or more segregation. They believe in a black state, or a separate territory for the Negroes in this country and to us that would be suicidal.

(Question about nationalist movements)

Well, of course the Muslims are one of the nationalist movements, for their first objective, as I stated, is a black state. Failing in that, they want to go back to Africa, and get all the Negroes in American to go back to Africa. There are other nationalist groups as you indicate by the question, whose objective is immediately to go back to Africa. They have no mass support behind this idea. Even if the ships were standing in the harbor, ready to go back to Africa, there would not be many takers. It would mean pulling up roots and going to what is, in effect a strange, new land. This is our home here, and however great the identification with the emerging nations of Africa Africa is not our home. It is our land of origin, it is true, but it is not our home.

(Do you think that discrimination will end) . . . I think that in the next ten years we will see an end to segregation --- publicly supported segregation That would mean an end - in my generation - to segregation in all public places and all places that serve the public. We think that solving the problem of housing discrimination and employment discrimination will be a much longer term thing.

1. Our organization is the Congress of Racial Equality, which we call CORE, was founded in 1942 in Chicago, Illinois. On many occasions we have consulted with the Department of Justice in the Federal government and have informed them of our plans. We do not ask their permission, nor ~~they~~ can they tell us what to do; we decide on our own policies. As a matter of courtesy and as a matter of getting their support, we inform them of our plans in most situations. Now, as to our demands upon them, we urge the Department of Justice to take action; we pressure them, we push them. ~~Whenever~~ Whenever there is an incident of violence or denial of civil rights in a ~~Southern~~ southern town that we know about, I immediately contact the Department of Justice and urge them to investigate and to take appropriate action. We also ~~XXXXX~~ put pressure upon the President of the United States to take a firmer stand ~~upon~~ on these issues.

8. No, not really. We ~~are~~ are an incorporated organization in the United States so that our operation is strictly within the confines of this country. However, we do have a friendly relationship with some of the officials of the new nations in Africa -- correspond with them and when they are over here we consult with them. However, this is strictly informal.

9. Yes, I would try to. It will have to be a summary picture,

~~XXXXXXXXX~~

10. (cont'd) because this is an enormous problem. There are ~~probably~~ roughly twenty million Negro citizens in the United States. A little more than 1/10th than the total population.. Now, the great majority of the Negroes are in unskilled labor, though that situation is changing; more and more Negroes are getting education now and are intending to move to semi-skilled and skilled trades. A growing number of Negroes are entering the professions; there is a growing Negro middle-class in this country. Doctors, governmental officials, lawyers, and so forth. Now, roughly one million of the Negro workers in this country are organized in trade unions, not as separate Negro unions, but in integrated trade unions. There are many others that are not in unions, for example, the large number of farm workers and migratory workers are not organized in trade unions as yet, but plans are under way to seek their organization. Now, in housing, still the great bulk of ~~Negroes~~ Negroes are in rental housing, rather than ~~holding~~ owning their own homes. In most of our cities, the Negro population is confined, and I say confined because there is an area of the city which is occupied by Negroes, sort of a ghetto, you might say, and this is largely because of housing discrimination. It is difficult, and in some ~~places~~ cases impossible for a Negro to buy or to rent property outside of his ~~prescribed~~ prescribed area. Of course, we are trying very hard to change that kind of situation, with some successes. These ghettos, Negro sections of our large cities tend quickly to become slums because of the fact that there is so much congestion. The population is so great in these areas, and the area is so small in comparison. Now, in the schools, education among Negroes has in-

The Army is fighting discrimination as follows: up until the late 1940's there was segregation in the Armed Forces. Most of the troops who fought in World War ~~II~~ Pacific were segregated troops - Negro units fighting by themselves and white units fighting by themselves and so on. In the Navy, most of the Negroes were in segregated service, such as ~~messmen~~ mess attendants, working in the kitchen and so forth. However, following the war, Harry S. Truman issued an executive order outlawing discrimination in all of the Armed Forces. ~~However~~ Subsequent, investigation has indicated that this order is being enforced and that Negro and white troops are now integrated into the same units. This we look at with a great deal of pleasure. (Question) There are Negro officers; there is at least one Negro Brigadier General in the Army of the United States . . .

10. Well, ~~the problem~~ our solution is, of course, integration, where Negroes of the United States are citizens ~~like~~ like anyone else and ~~that~~ they should have the same rights and the same ~~priveleges~~ privileges. We do not ~~beleive~~ believe in enforced separation or segregation, we are opposed to the idea of a black state — and ~~incidnetally~~, we think it is a fantastic notion. We think that the solution to all of these problems is integration. In other words, treating each individual as an individual on the grounds of his own merits as an individual. We do not ~~have~~ ask that any certain percentage of Negroes be employed in businesses; we ask that people be employed in business according to their qualifications regardless of race and if this is done, we feel that Negroes will have their share of the jobs, and that up-rating and promotion in employment be without regard to race. We feel that housing should be available to anyone who is able to pay for it, regardless of his race, Negro or white, and that all places that serve the public, such as restaurants, theaters, hotels, and

~~SO~~. (cont'd). creased very rapidly, ~~in~~ since the Reconstruction days which followed the Civil War. The number of Negro college graduates has mushroomed, because there are scores of Negroes colleges in the South; some of them quite good colleges, others struggling because of inadequate funds and so forth. Since the Supreme Court ruling in 1954 on school segregation, we have found that a larger number of Negroes have entered state universities, previously for whites. Even in the South, and in the North this has been an old pattern, ~~Negroes~~ Negroes have been going to state universities and private colleges and universities. Still, as I have indicated earlier, only 7% of the Negro school children are in integrated schools. That means that 93% are still in segregated schools, Now this is very slow progress toward the enforcement of the Supreme Court order, We are doing all that we .

10, (cont'd) so forth-should serve the public without regard to dash race. This is the solution which we are looking for.

(Question about Negroes who want to go back to Africa) . . .

Well, there are a few. I ~~doubt~~ think that ~~they will admit that they~~ there are only a few, however, because most of the Negroes in this country ~~think~~ consider ~~of~~ themselves ~~as~~ Americans. This is their land, most of their parents were born here, and their grandparents were born here, as slaves, so ~~there~~ their culture is considerably different from the culture of Africa. I should point out, however, that there is a great and growing identification between the Negro in ~~the~~ this country and Africa. Cap. This identification began when the Gold Coast, the former Gold Coast, became independent ~~and became~~ Gh. Ghana, case the first of the former colonial areas to be independent. Before that time, Negroes in this country had the same stereotypes ~~on independence in~~ or mental image of Africa as most other Americans did. We thought ~~that~~ Gh. of Africa as being a backward land, the Dark Continent where a few people were riding around on the backs of elephants and throwing spears at each other. But with the independence of Ghana and the other nations, we saw that here were dignified people and civilised people and began to take increasing pride in our ancestry and our African heritage. There is this growing spirit of ~~identification~~ identification. I myself was in Africa on a tour, visiting 15 countries in ~~Sub-Sahara~~ Sub-Sahara (?) Africa and I found that the Africans ~~xxxxxxxxxxxxxx~~ received me and accepted me immediately as a brother. The feeling is mutual indeed. Yet we see no solution in a return of Negroes in this country to Africa. We would be ~~our~~ out of our culture, out of our environment. Furthermore, ~~xxx~~ the economies of these new nations could not possibly ~~xxxxx~~ afford absorb any mass migration of Negroes to ~~their~~ their country. While they welcome in Africa individuals who have capital, skills and talents, case they could not accept mass migration . We, therefore,

10. (cont'd). are not in favor of any return to Africa. We will stay here in this country and fight for equality.

11. Oh I think, the U.N. can serve a valuable service in this regard, case its service being largely one in education and public pressure, the pressure of public opinion throughout the world. We know for a fact, that people all over the world are aware of what happens here in the field of race relations. They are aware of every incident of violence that takes place in the South; they are aware of discrimination. Sometimes we feel that they do have inaccurate and distorted views about what is taking place because they are so far away from it. But, on their opposition to discrimination helps us a great deal. It gives us moral support and we are able then to point out that the situation should be changed, primarily because the present situation is wrong and ought to be adjusted so it is right. But it ought to be changed also because our nation is put in a very bad light abroad whenever there is discrimination here, and we can simply not tolerate that discrimination.

12. Ah, very good question! Segregation in the United States is one of the results of the long period of human slavery which existed until 1863 when the slaves were freed. Following the Emancipation Proclamation in that year there was a period of some twenty or thirty years of Reconstruction, so-called Reconstruction. That ended with the setting up of the pattern of segregation. Many of the white persons feel that they are superior to Negroes. This is particularly true in the South, where it has been felt necessary to keep a hard and fast pattern of separation of races, so as to avoid intermixture. This is historical, it is traditional, especially in the Southern part of the United States, but not exclusively in the South. I think it also ought to be pointed out that the problem is partly economic. Negroes and

12. (cont'd.) whites are competing for the same jobs in the South and whenever you find people competing for the same jobs ~~xxxxfxr~~ all sorts of differences rise up between them, and fears and suspicions.

13. Oh, I think so. Not as much as we would desire. The new Kennedy Administration is certainly doing more than the old Eisenhower Administration which preceded it. In my opinion, the Eisenhower Administration did very little if anything on this problem. What little it did was far too late, and too little. The Kennedy Administration has good instincts on this; I think their hearts are in the right place. However, we disagree we their timing, we want freedom and equality now, and we don't want to wait. ~~Where~~ The President feels that he can attack the problems through ~~his~~ the Justice Department and through his own office, the Executive Department. In other words, through Executive Orders and through enforcement of Federal Law through the Department of Justice. We feel that that is good as far as it goes, but it also necessary to have further ~~supervised~~ supervisory adminstration (?) -- we don't have enough and strong enough laws. The laws that exist shouddbe strengthened. We would like the President to take much more rapid action along these lines. His position is that this is not the time to push for civil rights ~~xxxxxxx~~ legislation.. We think that there is no better time than ~~then~~ the present. We feel that the President should issue an executive order ~~especially in housing~~ outlawing discrimination in housing, which is in any way subsidized by Federal funds. Such an order is on his desk, pending his signature, but to date he hasn't signed it. We hope that he will sign it soon, and are pressuring him to do so.

14. Well, I certainly hope so. The administration, before it was elected, ~~promised~~ pledged that it would take strong and bold action to eliminate discrimination on grounds of race. That strong and bold action has

14. (cont'd.) become weaker as we go along. We would like to see it strengthened. There are a ~~couple jurors~~ some observers who indicate that the adminstration will take a much firmer stand ~~after the first term~~ on. after the first four-year term.. Then it will not have to look forward to a political campaign for ~~direction~~ re-election and will be able to do what it thinks ought to be done. Per Cap. We hope we don't have to wait that long, because I must indicate that our people are not in a mood to wait. We have waited a hundred years.

15. Very good relationship. I ~~x~~ myself was on the staff of the Natianal Association for the Advancement of Colored People for two years as program director before coming here as National Director of Core. I was one of the founders of CORE, back in 1942. We work closely with them, on the local level as well as the national level; many of our project are joint projects. However, they do emphasize a different level. Their emphasis in on legal action through the courts, litigation and modeling for legislation, whereas our action is direct action of a nonviolent type. There are Other organizations, such as the Urban League and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, with which we work closely on occasions. Here again, the emphasis is a different one. The Urban League is the social service approach, largely. ~~Now~~ This is a very valid approach and a valuable one, but it is not our approach. Our approach is direct action. Thes Southern Christian Leadership Conference , led by Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., uses nonviolent direct action as we do, their organization is regional, ours is national -- they are a Southern organization. ~~There~~ Their also is a group within the churches, the Negro churches in the South, the clergy largely. Where as Core is a secular organization; we are not a religious organization. Though many of our members have a religious motivation, we do not limit it to seligious motivation. Per Cap. Some of our members 15 (contd.) have a humanitarian, or philosophical motivation which drives them to do something ~~with our~~ about racial inequalities.

(Question about Black Muslims)

We have no relations with them, but I have debated against one of the Muslim leaders on one occasion and have scheduled now a debate with Malcolm X, who is the Muslim leader in New York. We disagree with them and they with us; we are a interracial organization and they an all black organization. We believe in integration, they ~~beleive~~ believe in separation, or more segregation. They ~~beleive~~ believe in a black state, or a separate territory for the Negroes in this country and to us that would be suicidal.

(Question about nationalist movements)

Well, of course the Muslims are one of the nationalist movements, for their first objective, as I stated, is a black state. Failing in that, they want to go back to Africa, and get all the Negroes in America to go back to Africa. There are other nationalist groups as you indicate by the question, whose objective is immediately to go back to Africa. They have no mass support behind this idea, Even if the ships were standing in the harbor, ready to go back to Africa, there would not be many takers. It would mean pulling up roots and going to what is, in effect a strange land. This is our home here, and however great the identification with the emerging nations of Africa, Africa is not our home. It our land of origin, it is true, but it is not our home.

(Do you think that discrimination will end) . . . I think that in the next ten years we will see an end to ~~discrimination~~ segregation. --Publicly supported segregation. That would mean an end to segregation in all public places and all places that serve the public. We think that solving the problem of housing discrimination and employment discrimination will be a much longer term thing.

IV. Discipline

1. New York will provide 1000 Marshalls to be trained by the Guardians. These men will be our own internal police and they will maintain order. A special training school will be set up for them.
2. A group of 500 to 1,000 men will be assembled and trained in Washington, D.C. under CORE, SCLC, NAACP, SNCC, the leadership of whom will use Walkie-Talkies and bull horns for moving people and for any emergency.
3. The participating organizations should arrange for arm-bands or other identification for the people they bring to Washington. Or, if this is not feasible, the committee should agree on a common sv symbol to identify people who are part of our disciplined movement.

4. Police will be informed of everything that is planned for Washington that day so that they will be able to move people expeditiously Police will, therefore, understand what is on the March program and what is not. The Justice Department will be informed in advance of the routes of groups leaving Southern cities in order that these routes might be properly policed and groups protected. We will also inform Northern police officials - along major routes where large contingents will pass -- so that traffic may be organized.
5. Each bus will have a person designated "captain" who will be responsible for maintaining discipline and liaision with marshalls.
6. Constant liaison will be maintained among the marchers, bus captains, guardians and top leadership of the march, so that no decision will be made or emergency faced without consulting March Chairman.
7. Within the confines of the program in Washington -- as now set up-- the Committee must plan for a variety of activities (speakers, entertainment, meeting at Churches, lobbying, etc.) so that we are insured that the 100,000 participants will feel that their time in Washington was meaningfully spent and so that militance does not give way to uncertainty and frustration.
8. There should be creative use of ministers in March and at Rally to maintain peaceful spirit.

V. Certain Physical Problems to be cleared Pertaining to Washington

A meeting has been set for Thursday, July 11, with Chairman of

Washington CORE, NAACP, SCLC chapters, Norman Hill and Bayard Rustin to talk with district police and Federal agencies about the following:

1. Parade permit along Pennsylvania Avenue to Lincoln Memorial.
2. Permit for Rally at Lincoln Memorial.
3. Traffic problems on entering and leaving Washington.
4. The care the Justice Department needs to take to see that routes which the Southern delegations take to Washington are properly guarded and policed since a brutal incident could have repercussions in the Capital.
5. Arrangements for lobbying and special projects. (See FOR, National Council arrangements).

Further we need to clear with the Red Cross government agencies and our committee in Washington to fix responsibility for:

1. Stand-by ambulances.
2. First-aid stations
3. Nurses
4. Drinking water
5. Portable toilets.

VI. Utilization of the Resources of Major Civil Rights Organization.

Instructions should be sent by leaders of each organization to respective local affiliates, their highest officers and all field staff making march mobilization top priority, detailing mobilization procedures and urging participation in local committees. Such a memo should include plans for action and discipline in Washington, suggested means of transportation, while indicating that a concentrated effort should be made on raising funds for getting unemployed to Washington.

The importance of gathering large numbers of unemployed workers for the March on Washington should be emphasized, hopefully all groups would be able to donate a certain percentage of seats to unemployed. Local affiliates should be urged to approach city & state officials to obtain proclamations declaring August 28th Jobs and Freedom Day.

A special effort should be made by the field staff of each of the civil rights groups to mobilize people from the South and from areas in which Senators and Congressmen are opposed to or are not firmly committed to support civil rights legislation.

VII. Local March Committees

1. A policy statement should be written with the approval of the Chairman to define the nature of the march and outline the organizational and political relationship of local committees to the National organization.

The staff proposes the following basic formulations:

a. The March is a non-partisan political venture.

b. The National Committee and its Local affiliates do not accept either funds nor participation of organized political groups (Republican, Democratic, Socialist Communist, or any other)

c. Local affiliates must accept the policy and program of the National Chairmen in the execution of the project.

II. A guide for organizing local committees should be written which tells why we march, outlines plans for action in Washington, sets down March discipline and discusses how to fund-raise etc.

III. Local committees should include the major civil rights organization where they have affiliates, along with church, civic, fraternal, labor and youth representation.

IV. Focal points for local mobilizations should be:

a. The unemployed

b. The use of local rallies and demonstrations to point up the job crisis, to stimulate interest in the march, and to pressure Congressmen and Senators to vote for meaningful civil rights legislation. (It would be best if march chairmen, vice-chairmen, administrative committee, etc. could participate in an informal speakers bureau to be coordinated between National officers and Local affiliates.)

c. Securing in as many cities and states as possible Jobs and Freedom Day proclaimations for August 28.

V. In addition Local committees and National office must pay particular attention to such areas as Albany, Ga.; Gadsden and B'ham, Ala.; Jackson, Miss; along with protest areas in the upper South such as Danville, Va. and Cambridge, Maryland with emphasis on providing financial assistance for transportation. Immediate effort must be made in Eastern seaboard cities from Boston to North Carolina.

VI. A special letter should be sent immediately to key people in local cities asking them to begin laying groundwork for the formation of local committees.

VIII. YOUTH COMMITTEE

1. Structure: Major Negro rights organizations represented along with representatives of church, labor and student groups.

2. Aims: Nationally & Locally:

(a) to find unemployed youth and help them get to Washington

(b) to mobilize youth through mass meetings, parties, projects, etc. and in general to create enthusiasm.

(c) to provide, nationally & locally volunteers for work projects such as distributing leaflets, mailings, etc.

(d) to provide a limited number of aides for work in D.C. on August 28th

(e) to give parties, etc. for fund raising.

(f) to lobby for civil rights legislation in their home towns.

(g) to help plan youth participation in the Washington activities on August 28th.

IX. LABOR

1. Attempt to meet with William Schnitzler, Sec'y-Treas. of the AFL-CIO and chairman of the civil rights committee to ask him:

a. about the possibility of AFL-CIO person serving as chairman or vice-chairman of the march.

b. possibility of his proposing a resolution to the AFL-CIO urging all state federations, central labor bodies and affiliated to support and participate in the March and to declare, in the name of the AFL-CIO August 28th Jobs and Freedom Day.

c. To arrange for AFL-CIO participants to either wear armbands or buttons.

II. Obtain an interview with Walter Reuther, President IUD, UAW to:

a. ask him to be either a chairman or vice-chairman of the March

b. call upon all unions in the IUD to support financially and urge their membership to participate in March.

III. Organize a meeting with eight to ten particularly sympathetic trade union leaders in New York with A. Philip Randolph to

A. Raise funds for the March.

B. Solicit organizers to aid in mobilization

C. Urge them to take necessary steps to insure large participation from their membership

D. Designation of a labor committee to advise and counsel We hope a labor coordinator can be designated at this time.

IV. Send a letter to major unions urging them to:

A. mobilize membership participation in march

B. contribute toward expense of March

C. bring unemployed workers to Washington

V. Arrange special interviews with leaders of key unions such as, Packinghouse, ILG, USA, etc.

X. CHURCH COMMITTEE

I. A special church letter should be sent to all major denominations outlining March plans and asking for support in the form of participation and money. It is hoped that this may be done through the National Council of Churches.

II. A special follow-up letter should be sent to key churches asking each church to bring at least one busload of participants and unemployed to Washington.

III. A schedule and itinerary should be developed for Rev. Kilgore, (who will serve in the capacity of church coordinator and liaison with the National Council of Churches and Negro churches) for visiting key areas and encouraging participation.

IV. National and local church leaders should meet with Mr. Randolph and Rev. Kilgore, to implement the above suggestions in addition to urging church participation in local committees.

V. The F.O.R. and the National Council have already agreed to work on the following suggestions (if they are approved by March chairman)

1. a prayer vigil, conducted by priests, ministers and rabbis, and fasting during filibuster

2. Ministers, priests and rabbis to request audiences with Congressmen.

3. they will help to maintain effective and orderly parade to Lincoln Memorial.

In any event we are assured 1,000 ministers in robes in Washington for August 28th.

VI. A special effort to mobilize and establish liaison with the ministers of NAACP Branch Church Committees and members of the SCLC must be made.

VII. The help of the National Council of Churches and NAACP Branch Church Committees and the SCLC ministers should be enlisted to declare August 25th, jobs and Freedom Sunday with appropriate sermons preached throughout the country.

SUGGESTED MEMO (To Clarify Motivation of Unitarian Universalist Participation in The March on Washington on August 28)

MOU

The stated purpose of The March on Washington when it was first announced was to highlight the economic plight of the Negro and to support the civil rights movement and the need for civil rights legislation. The economic plight of the Negro, due to discrimination in employment, is one of the major concerns of the current Negro protest movement.

Based on this understanding of the purpose of The March and on the understanding that The March would be a peaceful demonstration in the nation's capital involving citizens from all states, the Commission on Religion and Race of the Unitarian Universalist Association voted at its meeting on July17 to endorse The March and to commend participation in it to our constituency.

Since then, the leaders of the six civil rights organizations organizing The March have proclaimed an eight-point program of specific proposals that would alleviate the economic plight of the Negro and help assure his human and civil rights. This specific platform lists proposals By the leadership of the Negro protest movement which they believe would help solve the racial problems facing our nation. This leadership recognizes that unanimity of support for any such program of specifics by all participating in The March cannot be obtained. Therefore, participation in the Washington Demonstration is not limited to those who support every item in the specific platform.

The participation in The March by the officials, ministers, and constituents of the Unitarian Universalist Association remains as the support of the original general purpose of The March and does not imply endorsement of every specific item in the later announced program.

Re: Proposed Program - Lincoln Memorial

Enclosed [redacted] is the enclosed letter dealing right to Mr. A. Philip Randolph and Mr. Bayard Rustin, his assistant. I have not heard from Mr. Randolph and assume he is busy.

Because we are having a full committee meeting on Friday at 2 P.M., it occurred to me that it might be useful to share this letter with the other five of the "Big Six."

Re: Proposed Program - Lincoln Memorial

This memo is addressed to you because of the statement which precedes the program recommendations presented to the full Committee of the March On Washington Movement on Friday, August 16th at the National Urban League, 14 East 48th Street, New York, N. Y.

That statement reads, "Because members of the program Committee were not able to meet for discussion, Mr. Randolph proposes that the full committee consider the following items for inclusion." Your program proposals follow the above statement.

Comments:

In light of the role of Negro women in the struggle for freedom and especially in light of the extra burdens they have carried because of the castration of our Negro men in this culture, it is incredible that no woman should appear as a speaker at the historic March on Washington Meeting at the Lincoln Memorial.

The suggestion that it is difficult to find a single woman to speak without causing serious problems vis-a-vis other women and women's groups should not be acceptable to any thoughtful Negro woman. In this connection, for example, it might well be pointed out that there are many Negro men leaders to whom each of the 'Big Six' Civil Rights Leaders is unacceptable. Such realities did not deter us in selecting the men. The same realities should not deter us in connection with the selection of one woman as speaker.

Re: Proposed Program - Lincoln Memorial

Had we, as I originally recommended placed the heads of Negro women's Organizations (Nat'l Assn' of Colored Women Clubs, Nat'l Council of Negro Women, Nat'l Assn' of Business and Professional Women, Women Fraternal Leaders, Recognized National Sorrorities leaders, etc.) on the National Committee with the six Civil Rights Leaders, there would have been a responsible group of women who could have discussed their proper presentation on the Lincoln Memorial program.

It is my conviction that these women would have understood and desired the appearance of each of the six Negro men on the program, for we have been their admirers and supporters. I am convinced also that we as women could have agreed on one woman to represent all of us.

Since the 'big six' have not given women the quality of participation which they have earned through the years, I would like to suggest the following:

1. That a Negro woman make a brief statement and present the other Negroes just as you have suggested that the Chairman might do.

2. The selection of such a woman could be achieved by calling together some of the leaders of women's Organizations and permit them to wrestle with the problem just as the Negro men did initially as they developed the beginnings of their new unity.

3. If time factors make this impractical, we might be forced to accept a less democratic procedure.

4. It has occurred to me that no woman or man could object to Mrs. Medgar Evers, the widow of our freedom fighter, for this role. Her performance on Television just after the murder of her husband proves her ability to make even one sentence memorable.

August 16, 1963

Re: Proposed Program - Lincoln Memorial

If for some reason the 'Big Six' is unwilling to select Mrs. Bevel for this role, it occurs to me that pride in our Militant Younger Generation might make it possible for the elder women to bow to youth and ask Mrs. Diane Nash Bevel to represent women and all youth in one person. Recently, Mrs. Bevel told the story of the Negro freedom struggle to the Council of Episcopal Bishops from across the country. She was perceptive, articulate and honest. She is a disciplined person and would observe the time allotted her. Mrs. Bevel is in essence the consummation of the quality of the past of Negro women and part of the hope of all of us for the future.

If you believe that a poll of Negro women should be made, I shall be pleased as the woman member of the Administrative Committee to accept that responsibility.

I hope that this memorandum will receive careful consideration and submit it in the belief that my service to the "March Idea," since you suggested it early in 1963 when you proposed the March For Jobs in October has been of the quantity and quality which merits reasonable recognition of my proposal.

Anna Arnold Hedgeman

P. S. You can reach me at AU 1-3210 or RI 9-2200. I should like to hear from you quickly, since the printing of the program must occur soon. I have not yet submitted this memo to any other member of the 'six six' or the additional four who make-up the 'big ten'.

Who is sponsoring the March to Washington for Jobs and Freedom?

The official call for the March was issued on July 12 by the following national leaders:

James Farmer, National Director of the Congress of Racial Equality

Rev. Martin Luther King, President of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference

John Lewis, Chairman of the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee

A. Philip Randolph, President of the Negro American Labor Council

Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People

Whitney Young, Executive Director of the Urban League

Labor and religious organizations are being asked to join with the above in sponsoring the March. A full list will be issued in due course.

What is the purpose of the March?

The purpose of the March is, by a massive, peaceful, and democratic demonstration in the nation's capital, to provide evidence of the need for the Federal Government to take effective and immediate action to deal with the national crisis of civil rights and jobs that all of us, Negro and white, are facing.

What are the demands of the March?

I The Civil Rights demands include:

Passage by the Congress of effective and meaningful civil rights legislation in the present session, without filibuster.

Immediate desegregation of the nation's schools.

An end to police brutality directed against citizens using their constitutional right of peaceful demonstration.

II The Job demands include:

A massive Federal Public Works Program to provide jobs for all the unemployed, and Federal legislation to promote an expanding economy.

A Federal Fair Employment Practices Act to bar job discrimination by Federal, State, and Municipal governments, and by private employers, contractors, employment agencies and trade unions.

Broadening of the Federal Fair Labor Standards Act to include the uncovered areas of employment where Negroes and other minorities work at slave wages; and the establishment of a national minimum wage of not less than $2.00 per hour.

Who is invited to participate in the March?

Politically the March is non-partisan; that is, neither funds nor organized participation will be accepted from political parties. We expressly reject the aid or participation of totalitarian or subversive groups of all persuasions. Organizational participation is invited from only the established civil rights organizations, from major religious and fraternal groups, and from labor unions. Such groups are invited to form committees, to sponsor the March, and to send delegations to Washington in their own names.

Other groups are invited to publicize the March, to raise funds for it and to send groups to Washington under the banner of the March on Washington itself. These would include, for example, student and youth organizations, settlement houses, committees and other organizations of the unemployed, professional organizations (doctors, teachers, etc.), and Greek Letter organizations.

What literature is available for publicizing the March?

The National Office of the March will provide you, free of charge, with as many copies as you need of the following:

THE MARCH CALL

This folder, entitled "The Time is Now," gives detailed information on the aims and sponsorship of the March.

LEAFLET

One-page flyer entitled "To All Americans: Join the March for Jobs and Freedom," designed for mass distribution.

Additional copies of this organizing manual are also available. Other material will be put out by the March Office and sent to you as it appears.

What are the immediate tasks of participating organizations and groups?

1. PUBLICIZE THE MARCH

Our time is short! Our first and most urgent task is to make the March known. Get to the press, to church services, to union meetings; take our literature into the streets, distribute it outside movie houses, at the ball game. Make the March known.

2. ORGANIZE TRANSPORTATION

Our time is short! We have to get thousands of people to Washington on short notice. Set up your transportation committee at once and have a hardworking and reliable person head it up. Investigate carefully the possibility of bringing your group by train – it is a little more expensive, but special rates are available, and the more who come by rail, the less congestion there will be on the roads. If you come by bus make sure that you have a written contract issued in advance and that the bus company has a group insurance policy in effect that covers all members of the group.

Coordinate your activities with other groups in your area. It will, in some cases, save time if several groups can make joint transportation arrangements.

The National Office will not make transportation arrangements for local groups. Notify the National Office by mail of the progress of your work in organizing your March groups.

3. ORGANIZE THE UNEMPLOYED FOR THE MARCH

It will serve no purpose to hold a March for Jobs and Freedom if unemployed people are not able to come and add their voices and presence to the demonstration. Organizations must make it a main task to get the news of the March to the unemployed and to encourage the unemployed, where possible, to establish their own March Committees.

Organizations may further guarantee the presence in Washington of the unemployed by (a) assigning a given number of seats in buses and trains to the unemployed, and (b) raising funds to pay for these assigned seats. Make it your goal to send one unemployed person to Washington for every three who can pay their way. We hope that not a bus will go, nor train start, that does not have its quota of the unemployed.

If there are no unemployed in your area, raise funds for the transportation of unemployed persons elsewhere, and transmit the money to the National Office (see under National Office below).

4. HAVE THE COMMUNITY RECOGNIZE AND SET ASIDE THE DAY

Ask the Governor of your State, and the City Fathers, to proclaim August 28 as FREEDOM DAY. Ask ministers and rabbis to offer special prayers August 24-25 for the success of the March. Approach employers with the request that they close their plants on August 28 and grant workers paid vacation on that day in honor of the Centennial of the Emancipation Proclamation and the Civil Rights movement.

How should funds be sent to the National Office of the March?

While your fundamental task is mobilizing people to Washington, bear in mind that the National Office has to meet heavy expenses in preparation for the March. Any funds that may be sent by local organizations for this purpose will be welcome. In addition you are asked to solicit, where possible, special contributions to defray the expenses of unemployed persons, which funds we will administer at our discretion in accordance with need. Make your checks payable to MARCH ON WASHINGTON.

We ask you also to sell a March Button that will help publicize the March, and to transmit the proceeds to us. The button is 2 1/2" in diameter, emblem is a black and white handclasp, and the title, March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom. August 28. Price of each button is 25 cents. Order from the National Office. Send checks, not cash. Shipping costs will be borne by the Office.

How will the March be organized in Washington?

All persons coming to Washington, whether by bus, train or plane, who are being sent by organizations, must be under the leadership of captains appointed locally before departure. (Private cars create confusion and traffic problems, their use is discouraged.) Captains will be responsible for the group en route and in moving around Washington. Further details on the role and function of the March leadership at this level will be forthcoming in the next manual.

The March will provide its own police to maintain order and internal security among the marchers in Washington. These marshals are specially trained and will be in constant contact with captains and marchers. The Washington police and the U.S. Government have promised full cooperation in controlling traffic, maintaining order, providing comfort and first-aid stations for the marchers.

Marchers from the 50 States and the District of Columbia will be assigned specific assembly points where they are to gather on arrival in Washington.

Further information about these assembly points will be provided in due course. All persons are expected to report at the assembly points not later than 10:00 A. M. on August 28th.

Meetings will be held at the Assembly points – in most cases they will be churches – for two purposes: 1) To meet with Congressmen and Senators, who will be invited to meet with the delegations at the Assembly points and to report their positions on pending legislation and to answer questions from their constituents. 2) To select representatives who will proceed to Capitol Hill seeing those legislators who did not respond to our invitation to meet with their constituents. These representatives will be accompanied by representatives of the six civil rights organizations sponsoring the March.

A massive demonstration will be held at the White House. A statement will be issued making clear to the President, the Congress, and the Nation our view that the job problem for Negro citizens cannot be solved unless the problems of all the unemployed are tackled. The delegation will call for the immediate inauguration of a Federal Public Works Program adequate to cope with the deepening economic crisis.

Later the Marchers will assemble for a parade down Pennsylvania Avenue. The parade will dramatize our demands for Jobs and Civil Rights and will commemorate Medgar Evers of the NAACP, William Moore of CORE, Herbert Lee of SNCC, and the thousands of nameless heroes of the freedom movement who have given their lives in the struggle for full equality. The procession shall sing "We Shall Overcome" to the accompaniment of bands and choirs for the entire line of march.

All placards to be used on the March will be provided by the National Office.

No other slogans will be permitted.

In the afternoon there will be a mass meeting at the Lincoln Memorial to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation and to voice our needs and demands.

What arrangements are there for staying in Washington and for refreshments?

THIS IS A ONE-DAY DEMONSTRATION.

The size and scope of this March make it imperative that all participants come in and go out on the same day - August 28th. All organizations are urged to see to it that participants come provided with box lunches and suppers, and especially that groups furnish themselves with ample water. You are strongly advised not to bring children under 14; children over 14 should be accompanied by a parent or guardian.

In the event of a filibuster before August 28th, March machinery will be used to send daily waves of approximately 1000 people to Washington for the duration of the filibuster. If the filibuster has not begun by August 28th, March participants will be asked to return to Washington at the time of the filibuster in waves of 2000.

WHY WE MARCH

The historic March called for August 28 of this year raises demands for speedy action on two fronts, civil rights and jobs. It insists that only national action through the Federal Government, can achieve full and speedy integration of public facilities and schools, the end of police brutality, and full equality before the law. It underlines the gravity of the economic crisis, with at least five million people out of work; and insists that only swift Federal action through a massive public works program, can eliminate this threat to national security.

The March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom that will be held on August 28th will mark a new stage in the struggle against the brother evils of American society: racial discrimination and economic deprivation. Never before have such numbers of citizens, of all races and for a wide range of purposes, united in direct action at the seat of the Federal Government to protest their enemies and to inspire their friends. Time is heavy with proofs that there is no substitute for the personal involvement of people who are outraged or oppressed by social wrongs; and the solutions to the great wrongs that affect us all are in a large measure in the hands of the Federal Goverment.

Thus we call on all Americans to join us in Washington:

to demand the passage of effective civil rights legislation which will guarantee to all

... decent housing

... access to all public accommodations

... adequate and integrated education

... the right to vote to prevent compromise or filibuster against such legislation to demand a federal massive works and training program that puts all unemployed workers, black and white, back to work to demand an FEP Act which bars discrimination by federal, state and municipal governments, by employers, by contractors, employment agencies and trade unions to demand a national minimum wage, which includes all workers, of not less than $2.00 an hour.

The National Council of Churches of Christ in America has announced that August 28, the day of the March, will be a Church Assembly in Washington. A special printed folder has been distributed to thousands of churches throughout the Country explaining the Christian purposes of the March and the reasons for church involvement in it.

> "We need," says the National Council, "thousands of Christians, white and Negro in Washington on August 28. Put everything else aside and COME."

A similar position has been taken by the Catholic Church. A pastoral letter read in Catholic churches August 11 from Cardinal Spellman urges a similar involvement in the March upon American Catholics.

Jews as well as Christians of all denominations have responded to the call to come to Washington. The organization of Methodist and Lutheran Marches to facilitate involvement may be mentioned; and in many areas the churches and synagogues have set up their own coordinators to facilitate involvement of their congregations.

Doctors, dentists, nurses and health workers are participating as part of a medical group. This will make clear to the nation that health workers stand solidly with clergy, labor, and the unemployed in the effort to secure freedom and jobs for all. The medical groups will each march under their own banners (caducei). Further information may be obtained from Medical Committee for Civil Rights, P.O. Box 499, Madison Square Station, New York 10, N.Y. or 4 5660.

NEWS OF THE MARCH

News is pouring in to us of March preparations being made around the country. Committees to publicize the March and arrange transportation and recruitment have sprung up literally in hundreds of communities. City and country-wide committees are coordinating these activities. We include a list of people in different States who are organizing for the March, with their addresses, area codes, and phone numbers.

In the South plans are under way for a Freedom Train from Tallahassee, Florida on August 27, and will travel along the east coast to Washington, picking up people as it goes. Those desiring passage on this train should call Rev. Abraham Woods, 334 Auburn Avenue Atlanta, Georgia. 404 524 1378. Stops at Brunswick and Savannah, Georgia, and Charleston, S.C.

Floyd McKissack, National Chairman of CORE, reports that he has eleven buses ready to leave from North Carolina, and will fill many more before August 28. Robert Moses, director of voter registration in Mississippi, is certain that he can get more than 1,000 people from Mississippi to participate in the March if there is money to pay for transportation (those of you who have not sent funds to the National Office, please note.)

News reaches us of preparations for the turning out of many thousands of people from Baltimore and Washington, D. C. In the latter city government authorities have advised departmental heads to give their employees the day off where possible.

In the mid West two trains anda number of planes have been chartered from Chicago, and one train is scheduled to come from Detroit. Busloads will arrive in Washington from Cincinnati, Cleveland, and Youngstown, Ohio; from Kansas City, Kansas, and Kansas City, Missouri; and from Louisville, Kentucky.

In New York our smallest calculations include that at least thirty or forty thousand people will leave the city by bus, plane, and train. Mayor Wagner has declared August 28 Jobs and Freedom Day. City employees have permission to take the day off, presumably with pay.

To: All Local Groups
From: Sy Posner, Information Officer

National press, radio and TV coverage of the March has been tremendous, but there should be more publicity on a local level.

Keep your local media (including local weeklies and dailies, church bulletins, radio and TV stations, etc.) posted on your activities. Send them such information as:

1.- Names and addresses of all committee officers and members of all groups participating in the March.

2.- Full details (who, what, when, where, why, and how) on rallies, fund-raising drives, telephone chains, letter-writing campaigns -- and anything else you are doing to promote the March.

3.- Where people in your area can call to get transportation to Washington, including the cost, time of departure and return, and other pertinent information.

4.- How many buses, trains, planes and cars your area is sending to Washington. Information on any people planning to walk to Washington is of particular interest to the press and to the national office of the March.

No information (let me repeat) no information on the plans or operations of the March on a national level, except for printed material you receive from the national office, may be given to the press without clearance from the national office. I am sure that you will understand that this directive is designed to prevent conflicting or out-dated stories. Rule of thumb: refer such requests to the national office.

Your local press would appreciate receiving your stories typed and double-spaced. Keep your stories as clear and simple as possible. Start off your stories with the essential facts -- What is happening (appointment of committee, rally drive, etc.); where the event is taking place; when, including date and hour; why (to raise funds, to sign up Marchers, etc.); who, with titles and addresses; and how.

Send carbon copies of your press releases to the national office. A number of coast-to-coast TV stations, magazines and others are interested in getting local stories about this grass-roots movement. We will keep them posted on what you are doing.

We would also appreciate clippings of stories that appear in your local papers.

See you in Washington on the 28th!

Dear Congressman_____(or Senator_____):

The President's Civil Rights Bills have been submitted to Congress. Although they fall short of all that is desired, they are, nevertheless, a great step forward, and I hope you will do all in your power to see that an effective bill is passed.

The bills should be strengthened by including a provision for an FEPC and one givign power to the Attorney General to initiate legal proceedings in all cases in which civil rights have been violated.

Sincerely yours

WHAT YOU CAN DO NOW

The importance of speed in undertaking a civil rights legislative action program cannot be overestimated. Visits and communications to all Congressmen and Senators NOW may prevent weakening compromises and give the pro-civil rights forces a fighting chance to strengthen the bill.

The President's bills are wholly necessary if freedom and equality are to win out in America. Yet it is far from an extreme or an all-encompassing measure. The bills should be strengthened by at least including a provision for an FEPC and one giving power to the Attorney General to institute on his own initiative legal proceedings in all cases in which civil rights have been violated.

Time is short! It is urgent that thousands of communications (letters, telegrams, abd personal visits) be sent at once to Representatives and Senators urging them to support and strengthen the President's Civil Rights Bills.

We would suggest a program such as this:

1) APPOINT A LETTER-WRITING CHAIRMAN [omit.] and send his name and address to CORE headquarters, (Use enclosed card.)

2) LETTER-WRITING CHAIRMAN

a) HOLDS A MEETING to explain need for everyone to write individual letters to ~~to communicate, as individuals, with~~ their Representatives and Senators, ~~and suggest things present to do so~~. (Have stationery at meeting, if possible.).

b) LINES UP as many ~~individuals~~ persons as possible as special letter-writing AIDES.

c) ASSIGNS TO EACH AIDE A SPECIFIC ORGANIZATION to contact - religious, ethnic, fraternal, labor, business and professional groups should be assigned. The organizations should be urged to conduct letter writing campaigns. The more communications legislators receive from different groups interested in civil rights, the better.

3) At all chapter MEETINGS or any other meetings you might attend, be sure that a PLEA FOR LETTERS is issued and procedures outlined. (Extra copies of material enclosed.)

4) If you prefer to TELEGRAPH, the Western Union Telegraph Company has recently fixed a special 75 cent price for messages to Congressmen and Senators.

5) SET A DEADLINE OF AUGUST 18th. That gives us three weeks to organize and make our views felt. If necessary, be prepared to continue the pressure till adequate bills are passed.

6) DISTRIBUTE THROWAWAYS (see enclosed) at meetings, at subways, or in other key places. A table with stationery might be set up at the same time - a sound truck would be helpful.

Message of James Farmer, CONGRESS OF RACIAL EQUALITY National Director, from the Donaldsonville Jail, Donaldsonville, Louisiana, to the March on Washington for JOBS and FREEDOM, August 28, 1963

From a South Louisiana Parish Jail I salute the March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom. Two hundred and thirty-two Freedom fighters jailed with me in Plaquemine Louisiana also send greetings to you.

I wanted with all my heart to be with you in Washington on this great day. My imprisoned brothers and sisters wanted to be there too! I cannot come out while they are still in, for their "Crime" was the same as mine--demanding FREEDOM NOW! And most of them will not come out until the charges are dropped or their sentences served. I cannot let the heroic Negro citizens of Plaquemine down by leaving them now while they are behind bars. I know that you will understand my absence.

So we cannot be with you in body, but we are with you in spirit. By marching on Washington, your tramping feet have spoken the message--the message of our struggle in Louisiana--You have given voice to the Struggles of our people in Mississippi and Alabama, too, and in California and Chicago and New York. You have come from all over the nation and in one mighty voice you have spoken to the nation. You have also spoken to the world. You have said to the world by your presence here, as our succesful Direct Action in numberless cities has said, that in an age of thermo-nuclear bombs, violence is outmoded as a solution to the problems of men. It is a truth that needs to be shouted loudly, and no one else anywhere in the world is saying it as well as are American Negroes through their non-violent direct action demonstrations.

The tear gas and the electric cattle prods of Plaquemine, Louisiana, like the fire hoses and dogs of Birmingham, are giving to the world a tired and ugly message of terror and brutality and hate. Theirs is a message of pitiful hopelessness from little and unimaginative men to a world that fears for its life. It is not they to whom the world is listening today. It is to America's Negroes.

Our direct action method is bringing down barriers all over America---in jobs, in housing, in schools in public places, is giving hope to the world, to peoples who are weary of warfare and who see extinction hovering over the future like an ominous mushroom cloud.

If we can solve our problems, and remove the heavy heel of oppression from our necks with our methods, then man has no problems anywhere in the world which cannot be solved without death.

So we are fighting not only for our rights and our freedom; we are fighting not only to make our nation safe for the democracy it preaches. We are fighting also to give our old world a fighting chance for survival. We are fighting to give millions of babies yet unborn--black, white, red, yellow and brown--a chance to see day and to carry on the battle to remove the night of hate, hunger and disease from the world.

You, thus, are at the center of the world's stage. Play well your roles in your struggle for freedom in the thousands of communities from which you come throughout the land. Act with valor and with dignity, and without fear. Some of us may die, like William L. Moore and Medgar Evers, but our war is for life, not for death, and we will not stop our demand for "FREEDOM NOW." We will not slow down. We will not stop our militant, peaceful demonstrations. We will not come off the streets until we can work at any job befitting our skills any place in the land. We will not stop our marching feet until our kids have enough to eat and their minds can study and range wide without being cramped in JIM CROW schools. Until we can live whereever we choose, and can eat and play with no closed doors blocking our way. "We will not stop till the dogs stop biting us in the South, and the Rats stop biting us in the North." We will not stop till the heavy weight of centuries of oppression is removed from our backs, and like proud men everywhere we can all stand tall again.

Statement by James Farmer, National Director of the Congress of Racial Equality

I thank you gentlemen for the opportunity to appear here to express my views and the views of the Congress of Racial Equality on this proposed legislation.

Although the burden of the current protests throughout the nation has been in the area of visible segregation, such as public accommodations and education, there is no doubt that one of the most sinister forms of discrimination in the United States is the historic and aggressive segregation of Negroes from equal employment opportunities throughout our economy. There is no chicken or egg in this fight for freedom. Equal employment is an empty victory without a base of integrated education. Access to public facilities is a token without a pocket-full of money to use them. We must approach this incredibly difficult national question on all fronts simultaneously.

We have characterized this struggle in moral terms and that characterization has been the spine and the arms and the heart of the movement until now.

I would like this opportunity to talk to you, however, in much more pragmatic and direct terms. America has a sad and spotty history of employment discrination. The State of New York has generally excellent laws on the books, some since 1946, providing equality in employment for the State's non-white citizens. Yet, at this very moment, close to a thousand people have accepted the penalty and discipline of jail in order to achieve actual integration on state and city-supported construction projects. The difference in New York is obviously enforcement--the difference is obviously the will of public officials, state and federal legislatures, to replace picket lines with serious and conscientious attention to their responsibilities.

So far, we have been unable to achieve this even in the state of New York.

If we are in trouble in New York, we are obviously in trouble in Mississippi, and if we are in trouble in Mississippi, no one can deny that the nation is in trouble throughout the world.

This legislation does indeed make an important federal stride toward achieving better enforcement of its high-minded and eloquent principles. As I read this new legislation, various Commissions will be able to initiate appropriate investigations, remedial orders, and orders of disqualification of contracts on a federal level without waiting for the inevitable defeat on the level of the state. This commission system of rerouting enforcement around hostile state authorities is absolutely imperative if we are going to have legislation that does more than gather dust.

Now let's talk some frank and hard facts. As a result of segregation and discrimination in employment, housing, education, voting and public accomocations, the American Negro is in a tightly padlocked economic and social box. How does he unlock it?----how does he get out? Most recently he has resorted to direct, non-violent actions.

The proof in employment alone, item:

Item a. The non-white worker suffers a severe occupational disadvantage. In 1960, 45 percent of the non-white males were working in low wage, dead-end jobs as laborers or in the service industries. The proportion of whites in these industries was 13 percent. Among women workers, 40 percent of the non-whites were found in private household employment (domestics) compared with 6.1 percent for their white counterparts. And during the entire decade from 1950 through 1960 hardly any progress was made in eliminating this imbalance.

Item b. In 1960 the average Negro family earned 55 percent of what the average white family earned. This percentage has gone up exactly 1 percent point in the ten year period from 1950 through 1960.

Item c. For 1962, unemployment fell heaviest on the non-white worker. The jobless rate for non-white was about double that of white workers (11% compared with 5%). Non-white teenage boys and girls had the highest rates of any population group (21% and 21% respectively). The rates for white youngsters was high -- around 12% - ...but far lower than those of non-whites in the same age group. A large disparity also persisted among adults. For example, the unemployment rate for non-white men 25 years of age and over was 2½ times that for white men in the same age group.

Non-white workers accounted for 22% of the jobless in 1962 as contrasted with 20% in 1957. They were 28% of the very long-term unemployed compared with 24% five years earlier, although still representing only 11% of the labor force.

Item d. During the 1960's, 13 million additions will be made to the labor force. The present trends of automation show destruction of 1.4 million jobs a year. Unless a vast national effort is made to create employment, the unemployment figures by 1970 will be staggering.

The impact of this on the nonwhite worker is already clear. When opportunity declines for whites, it stops altogether for the Negro. Between 1956 and 1962 the only area where significant expansion of Negro employment took place was in government. Approximately 85% of the increase in nonwhite employment during this period was in the public economy.

Between 1960 and 1962, there was an increase in government employment of nonwhites of approximately 200,000. For the economy as a whole, employment for nonwhites rose by about 100,000, indicating that in the private economy, there was an actual loss of nonwhite jobs.

NOW WHAT DOES THIS MEAN?

Place yourself in the following postures and you will begin to grasp the meaning in the human and tangible terms of a man's life and livlihood.

You are an unemployed Negro farmhand, facing a declining need for farm labor, your family supported by your wife's earnings as a domestic and you cannot get a job as an apprentice in order to learn a new and more economically feasible trade.

You are a Negro construction worker in New York City. You have "shaped up" every morning for four weeks at a city sewer-construction project on Delancy Street .....hundreds of white men are hired instantly and finally when you do work, you are placed on a segregated work gang.

You are a Negro college graduate forced into hod-carrying in Chicago because a majority of big business management training programs callously exclude Negroes.

You are a Negro writer, a Negro accountant, a Negro teacher, a skilled Negro drill-press operator....and you are out of work only because of the color of your skin!

We must have strong, reasoned legislation to combat these inequities and we must have even stronger committments that such legislation will be enforced. Only in this way can we begin to invoke the image of our nation as truly brave and truly free.

Gentlemen.....our hearts are open....our hands are extended. We do not want the wash of blood and anguish that some predict. But we do want our simple freedoms... ...to live.....to learn.....to work. And if the cost of that freedom will maim us; then we accept that disfurment. If the cost of that freedom is to lose our own individual freedom in the jails of New York, New Orleans, Jackson, Mississippi or Los Angeles.....then that cost will be paid, in full.

MARCH ON WASHINGTON FOR JOBS AND FREEDOM

AUGUST 28th, 1963

MARSHAL'S MANUAL

Informational Guidelines for Bus, Plane, and Train Captains

Dear Volunteer Marshal for Jobs and Freedom:

August 28th will become as historic a date as July 4, 1776, January 1, 1863, and May 17, 1954.

Your role in this unprecedented event will be a unique one. For all of us who are dedicated to eradicating the twin evils of discrimination and economic deprivation--which have long robbed all Americans, Negroes and Whites, of human dignity, self-respect and freedom--look to you to create an atmosphere conducive to the most effective expression of our demand for freedom now.

We are confident that every participant in the March intends to conduct himself in keeping with the great dignity and historic character of the event. But upon your shoulders especially there falls the heavy responsibility for maintaining, by your own example and leadership, the order and nonviolent discipline that will write this March, and your role in it, in the annals of history.

We look forward to seeing you at our Headquarters for Marshals--located at 14th Street and Constitution Avenue, the morning of August 28, 1963.

Sincerely,

A. PHILIP RANDOLPH

Dear Mr. Farmer:

We are participating in the March On Washington.

After the March may I have an appointment with you to discuss the possibility of combining our efforts in getting a minimum wage for domestic workers.

It is necessary to bring the plight of domestic workers to the forefront through organization, training and legislaton in order that we may raise the dignity and create a minimum wage for domestic workers throughout the nation.

Yours truly,

Marion O. Jones

NYC Committee Set Up To Aid Domestic Workers

The New York Committee to Aid Stranded Domestic Workers was set up by Atty. Marion Jones who is its executive director with offices at 209 W. 125 St., New York City.

The program has expanded since its founding in June, 1962 to include, in addition to aiding domestics who were stranded in New York City, efforts toward legislation for $1.25 per hour; a five day week; a training school for domestics; disability insurance; recreational centers; inclusion of federal and state legislation to protect these workers; shorter work hours per day and raising the status of the domestic worker.

Committee Members

The Committee also plans to collect back wages for domestics; upgrading domestics to other occupations; a training manuel and general education programs.

Other members of Atty. Jones' Committee include Dr. Aaron O. Wells, Mrs. Jessie M. Collins, Rev. Charles Warren, John Nailor; Thomas Hocutt, Thomas Downs, Ann Johnson, Mrs. Virginia Wells, Mrs. Emma Mears, Nathaniel Scott, Robert Jones, John B. Pharr, Jr., Atty. Milton Tingling and Miss Ella Dixon.

Many Complaints

Typical of many girls who come to the offices of the Committee is that of Alice who wrote a friend back home.

"I came here through the . . . Employment Agency. I was assigned to work as a domestic in a home in Ellenville."

"The agency that brought me here told me that I was to get $40.00 per week. After I got here, I was told by this woman that she pays $25.00 a week and that I owe her $48.000 for the job plus my fare up here and it will be four weeks before I will get a week's salary."

Barefooted Children

"My daughter Mamie is going to graduate in June and I came up here to try to work to help buy her things and now I am in an awful fix. It is altogether different after I got here.

"I could not get fare back home. I left three children barefooted, besides other bills. Here I work from 8 to 8 p.m. Now I want to leave here and look for something else, but I can't. My luggage is being held by my employer."

Domestics Misinformed

Alice's letter to a friend back home is just one of the many thousands of similar letters that are being sent yearly by domestics stranded throughout the State of New York on false promises, misleading advertising, and unscrupulous employment agency operators in suburban communities throughout the State, Mr. Jones stated.

"Although the 1958 Employment Agency Law gave specific protective provisions for women brought to New York for domestic work, requiring the agencies to write the women of the nature of the work, their duties, wages, and fees they will have to pay, this is not being carried out in this State. Moreover, the problem of domestic employment is not just a New York State problem, but a national one," he added.

Terms Defined

"What is a domestic worker? What is a recruited domestic worker and what is a stranded domestic worker", Mr. Jones was asked.

"The domestic worker that lives and works local in her city or town we call a domestic worker. A recruited domestic worker is one who is induced to leave her home state to work in another state. A stranded domestic worker is one who may be in either of the above categories but because of conditions beyond her control is left without funds, shelter or transportation to return to her home state; or to obtain protection locally. That is why we say this problem is not only a local problem; but a national one too and requires federal legislation," he explained.

44% of Negro Women

"The 1960 federal census reported that approximately 44 per cent of the Negro women employed in the nation were employed as domestics. At sometime or other, just about every Negro family in the nation has had a member working in domestic employment.

"While labor unions are arguing for a 40 hour week, and in many cases for a 35 hour and less, domestic workers are struggling on often as much as 72 hours a week, with no unemployment insurance or minimum wage, under slave-like conditions, with no one to turn to for help. Quite often they toil long, arduous hours in the homes of labor leaders and government officials who argue for labor's rights," he further pointed out.

No Security

"Today in many communities the job of the domestic worker is like that of an 18th century slave, where many live and work is human misery, are overcharged and misrepresented, with no real enforcement of a minimum wage, regulations governing compensation, social security, regular hours or any unemployment insurance.

"It was as a result of my working with the N.A.A.C.P. and Dr. Hilda Fortune and Dr. Jean Noble of the Urban League that the New York Committee to Aid Stranded Domestics was organized.

15,000 Come to N.Y.

"Daily complaints came to the offices of the Urban League and to me as former Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Stranded Domestics. Also I received information from government agencies, of the widespread abuses heaped on the estimated 15,000 domestics who migrate to New York each year who are forced to work under slave-like conditions, including excessive charging of fees, withholding luggage and personal belongings, refusing to provide food and lodging placing of eight to ten girls in a room, paying weekly wages of $5.00 and offering plaid stamps for human misery," he stated.

3 Point Program

"We have begun a three-fold program to lift the status and dignity of domestics through improved legislation, stronger enforcement of existing state regulations by the State Labor Department, and opening a training school to give help to stranded domestics, better training so they can command higher wages, and training for different jobs other than domestics. Our program also includes possible seeking of federal manpower retraining funds.

UI-NAACP Aid

As part of our present immediate program, we are working with Dr. Hilda Fortune and Dr. Jean Noble of the Urban League and Herbert Hill of the N.A.A.C.P. and other community groups, we are appealing for complete support from all phases of the community for support of Senator Thomas La Verne's bill, Print 1560, Introductory No. 1540, which will insure unemployment insurance benefits to domestic employees who earn $400.000 or more in any one quarter, to help prevent them from being further taken advantage of by unscrupulous persons and agencies." Mr. Jones emphasized.

Control Needed

"We are also urging support from all interested groups and persons of Governor Rockefeller's bill which would provide for uniform state control of private employment agencies, and greatly help in protecting the out-of-state recruited domestic.

The New York Commitee to Aid Stranded Domestics urges you to send memos, letters and telegrams now to your elected State Senators and Assemblymen to demand passage of these important pieces of legialaton.

Public Asked To Help

Your full support now will go a long way in helping to end this 20th Century slavery still going on right here in our own New York State.

What are the New York Laws with reference to employment agencies? What are the rights of domestic workers? What are the problems which involve the community with 45 per cent of the Negro women being domestic workers? These and other questions will be discussed in this column next week.

If you have any questions write to the Committee to Aid Stranded Domestics.

THE TIME IS NOW

A CALL

TO AMERICANS, BLACK AND WHITE TO JOIN THE

MARCH ON WASHINGTON FOR JOBS AND FREEDOM

August 28, 1963

America faces a crisis. Millions of citizens are unemployed. Millions are denied freedom. The twin evils of discrimination and economic deprivation plague the nation. They rob all people, Negro and white, of dignity, self-respect and freedom. They impose a special burden upon the Negro who is denied the right to vote, refused access to public accommodations, forced to accept inferior education and relegated to sub-standard ghetto housing.

One hundred years after the Emancipation Proclamation, the American Negro still bears the brunt of economic exploitation, the indignity of second-class citizenship, and the ignominy of slave wages.

The rate of Negro unemployment is almost three times higher than that of white workers, breeding misery, frustration and degradation in every community - North and ~~the~~ South.

Discrimination in education and in apprenticeship training cripples Negroes, Puerto Ricans and other minorities, rendering them helpless in our mechanized and industrial society. Shunted to relief, charity or to living by their wits, the jobless are driven to despair, to crime, to hatred and to violence. Yet, despite this crisis Southern Democrats and reactionary Republicans are still working to defeat any effective civil rights legislation before the Congress.

They fight against the rights of all workers and minority groups, because they are the sworn enemies of freedom and justice. They proclaim states rights in order to destroy ~~for the purpose of destroying~~ human rights. The Southern Democrats came to power by disenfranchising the Negro people. They know that as long as black workers are voteless, exploited, depressed and underpaid the fight of white workers for decent wages and working conditions will fail ~~be frustrated~~. They know that semi-slavery for one means semi-slavery for all.

We oppose these forces. We appeal for unity to destroy this century-long hoax.

We call upon all Americans, regardless of race or creed, to join the March on Washington for Freedom.

- to demand that Congress pass a civil rights bill that will restore the constitutional rights now denied the Negro people

- to oppose any watering down, or compromise on civil rights legislation by either political party;

- to offer a great witness to the basic moral principles of human equality and brotherhood.

We call upon all Americans, regardless of race or creed also to March on Washington for Jobs.

In their historic non-violent revolt for freedom, the Negro people are demanding the right to decent jobs. They recognize that their struggle is inextricably linked with the struggle for decent jobs for all Americans.

Finally, they know that there is no way for Negroes to win and hold jobs unless the problems of automation, a stagnant economy and discrimination are solved by the Federal government establishing a massive workers program to train and employ all Americans at meaningful and dignified labor at decent wage rates.

- to restore economic freedom to all in this nation;
- to blot out once and for all the scourge of racial discrimination.

We call on you and all organizations -- churches, fraternal societies, labor unions, civic groups, youth groups, and professional associations -- to accelerate the dynamic, non-violent thrust of the civil rights revolution by joining the March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom.

MEMORANDUM

TO: The Chairmen of the March on Washington

FROM: Bayard Rustin, Deputy Director

SUBJECT: The future of the March on Washington movement

That the August 28th March on Washington was an historic success needs no further elaboration. What needs to be underlined is that only the unity of the civil rights organizations and their white allies could have produced that spectacular success. No one organization or narrow coalition of organizations could have done the job.

Moreover, the moral impact of the March has given an unforeseeable weight to a new entity commonly called "the big ten" When they speak as a group today they represent not merely this or that organization but, in the broadest sense, the vast majority of decent Americans. In another sense, they are the living repudiation of the canard that Negroes are incapable of uniting themselves and, hence, incapable of uniting with others. Here our movement has scored a victory over a demoralizing stereotype which must not be reversed.

The segregationists response to our show of strength and unity, is, predictably, an intensification of violent resistance — as witnessed by events in Birmingham, Selma and Shreveport. As a result of their actions 63 and others that may be expected to follow — there can only be an intensification of conflict in local areas throughout the country, North and South. Certainly there will be an acceleration of activities by our forces. The popular response to our four-day appeal for a National Day of Mourning indicates the presence of strong visceral sentiments ready for quick mobilization.

In the context of this sketchy analysis, the necessity of maintaing the March on Washington movement — and the coalition of forces it represents — is compelling. On the negative side, dissolution of the movement can injure morale at a critical stage in the civil rights revolution. On the positive side, continuation of the movement can provide us with the moral and material strength to meet the current counter offensive.

Related to these rather general considerations, are several more specific reasons for continuing the March on Washington:

1) In the critical period ahead, with its new tensions, objective factors are likely to strain relations among the civil rights organizations at many points. Already the Birmingham crisis has produced a myriad of plans and strategies which vary greatly in efficacy and mutual compatibility. In the absence of repeated discussion, it is certain that criticism will be construed as hostility, and false "radical v. conservative" dichotomies will be encouraged. That diverse tactical and strategic views exist among us is a source of our creativity. Yet there needs to be an agency that prevents diversity from becoming disunity, that embraces a variety of viewpoints, that counteracts tendencies toward splintering. Because of the mutual trust and confidence it has established, the March on Washington appears best suited to this role.

2) If there is a need to maintain a structural cohesion among the established civil rights organizations, there is also a need to channel into meaningful activities many spontaneous currents that have no commitment to any of the established organizations, but identify with "the movement" or "the cause" Undoubtedly, many such people participated in the March and look to us for the next step.

3) The very diversity of the civil rights organizations has created problems for non-civil rights organizations, including the four represented among our chairmen. For there is no way in which they can give total, rounded support to the civil rights movement except as they give it to a unified movement.

4) A unique aspect of the March on Washington was that it focused on the indivisibility of the "jobs and "freedom" slogan -- that it projected a far-reaching economic program for all Americans as a prerequisite for genuine freedom. Largely on the basis of that program the march succeeded in forging new links of an alliance with the important segments of the labor movement, as represented by Chairman Reuther. If the civil rights movement is to grapple realistically with the problem of jobs for Negroes that alliance must be strengthened and deepened along the lines mapped out by the 10 demands of the March.

5) Finally, the March on Washington is publicly committed to undertake action against the anticipated Senate filibuster. It is also my view that we have some responsibility, though as yet undefined, toward the quarter million Americans who made the pledge at the Lincoln Memorial.

In listing these arguments on behalf of maintaining the March on Washington, I do not want to gloss over some of the problems involved. However, they are, in my view, not insoluble. For example:

1(Continuing the coalition would not imply any restrictions on the autonomy of local chapters of theeivil rights organizations which have their own constitutional relations with their national offices. It is by strengthening relations among the national organizations that the influence of the March on Washington, considered as consensus of these organizations, would be maximized on the local level.

2) Continuation of the coalition should not disrupt or impede the day-to-day functioning and operations of the established organizations. On the contrary, if successfully administered, the March on Washington could take on a number of tasks which the established organizations are unprepared to carry out. While a formula to express this concern will have to emerge from fuller discussions then space permits here, I am confident that the representative character of the March structure makes it unlikely that activities would be promoted that encroach upon staked out areas of concentration.

Again, if successfully conceived and organized, the March on Washington movement would be able to increase mass participation in, and commitment o. the civil rights struggle in such a way as to facilitate membership recruitment and fund-raising by the established organizations.

3) The March on Washington should cooperate in the closest way with the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights and look to it for guidance in legislative matters. Fruitful coolaboration between the two could lead to greater unity of tactics and help educate large numbers of civil rights activists who are insufficiently informed of developments on the Congressional battlefront.

4) Besides servicing the sponsoring organizations of the March, we ought to provide assistance to legitimate civil rights groups add ad hoc movements which are not yet an integral part of the March on Washington movement. While our assistance not be explicitly contingent on their becoming such, our view should be toward increasing the impact, effectiveness and cohesiveness of the united movement. I have indicated elsewhere in this memorandum, I believe that such groups and movements are likely to appear, in the days ahead, with increasing frequency, and thefuture of the civil rights struggle depends in some measure in our ability to absorb them into the mainstream of this struggle.

Dear Mr. Farmer,

We met at the Puerto-Rican Leadership Conference on 72nd St. a year ago. We were both early, spoke together briefly.

I joined CORE in 1944, admire it's way highly, and you. I learned of your having Abby & Jami from F.O.R. Fellowship magazine article.

I hope you like this song — the only one I've ever written down. It tumbled out after reading 2/3 of

L. Lomax's "Negro Revolt," and I thought I'd dedicate it to you. On second thought, I figured it should have been Lomax, whose book stirred me — or Dr.
King, for whose deeds I just had such strong feelings of admiration, such that brought tears streaming down my face.
But then I knew it was the lives or many men, and women, that moved me — and my first impulse was okay.

I'm sure though you're happy I changed it to be in the names of your daughters & wife.

I'll do more worthwhile things yet — though
I'll not be able to do ½ what you've done!

Dear Dr. Berry:

I am replying to your June letter to Mr. Farmer. We regret that your letter went unanswered until now. I am sure you are aware of how busy this office has been.

The March on Washington Committee placed limitations on what could be on the signs carried by various organizations. While CORE was unable to use your suggestions on our signs in Washington, we certainly agree that this kind of educational campaign is extremely important. Increasingly we are doing what we can to educate the entire population to the fact that equal rights are a matter of earned right.

Dear Mr. Farmer:

First let me congratulate you on thefine job that you and the National staff are doing. Next, I would like to offer a suggestion.

It would seem to me that the time has come when we must fight to dispel the image that Negroes want equality of opportunity as a "charitable and moral" concession of White people. There seems to me a danger of over em;hasis of the "moral" obligation of Whites. There are million of Whites and Negroes who do not know the extent to which Negroes have earned the rights which they seek. Therefore, may I humbly suggest the following for the demostration leaders who may appear in Washington the next week and elsewhere. Let the posters which they carry present such statements as:

"Two and a half million Negroes fought in the Civil War to earn their own emancipation."

"Black Crispus Attucks was the first to die in the Boston massacre for American freedom."

"Negroes earned the right of first class citizenship with their blood in all American wars."

"Five thousand Negroes fought with George Washington for American freedom."

"Our blood, sweat and tears are in five centuries of American soil."

"Who are Americans? Black men came to America with the earliest of explorers."

"Teach all children the whole truth of American history; the rights of all would be respected."

Such posters would be photographed and have wide distribution through all the news media. I trust that you get the thought of what I am trying to express and that you will see fit to implement this approach. With very best wishes, I am,

Very truly yours,

Dear Mr. Richardson:

I'm terribly sorry that Mr. Farmer was unable to reply to your letter before the March on Washington. He very much appreciated your comments and asked me to express his gratitude for the role which you have played over the years working toward making America truly the land of the free.

Many of us would have preferred to have the March coincide with the expected filabuster but problems of organization and co-ordination made that impossible. I am sure that you will agree with me that the March, as executed, lived up to the high standards outlined in your letter.

All of us at CORE have been shocked with the tragic death of President Kennedy. We look hopefully to the Johnson administration for the vigorous completion of the civil rights bill begun by our late president. CORE has promised its support to Mr. Johnson in securing this end.

MR. JAMES L. FARMER, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR
CONGRESS OF RACIAL EQUALITY

NEW YORK 38, NEW YORK

DEAR MR. FARMER:

YOUR FORTHRIGHT AND COURAGEOUS LEADERSHIP OF A NEW ERA AND A NEW DAY IN AMERICA FOR NEGROES IS NOT ONLY HISTORY MAKING BUT DIVINELY INSPIRED AS A MATTER OF DESTINY. THE WIDE-SPREAD WHEELS OF SOCIAL REFORM ARE GRINDING AND CANNOT BE HALTED WITHOUT BURNING A BEARING, BUT THEY MUST BE KEPT WELL-OILED AND WELL-BALANCED; IN THIS NEW AGE OF DIRECT, POSITIVE AND NON-VIOLENT ACTION, THE DYE IS CAST AND THE MARCH IS ON TO REMOLD AND DIRECT THE COURSE OF HISTORY FOR GENERATIONS TO COME.

I HAVE BEEN TURNING OVER IN MY MIND THE JOINT EFFORTS OF A MARCH ON THE NATIONAL CAPITOL AND DRAWING BACK OVER FORTY YEARS OF PUBLIC LIFE IN THE FIELD OF SOCIAL REFORM, DIRECT ACTION AND LEGISLATIVE PRESSURE, I HAVE COME TO ONE CONCLUSION: AT NO TIME IN HISTORY HAS ANY SUCCESSFUL LEGISLATION BEEN PASSED ON THE STATE OR NATIONAL LEVEL FROM LARGE GROUPS OF MOB POTENTIAL PRESSURING LEGISLATIVE BODIES IN SESSION. IT WAS TRIED IN INDIANA WITH 5,000 STRONG ON FEBRUARY 11, 1935, WHEN I TOOK THE FLOOR OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AND MADE MY FAMOUS CIVIL RIGHTS SPEECH WHICH FAILED BY 11 VOTES, PART OF WHICH I LOST BECAUSE OF THE POTENTIAL MOB PRESSURE FROM THE GROUP THAT HAD MARCHED ON THE STATE CAPITOL. I THINK BACK ALSO OF COX'S ARMY MARCH ON WASHINGTON WHICH CAUSED CONGRESS TO ALTER ITS PASSIVE POSITION OF RELIEF.

IN VIEW OF FOUR POSITIVE ACTION GROUPS IN AMERICA AND IN KEEPING WITH THE RECENT NEWS RELEASE OF PRESIDENT KENNEDY STAMPING HIS APPROVAL OF THE PSYCHOLOGICAL BENEFITS THAT MAY BE DERIVED FROM THE MARCH, MAY I SUGGEST THE FOLLOWING:

1. IF THE SOUTHERN SENATORS PULL OFF A PROLONGED FILIBUSTER, AMERICA WILL BE WILLING TO MARCH, FOR THE SOUTH has never ceased to filibuster when there was no march. I would, however, give them plenty of time to act and after days of filibustering, some kind of march would be in order. The main thing is to get the conservative Republicans in the North, where the Negro vote is light--to act, and this will have to be done by white people.

2. That the march take place in an orderly way down Pennsylvania Avenue around the Capitol and end up in front of the White House with some pre-arranged speech from the President and Lyndon Johnson to the group.

3. That the placards and signs carried be positive and direct though non-insulting and non-inflamatory.

4. That the crowd be disciplined to the point of orderliness, non-drinking and non-caravaning of automobile horns.

5. That a Press Conference be held with TV coverage of a positive, democratic and Christian approach.

6. That the crowd be disciplined to the point that, after the march, they disperse and not enter the halls of the National Capitol with no individual or cell pressures but conferences, if they must be, with planned, blueprinted leadership of both parties and the leaders of the protest group.

My fifteen cents thinking may not mean much, but it cannot be said that it comes from a compromiser or moderate leader as my record in Indiana speaks the truth. I marched and protested in Indiana against the Klan when it was publicly stated that I was to be tarred and feathered and hand bills were distributed throughout the state by the Klan threatening my life. It was necessary for me to carry a pistol on the floor of the Indiana Legislature when as a member I spoke on civil rights. If you will recall, in 1936, I was arrested in Birmingham for protesting my rights and secured an official apology from the then acting, Governor Knight of Alabama--being the same man who prosecuted the Scottsboro boys. My judgment, which I consider seasoned, comes from years of experience and lay psychology in dealing individually and at grips with many of these problems in the South during the 1930's and in Indiana, collectively, which redirected and remolded our state history.

Our movement under your leadership will succeed to an objective and constructive end if handled and disciplined under the rules of propriety and intelligent, coordinated

To the Editor of the New York Times:

Your editorial of December 3rd ("Too Much Delay on Civil Rights") tends to counterpose my views on the future strategy of the civil rights movement to those of Mr. Roy Wilkins. Mr. Moeller's accurate but incomplete report of my interview and speech at the Washington Conference of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee has a similar effect.

The fact is, I welcome Mr. Wilkins's announcement that the NAACP will seek to "purge" (is that word his or yours?) all members of Congress who oppose civil rights legislation. This reversal of traditional NAACP policy promises an intensification of political action by Negroes and a renewed, much-needed assault on the coalition of Southern Democrats and conservative Republicans that controls vital Congressional functions.

The disproportionate power of this coalition not only frustrates civil rights legislation; it subverts the representative-democratic character of Congress and impedes enactment of necessary social welfare legislation for all Americans. Obviously, therefore, an assault on this coalition should not divide the Negro from his liberal friends, but should reinforce their natural alliance, based on common interests.

In urging the civil rights movement to "broaden its social objectives," I was not proposing abandonment of direct action, mass demonstrations, or other forms of non-violent social dislocation pending overall social reform. Indeed, should our movement lose its cutting edge, the prospects for many liberal causes would grow dim.

I do contend, however, that radical tactics, to be more than symbolic, must flow from radical analysis--i.e., analysis which goes to the roots of problems. It is not concession to gradualism to insist on a long-range perspective on the structural obstacles to equality in employment, schools, and housing.

How, for example, do we secure fair employment in the midst of growing technological unemployment? If existing employment opportunities were intergrated, even on the basis of "preferential treatment," how many Negroes would benefit? How do we integrate Northern schools when Northern housing patterns are increasingly segregated?

Alone, the Negro lacks the political and economic power to break through tokenism in these areas. Self-interest, if not idealism, dictates that he join with other dispossessed groups in demanding basic social and economic reforms.

The March on Washington was a step in this direction. In calling for a massive federal works program, higher minimum wages, and extension of the Fair Labor Standards Act--as well as a federal FEPC--Negroes joined liberal, labor, and religious groups to address the needs of all Americans segregated from the "affluent society."

Further, the March demonstrated that cooperation among a wide variety of groups was effective only when each transcended narrow organizational interests and concerned itself with deficiencies of the total society.

Clearly, then, I am not advocating absorption of the Negro's struggle into liberalism-as-usual. Our allies will be useless if they are not prepared to combine basic problems of automation and a structural unemployment. We expect them to emulate the audacity of the Birmingham children by advancing bolder concepts of social welfare, urban reconstruction, and economic planning.

We expect them to recognize, with Gunnar Myrdal, that "the chief policy means of spurring economic progress will have to be huge reforms that are in the interest of social justice." Finally, we expect our allies to act upon that recognition with the passion they would feel if the Negro unemployment rate and the white unemployment rate were transposed.

It is unlikely that the necessary reforms can be implemented under our present political alignments. Even if President Johnson succeeds in temporarily outlawing this dangerously apathetic Congress, the unprincipled coalitions that comprise both parties will ultimately dictate a limping, piecemeal approach to civil rights. Therefore, the Negro must demand of his white allies that civil rights and social reform have priority over party loyalties.

Perhaps the time has come for the thousands of Americans who marched on Washington to march on the Democratic and Republican party conventions, demanding that positions of power be denied opponents of the parties' civil rights planks. Out of such marches might well come a potent political expression of the alliance I have urged--an alliance for the democratization of our political, economic, and social institutions. The salvation of the Negro lies ultimately in such basic change.

Sincerely,

BM/kl

CORE feels that the March on Washington was of real significance for the nation. However, it was as you indicate just a beginning. The real job now is to get the Civil Rights Bill passed in the strongest possible form. It is of particular urgency that the public accommodations and FEPC sections be included. Dear Mr. Farmer:

The recent March on Washington was one of the most magnificent public assemblies in our nation's history. In all its orderliness and good spirit, it evidenced the participant's deep sense of civic responsibility and love of country.

The ceremonies at the Lincoln Memorial, which I was priviledged to attend, had a deep spiritual quality and were, indeed, an inspiration to all present and to the millions of Americans who saw and heard the speakers on television and radio.

While some may question to what degree, if any, the cause of Civil Rights may have been advanced by the March, I am convinced that it did have a tremendous impact upon the nation. I am confident you have, by the spirit and manner in which you expressed your feelings, gained added public support for your just cause.

I agree that this is a new beginning and all men may look forward to brighter days when all men being created equal will be so treated.

The organizers and leaders of the March on Washington are to be commended for the thoughtful and efficient planning for the assembly and congratulated for the successful manner in which it was carried out.

Re: Expenses - Salute to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Dear Brother Randolph:

As I reported to you during our telephone conversation a few days ago, the expenses for the "Salute to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr." on December 17th, 1964, at the 369th Regiment Armory amounted to $4,813.30. (An itemized list is enclosed.)

As agreed at the meeting of Community Organizations at your headquarters on November 25th, 1964, no funds were solicited at the affair itself. I think this was a very wise decision because to interrupt so fine a program to collect funds would have marred its beauty. Instead, we had agreed at Mr. Jackie Robinson's suggestion, that he would undertake to raise funds from the business community to defray the expenses.

So far, the results of such fund raising efforts have been disappointing. The amount turned in to me to date is $1,460.00. Of this amount, it is my understanding that Commissioner George Fowler was responsible for raising $600.00, and Mr. Kenneth Sherwood of Fleetwood Furniture for three or four hundred dollars. I understand efforts are still being made to raise additional funds, but I doubt very much whether the amount now necessary, which is about $2,550.00, will be realized.

In the meantime, I was faced with the necessity of making immediate payment (before the affair took place) on certain items. Namely, $1,248.00 for the Chair Rental; $150.00 for setting them up; $625.00 for the Armory; $284.30 for the placards; $100.00 for postage and $100.00 for miscellaneous items, a total of $2,307.30. This amount I had to borrow, laying out some from my own pocket, and as I said earlier, I have only been reimbursed to the extent of $1,460.00.

It should be noted that all expenses were kept to a minimum. No salaries were involved. All clerical work was done by my secretary and other members of our clerical staff. Local 1199, Local 144, Local 237 and District 65 supplied me with a couple of organizers with cars, and we got other volunteers in the community to do the leg work. District 65 provided one sound truck and HARYOU-ACT provided one.

It is my suggestion, therefore, that the deficit approximately $2,550.00, be paid from the "March On Washington" funds, and to this end I seek your authority. Since those to whom monies are now owed, are pressing for payment, I would very much appreciate an early response.

With best wishes for a happy and peaceful New Year.

MEETING; CALLS FOR REEB MEMORIAL FUND,

NEW EFFORTS TO SOLVE RIGHTS CRISES

The following telegram was sent today by UAW President Walter P. Reuther to the other leaders of the August 28, 1963 March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom. These were Mathew Ahmann, Executive Chairman of the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice; Rev. Eugene Carson Blake, Vice Chairman of the Commission on Race Relations of the National Council of Churches of Christ in America; James Farmer, National Director, Congress of Racial Equality; Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. President of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference; John Lewis, Chairman, Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee; Rabbi Joachim Prinz, Chairman of the American Jewish Congress; A. Phillip Randolph, President, Negro American Labor Council; Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and Whitney Young, Jr., Executive Director, National Urban League.

"Civilized people all over the world have been appalled at the brutal and tyrannical use of police power in Alabama to deny Negro Americans their constitutional rights to register to vote and peaceably assemble to seek redress of their grievances.

"All of us were shocked at the senseless murder of Rev. James J. Reeb in Selma this week, which is but another example of what can occur when men's minds are twisted by hatred and bigotry.

"His martyrdom must never be forgotten. His tragic death must serve as a constant reminder that the price a people must pay for freedom is always high but that when the forces of hatred and tyranny take over the conduct of our public affairs, decent, dedicated men and women may have to pay that price with their lives.

"Those of us who formed the National Coalition of Conscience to work for enactment of civil rights legislation in the 88th Congress and to mobilize the historic March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom have a special responsibility to do everything humanly possible to the end that such needless tragedies never again occur.

"Moreover, we share a special responsibility as Dr. Reeb's brothers in freedom to do everything possible to bring aid and comfort to his stricken family and to strengthen our efforts to carry on the work for which he gave his life so that every American, regardless of race, creed or color, may register and vote and enjoy the full blessings of citizenship.

"Therefore, I propose that those of us who formed the National Coalition of Conscience meet in the Statler-Hilton Hotel in Washington, D.C. at 10 a.m. Wednesday, March 17, 1965, to consider the following actions:

1) to establish a National James J. Reeb Memorial Fund to help his family through this trying and difficult period and particularly to insure full educational opportunities for his four children. If such a fund is established, UAW would be willing to make an initial token contribution of $10,000.

2) to work out plans to insure maximum cooperation between all groups that make up the National Coalition of Conscience so that together we can achieve a united effort to bring about enactment of adequate and effective Federal registration and voting legislation;

3) to provide maximum support to strengthen the struggles being carried on in Selma and Montgomery, Alabama and other areas, to insure the full constitutional rights of registration and voting of all Americans.

4) to meet with representatives of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights to consider jointly what positive action can be taken at the Washington level to

a) secure passage of effective Federal registration and voting legislation and

b) discuss plans of mobilizing maximum support throughout the nation involving church, civil rights, labor, fraternal and other groups and to bring that support to bear on the legislative process including consideration of the desirability of a second Freedom March on Washington

5) to discuss ways and means to secure adequate financial resources needed to sustain the continuing struggle to achieve equal rights and opportunity and full citizenship for all Americans.

6) to consider joining forces to block the effort of those who seek to repeal the historic decision of the Supreme Court as it relates to re-apportionment.

It was our joint action that made possible the success of the historic March on Washington on August 28, 1963. That effort demonstrated what constructive results can be achieved when men of good will who share a common commitment join together. In this situation, I know you share the belief that the same common effort must be made.

I do hope you will be able to join in this meeting and I await your reply."

Re: Fund Raising

Fund raising should be a reflection of program and of publicity. If your program meets the needs of the community and you adequately publicize it, it should be possible to secure the necessary budget. In any case, the first step in fund raising for a chapter orfor the national office is to prepare a budget of anticipated program and administrative expenses for the year. The budget should be based on current activities but anticipate growth in program. It should be a plan, not a rigid rule. Without a budget, you have no targets to shoot at. Neither do you have specific projects to talk up. Unfortunately, many people will give to a project who won't give to pay rent, salaries or general expenses.

Timing is important. Your budget tells you how much you need each month. You have to plan how and when to get it. It's not wise to throw three fund-raising events in three successive months. Nor is it wise to have an affair a week after another chapter or organization in the same town. Also, the summer is a good time for some types of parties and a poor time for others. You have to compete with vacations (people are out of town and they spend more than they expect) during the summer. But other organizations stop fund-raising then, so the field is less crowded. Timing implies planning on a year-round basis, but it doesn't mean that you ignore the possibilities presented by special events and programs. Most of our chapters responded to the crisis in Mississippi very quickly and well.

Use your own resources first. If you don't collect dues from you own members you can't very well expect outsiders to carry the load. The pledge system can be used so that some, who can afford it, pay more than others. But all should contribute money as well as time and energy.

Element of appeal. Each appeal, whether by letter, talk or any other way should carry three elements. These are: the need, the urgency, and the level of giving you expect. To get money, you have to convince people that you program fills an important need. Describe that need in specific terms. You also have to convince people that the need is urgent, that they should contribute now. If there is no urgency, the contribution will be delayed and perhaps forgotten. You must establish a level of giving. Do you expect everyone to give a quarter, a dollar, or onethousand dollars? You have to tell them, perhaps subtly, but you have to tell them.

Benefits and special events. One of the most important things to consider about benefits is the ratio of income to expense. If you sell all of the tickets at the set price (you won't--someone always manages to get in for free) how much will you gross? Then what are the expenses for hall, performers, printing, advertising, incidentals (this one is always higher than you expect). Can you make enough to justify the expense? How much of the contributor's dollar will go to overhead and how much to the field program? In national, we believe it wrong to put on a program unless expenses run less than a third. You can't always figure it that fine but we try. And we've been pretty successful. Jackie Robinson just gave a jazz concert for the Chaney-Goodman-Schwerner Memorial Center. It cost less than $500 to raise $25,000. Why? Because we were able to get almost everything donated. The way to make money is usually to avoid spending it for fund raising. Timing of benefits is important. Don't conflict with any other group that may support your affair. If you need a celebrity, you have to get them in advance. Singers and comedians are best. You don't have to pay a lot of travel expenses. It takes at least six weeks to plan and promote a simple benefit. If you are inexperienced it takes longer. Plan it carefully. One final note - figure out your objective and stick to it. If you want to make money, make money. If you want to promote your chapter, promote your chapter. But don't decide after it's all over that "We didn't make any money, but we got good publicity." That's an alibi.

RE: Political Action

The elections of 1964 have given us new influence. It is now up to us to use this positon wisely and effectively. Certainly our opponents will attempt to regroup their forces and to snatch victory from defeat. We cannot permit this. We in CORE must move quickly and affirmatively to formulate programs, secure support and see that pledges made in the heat of the campaign are kept.

Goldwater has been defeated and so have northern reactionaries such as Ben Jensen of Iowa, George Meader and Augustus Johansen of Michigan, John Pillion of New York, and Louis Wyman of New Hampshire. Some had represented their Congressional districts for decades. Their replacements will be more friendly to the cause of civil rights. In the South, such Democratic reactionaries as Huddleston of Birmingham and Arthur Winstead of Mississippi's Fourth Congressional District (that's the District for which CORE bears responsibility) were defeated.

Thus, at the Congressional level there is every reason to be pleased and to believe that we have increased prospects of support for our program.

The civil rights vote resulted in the victory of Johnson in Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee and Florida. It also brought about victory for John Volpe, the Republican candidate for Governor, in Massachusetts. Archibald Hill, - chairman of the Oklahoma City chapter of CORE, was elected to the state legislature. However, there were important defeats as well. California and Akron adopted referenda ending fair housing laws. The California proposition was so extreme that it will probably fall in the courts but it is extremely disturbing to know that three million people voted for such a law. I have discussed the impact of this referendum with President Johnson. Already the Federal Government has moved to shut off funds for housing proposals in California until this proposal is modified.

What Should We Do?

In many states the state legislatures will meet shortly. In a number they will meet this week in special sessions. CORE chapters should get together and formulate their legislative programs quickly. Legislation carried over from last session should be examined for a possible CORE position. Consult known liberal legislators and organizations for information. These programs should then be presented to the legislative leaders and publicized and promoted. Among the important demands should be legislative reapportionment to secure the principal of "one man-one vote." The Supreme Court has ruled in our favor but now it's a question of implementation. We cannot be caught napping. In a number of cases there will be attempts to push reapportionment through quickly before more liberal legislatures can be seated. These should be vigorously opposed.

Parents and Taxpayers groups and others of their ilk will continue to press in state legilatures for laws which will seriously impede the already small and tardy efforts to achieve school integration. It is very important that we make our views known to legislative leaders first and then to the community. We must also continue to develop the muscle to back up our lobbying; we must continue to register tens of thousands of Negroes, Puerto-Ricans and Mexican-Americans.

Support should also be developed for the following minimum demands at the national level:

1) Expulsion of Albert Watson (South Carolina) and John Bell Williams (Mississippi) from the Democratic caucus. These Democratic Congressmen supported Goldwater.
2) The Federal government must take effective action to protect our people in Mississippi, Louisiana and Alabama.
3) The tax laws should not be modified to provide lump sum grants to the states. Such a plan would decisively weaken the impact of Title VI of th the Civil Rights Law. This is the Title which would forbid the Federal Government from financing programs which are discriminatory.

Re: Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party Challenge

We are urging all chapters and friends to convince their local Congressional Representative to support the "Ryan Fairness Resolution" in support of the Miss. Freedom Democratic Party's Congressional Challenge. The resolution will be presented on the opening day of Congress Jan 4, 1965. The text follows:

> "Be it resolved that pending the final decision of the House in the contest and challenges to the seats from Mississippi no persons claiming those seats shall be allowed to take the oath until the contest and challenges are decided by the House, in accordance with the procedures established in Title II, United States Code, Section 201, et seq."

We are also asking that chapters and friends urge everyone to send the following telegram immediately to Speaker of the House McCormack:

> "Urge your recognition and support of resolution against the swearing in of Mississippi delegation until complete investigationof situation by Congress."

SUBJ: Mississippi Project

Enclosed are two important items that require careful attention:

1. A financial statement cover ing CORE's Mississippi Bank account for the period from July 1 through September 25. You will note that the statement does not include money sent directly to COFO, or program planning, legal and administrative expenses assumed directly by the national and southern offices. Nor does it include money spent by the CORE Scholarship, Education and Defense Fund on its federal programs project nor money raised by them for the Chaney-Goodman-Schwerener Memorial Center in Meridian.

2. A list of newly hired members of the CORE Task Force and their responsibilities. All of these were placed on the payroll after September 25. We are proud that we have been able to secure such an able contingent to assist us.

You will note that for July, August and September income and expense just about balanced. The direct salary cost, even at $25 per week, the expansion comes to $22,100 per year. Further, it has been our experience that salary is only 30% of actual field expenses. These two statements indicate that we are now spending at the rate of $200,000 per year in Mississippi.
Thus, it is obvious that CORE chapters must continue to support the Mississippi project. In fact this support must be greatly expanded; three chapters -- Bergen County, Cleveland, and Northwest N.Y. -- have provided more than half the income from chapters. Other chapters must assume more of the responsibility.

The national office will continue to raise money through benefits and various projects. However, it cannot divert money from operating funds. Other commitments in the South include:

1.) Expansion of staff and program in the Southern Office
2.) Expansion of the Louisiana Task Force
3.) Expansion of the Northern Florida staff
4.) $85,000 expansion of our legal staff in the south

These are direct costs only and do not include the indirect costs of administration, court costs, etc. Thus, it is evident that we must all work together.

The chemistry of forces that has created the Freedom movement in Mississippi has also produced some unprecedented projects not normally associated with civil rights activity. Foremost of these projects is the Free Southern Theatre, a permanent professional repertory company that will tour Mississippi, playing also in Memphis and New Orleans, performing in theaters, churches, in the fields and in the streets. The administrative headquarters of the theater will be in New Orleans.

As well as touring with its own productions, the Free Southern Theater plans a unique program of community involvement with theater through a program of workshops and community productions. The workshops will serve not only to educate the audience of the theater but will serve also to strengthen the relationship of the Free Southern Theater to its audience, and will stimulate the growth of indigenous community theater.

The Free Southern Theater is as much a product of "the movement" as voter registration, community centers, or the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party. It is the conception of two young staff members of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, men who had made a commitment to the theater before they came South to work in the movement and met each other. John O'Neal is a graduate of Southern Illinois University; Gil Moses, 22 years old, is from Cleveland by way of off-Broadway theater in New York. O'Neal and Moses met in Mississippi, where the Free Southern Theater was born. Now associated with them as the third producing director of the Theater is Richard Schechner, editor of the Tulane Drama Review.

The Free Southern Theater is committed to the promotion of "the growth and self-knowledge of a new Southern audience of Negroes and whites", and to the addition of a cultural and educational dimension to the Southern freedom movement. For those people associated with it, the Theater intends to provide a forum in which the Negro playwright can deal honestly with his own experience, express himself in what may prove to be "a new idiom, a new genre, a theatrical form as unique as blues, jazz, or gospel."

In its first summer of operation, the Theater has been touring the state with its production of "In White America", the prize-winning drama that opened in New York last winter. The company has given this production for church congregations, civil rights workers, school children, and has played under almost every concievable sort of conditions. The directors plan for their next tour, to begin in Mid-November, a repertory, including plays of authors such as Ossie Davis, Berthold Brecht, James Baldwin, and new playwrights like Douglas Turner and Ann K. Flagg. On the production tour they expect to spend a week to ten days in each Mississippi community they visit. The workshop program will have members of the company stationed in communities for longer periods to work more closely with the interested local people.

The summer production, "In White America", played in many Mississippi communities, including McComb, Hattiesburg, Gulfport, Biloxi, Meridian, Canton, Jackson, Tougaloo, Vicksburg, Mileston, Clarksdale, Ruleville, Indianola, Greenwood, and Greenville. There was also one performance in New Orleans.

Many celbrated actors and directors have recently become associated with the Free Southern Theater, either as sponsors or as technical advisors. These include Ruby Dee, Lorraine Hansberry, Geraldine Page, Sindey Poitier, Kim Stanley, Steve Allen, and about twenty-five other performers equally distinguished. Paul Sills, director of the famous Second City company in Chicago, has offered to come to Mississippi with several Second City actors to establish an a ting workshop and assist the Free Southern Theater company with improvisations.

Special Report: MEDICAL COMMITTEE FOR HUMAN RIGHTS

For further information:
Communications Section
COFO
1017 Lynch Street
Jackson, Mississippi
(601) 352-9605

The Medical Committee for Human Rights was established in response to a request from COFO in New York City on June 27, 1964. At that time it consisted of a small group of prominent doctors from New York. Since early July, that office has served as an administrative center to channel doctors from all over the country who wish to come to Mississippi. As of the first of September, a total of 98 medical personnel have come to the state for short periods on a rotating team basis - 57 doctors, 18 registered nurses, 5 social workers, and 18 additional personnel (Jackson office staff, drivers, etc.).

Because the medical staff is not licensed to practice in the state, its work consists primarily of advice or moral support. In the latter category, one of the most important goals has been to achieve a "medical presence in behalf of the civil rights movement" in Mississippi. Through their mere "presence," the doctors influence local white doctors, reminding them of their responsibilities as fellow practitioners of the Hippocratic Oath. In addition, Mississippi's 57 Negro physicians - the total number in the state, according to the MCHR - have been contacted by the MCHR and have offered assistance in the care of COFO workers.

The MCHR is also interested in the establishment of an efficient public health program in Mississippi, to include the improvement of: (1) immunization services, including diphtheria, anti-toxin, and typhoid; (2) child care, both prenatal and post-natal; (3) personal health, including sanitation, plumbing, sexual education - particularly concerning venereal disease - and family planning and contraception (this is particularly difficult because of the deep religious feelings of some people); (4) surveys - two currently in preparation concern the lack of nutrition of Mississippians and of the COFO workers themselves; (5) more importantly, the health of the COFO workers in general. The MCHR feels that the COFO staff and volunteers are its "main concern," as Dr. Robert Axelrod of Detroit has stated, and that "the only resource COFO has is its people."

Doctors function in various other ways in local projects. For example, on September 1st, the Canton COFO office reported that the presence of an MCHR doctor, as a sympathetic professional person, gave some reassurance to seven Negro students who attempted to enroll in a previously white school, when he accompanied them to the school. Another did the same thing in Clarksdale.

The MCHR has established itself in seven communities in Mississippi: Canton, Clarksdale, Greenwood, Hattiesburg, Meridian, Jackson, and McComb. Its personnel work on a rotating team basis for about a week at a time, at which time a new medical staff arrives from the North and the previous group leaves. The physicians in the state represent many fields of specialization; in the week of August 31, there were two psychiatrists, two pediatricians, an intern, a dermatologist, an orthopedic surgeon, a cardiologist, and three registered nurses. About this same number is present in the state each week. They also make trips into the rural districts in the vicinity of the seven main areas, such as the smaller towns of Batesville, Philadelphia, Laurel, Ruleville, etc.

Each individual doctor arranges with the MCHR in New York as to when he should arrive in Mississippi, and each takes leave from his practice (it is not a vacation - as Dr. Axelrod said, "Who wants to take his vacation in Mississippi?") and pays his own way. The full and part-time employees of the New York office are also financed by contributions from individial doctors.

So far the MCHR has been generally very well received in COFO projects in Mississippi, according to the Jackson COFO office. The most serious problems are the lack of drugs, i.e., vitamins, salt tablets, aspirin, etc., and the difficulty of arranging adequate care for indigent Mississippi citizens.

In the future, the Medical Committee for Human Rights hopes to build "a good community health program" involving such areas as sanitation, immunization, sex education, etc. There is also a need for a program whereby medical emergencies can be taken care of among those who cannot afford such facilities as ambulances. The MCHR is developing facilities for a Rest and Recreation program to accomodate physically overworked and mentally strained COFO workers whohave been in the field for extensive periods of time without adequate food, hygiene, or rest. The MCHR is also considering the establishment of a comprehensive health insurance plan for COFO workers, and the National Medical Association is attempting to find a way for the doctors of the MCHR to obtain reciprocal privileges in order to practice medicine in Mississippi.

The MCHR is committed to continue its work in Mississippi as long as COFO exists in the state - as Dr. Axelrod has stated, "As long as there is COFO, there will be doctors." A thorough physical examination rendered to about 245 staff and volunteers and a Tougaloo College conferance for those who will remain in the state this winter will serve as a guide to future medical aid for COFO workers and is further evidence of the committee's determination. Many doctors throughout the nation have been informed of its work, so that the nature of the MCHR's role in the civil rights movement in Mississippi is spreading, and "several hundred" more doctors have applied to the New York office to come to Mississippi.

While deriving money and strength from the organization of blacks, more than whites, in the last 20 years—labor has continued to use blacks to develop political power for whites, for example, to gain control in the Democratic party. Therefore, we charge that labor is acting in alliance and coalition with the reactionary and racist forces in this nation.

9. (We should write an article on the following.) When Congress stripped Powell of his chairmanship, it denied 22,000,000 black citizens political power which had taken 50 years to develop. When Congress denied Powell his seat, it denied 431,330 black citizens their constitutional right to representation in the House of Representatives.

10. We also accuse Mayor Lindsay of failing to speak out in behalf of the citizens of the 18th Congressional District, New York City. Lindsay has been more concerned this week with the issue of "topless waitresses" than with the denial of 431,330 New Yorker's right to representation.

CHRONOLOGY OF EVENTS IN FIGHT FOR $1.50 MINIMUM WAGE

Prepared by Constantine Sedares

August, 1961----------Mayor Wagner, in a letter to a resident of New York City who had inquired why the Mayor had not supported the bill for a $1.50 minimum hourly wage in New York City which had been submitted in the City Council by the late Stanley Isaacs, said that he had been advised by the City's Corporation Counsel that New York City could not enact such legislation since the state had pre-empted the area.

January, 1962----------Citizens Committee for a $1.50 Minimum Hourly Wage in New York City formed; A. Philip Randolph, chairman.

A number of rallies, picket line demonstrations and other activities by the committee built up public pressure on the issue of a city minimum wage of $1.50 an hour. The proposal had originally been raised by the Teamsters Union Joint Council 16 and the City Club of New York in 1959.

April, 1962----------Mayor Wagner appoints a study commission to investigate the need and feasibility of a city minimum wage.

By a 4 to 3 majority, the report of the committee called for the $1.50 minimum wage in two steps.

October 22, 1962----------The Mayor signed into law the bill which called for a $1.25 minimum hourly wage effective November 22, 1962 and $1.50 minimum effective November 22, 1963.

November, 1962----------Lawsuit filed by the Laundry Operators Association and the Restaurant League of New York (Vincent Sardi, president) alleging that the city law was unconstitutional and that the city had no authority to enact minimum wage legislation because the state had pre-empted the field.

March 1, 1963----------The highest state court, divided 4-3, affirmed lower court rulings declaring the city minimum wage law invalid.

Mayor Wagner, despite the urging of the citizens committee and many other groups, refused to take the issue to the U. S. Supreme Court, "on advice of the corporation counsel."

March, 1963----------Citizens Committee converted to statewide basis.

Chronology of Events in Fight for 1.50 min. Wage

JAN 28 1964

prepared by Constantine Sedares

August, 1961------Mayor Wagner, in a letter to a resident of New York City who had inquired why the Mayor had not supported the bill for a $1.50 minimum hourly wage in New York City which had been submitted in the City Council by the late Stanley Isaacs, said that he had been advised by the City's Corporation Counsel that New York City could not enact such legislation since the state had pre-empted the area.

January, 1962-----Citizens Committee for a $1.50 Minimum Hourly Wage in New York City formed; A. Philip Randolph, chairman.

A number of rallies, picket line demonstrations and other activities by the committee built up public pressure on the issuenef a city minimum wage of $1.50 an hour. The proposal had originally been raised by the Teamsters Union Joint Council 16 and the City Club of New York in 1959.

April, 1962-------Mayor Wagner appoints a study commission to investigate the need and feasibility of a city minimum wage.

~~Although the committee was stacked to produce a negative report on the $1.50 proposal, one of the business members supported the proposal and,~~ by a 4 to 3 majority, the report of the committee called for the $1.50 minimum wage in two steps.

October 22, 1962--The Mayor signed into law the bill which called for a $1.25 minimum hourly wage effective November 22, 1962 and $1.50 minimum effective November 22, 1963.

November, 1962---- Lawsuit filed by the Laundry Operators Association and the Restaurant League of New York (Vincent Sardi, president) alleging that the city law was unconstitutional and that the city had no authority to enact minimum wage legislation because the state had pre-empted the field.

A restraining order was obtained, barring the city from enforcing the minimum wage law.

March 1, 1963-----The highest state court, divided 4-3, affirmed lower court rulings declaring the city minimum wage law invalid.

Mayor Wagner, despite the urging of the citizens committee and many other groups, refused to take the issue to the U.S. Supreme Court, on advice of the corporation counsel. ~~Apparently, the 4-3 division of the State Court of Appeals raised the clear and present danger that the U.S. Supreme Court might find that the city law is valid.~~

March, 1963-------Citizens Committee converted to statewide basis.

The rest you know.

Dear Friend:

As the opening of the 1964 session of the State Legislature approaches, it is essential that we re-activate our campaign for a statewide minimum wage of $1.50 an hour as quickly as possible so that the machinery of the campaign is fully operative early enough to be effective.

I am therefore asking a small group of leaders in this campaign to meet later this month for the purpose of making plans for the new phase of this effort. I urge you to set aside time in your busy schedule to participate in this important planning session so that we might have the benefit of your counsel.

The meeting will be at the offices of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, 217 West 125th Street, Manhattan, at 2 P.M. on Tuesday, October 29, 1963. — MO3-5900

I am looking forward to seeing you there.

December, 1963

Dear Friend:

It is a tragic fact that, in our state, the economic capital of the "affluent society," more than one million workers receive wages of less than $1.50 an hour. The consequent mass poverty is a problem of enormous dimensions, affecting all racial and ethnic groups.

It is clear, however, that Negroes and Spanish-speaking persons constitute an increasingly larger segment of this growing "under class" in our state—men, women and children who are ill-fed, ill-clothed, ill-housed and who lack the educational and cultural opportunities necessary to their full development as useful and responsible citizens of our state and of the Nation. Thus, for minority groups, the problem of mass poverty and deprivation caused by substandard wages is one of especially critical nature.

It is of vital importance, therefore, that the Governor and the Legislature act—during the 1964 session of the Legislature—to alleviate this major social, economic and moral problem afflicting the people of our state. We believe that in the establishment of a statewide minimum wage of $1.50 an hour would be a realistic first step in the right direction.

The Governor is scheduled to deliver his annual message to the Legislature on January 8, 1964. He has been asked to include the establishment of a statewide minimum wage of $1.50 an hour among his legislative proposals. We hope he will do so.

Hoping, however, is not enough. We must act and act now. We must let the Governor know that the socially responsible religious, labor and community leaders of this state support this urgently needed legislation.

WRITE TO GOVERNOR ROCKEFELLER—NOW! Urge him to include in his message to the Legislature a proposal for a statewide minimum wage of $1.50 an hour, covering workers both in interstate and intrastate commerce, including such groups as domestics and farm workers. Urge him to include in his proposal specific authorization for municipalities to enact local laws establishing higher minimum wages than that set by the state.

Time is of the essence. It is important that your letter reaches Governor Rockefeller before he delivers his message to the Legislature. Please WRITE NOW! Your voice counts.

Sincerely,

A. Philip Randolph

Dear Dick:

This is to acknowledge, with many thanks, CORE's contribution on December 2nd of an additional $200.00 to the work of this committee. Your past and continued support has been important to the operation.

Needless to say, if I detected the mood correctly at the last meeting when I raised the question of funds, our financial situation will be no better in the renewed drive than it was earlier this year.

Thanks again.

Dear Governor Rockefeller:

I should like to take this opportunity respectfully to urge that the $1.50 minimum wage be included among the legislative proposals which you submit to the Legislature in your annual message.

I will not go into the rationale for such a minimum wage, for I know that you are thoroughly familiar with these. I do think, however, that it is entirely proper for our State of New York to take the lead in this matter: leadership in such areas has been traditional in New York. Other states and the Federal government might well follow with such affirmative action.

It goes without saying that the beneficiaries of such an action on your part would be the poor of our State, of which minority peoples are an inordinately large proportion.

With kindest regards,

Sincerely yours,

Dear Dick:

Last Monday we presented to Governor Rockefeller the same facts and the same arguments which we presented to him on April 2nd of this year. On April 2nd, he attempted to rebut our points; last Monday he treated them as divine revelations of some sorts, providing "new insight" into the matter, etc.

From this, we deduce that he is more receptive to our requests, based on whatever political factors contrain him in his decision making.

He made it abundantly clear that he was viewing it primarily as a problem of minority groups, which is the manner in which we presented our views. Now we must emphasize the point.

I met with Phil Randolph yesterday to review the situation and to move on the leadership conference we had decided on in October. Phil asked me to contact Farmer, Wilkins and Whitney Young and to ask them to send letters to Governor Rockefeller urging him to include the $1.50 minimum wage among the legislative proposals he submits to the Legislature in his annual message, which is scheduled for delivery January 8th. No doubt his staff is already working on a draft. Would you please ask Farmer to send such a note to the Governor as soon as possible. Thanks.

The leadership conference is scheduled for Friday afternnon, January 3rd, at 2:30. We haven't arranged a location yet, but will have it in a few days.

When Phil returns from Washington, we will be sending a note to Farmer asking him to speak at this conference. Again, if you could in advance discuss it with him so that he sets aside the time in his schedule, it would be helpful.

Please call me when you have a chance so that I can give a more detailed account of the meeting with the Governor.

Sincerely,

Gus Sedares

P.S. Please send me a copy of the letter Farmer sends to the Governor. Thanks.

Dear Jim:

We have received a report that the Governor intends to propose to the Legislature that a commission be set up to "study" the need for improvement of the state minimum wage. If our experience of the past is any guide, this means that the Governor wants to give the impression that he is doing something, while not committing the overt act of actually improving the minimum.

We are taking all possible steps to convey to the Governor a sense of urgency for action. Among these is a conference of key religious, civil rights, labor and community leaders which will be held at Freedom House, 20 W. 40th St., on Friday afternoon, January 3rd, at 2:30 P.M.

The press will be invited to attend so that our view is publicized as widely as possible and so that our demand for action is again conveyed to the Governor.

We hope, therefore, that you will be able to address this meeting and to emphasize our demand for action. Please let me know if you will be able to be there so that we can proceed with preparation accordingly.

RE: $1.50 MINIUM WAGE

For great numbers of Negro and Spanish-speaking workers, American society is anything but affluent. Unemployment and poverty have for too long been an everyday fact of life in the minority community.

If we can obtain a statewide minium wage of $1.50 an hour as an impor - tant first step to begin to alleviate the problem of poverty in New York state, it is clear that the full weight and influence of the civil rights movement must be brought to bear on Governor Rockefeller and the state legislature. We urge you to read the enclosed material carefully and ACT NOW to obtain a $1.50 minium hourly wage in New York state.

FOR A $1.50 MINIMUM HOURLY WAGE
In New York City

to: Mayor Robert F. Wagner and the Members of the City Council

We, the undersigned, urge the enactment into law, without further delay, of the bill to provide for a $1.50 minimum hourly wage in New York City.

This action is necessary in order to bring relief to hundreds of thousands of our fellow New Yorkers who today are victims of sweatshop exploitation. Their poverty and suffering is the concern and responsibility of all of us.

Sub-standard wages and high costs for welfare and other services of city government go together. The enactment of law providing for a $1.50 minimum hourly wage will reduce this subsidy we now pay to low-wage, sweatshop operations and will release these funds to meet the pressing social needs of our city.

A reasonable minimum hourly wage of $1.50 will not only help the exploited workers and their families, but will greatly benefit our community in general.

Dear Friend:

As you know, Governor Rockefeller, rather than proposing immediate action to establish a statewide minimum wage of $1.50 an hour, called for the setting up of a special committee to "study" the possibility of raising the state minimum wage.

If our experience of the past is any guide, the proposal for another "study" committee is merely a device to excuse the failure of action.

It is essential, therefore, that we meet to put into motion a concerted drive to impress upon the Governor and each member of the Legislature that we will not accept a "study" committee as a substitute for concrete, meaningful action on this vital issue. Time is short and we must move quickly.

We have scheduled a meeting for Friday afternoon, January 17, 1964, at 2 P.M. at the offices of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, 217 West 125th Street, Manhattan, to discuss and put into motion specific proposals for action.

Please make every effort to attend this very important meeting.

With warmest regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

A. Philip Randolph

MEMORANDUM

TO: CORE Chapters In New York State January 22, 1964

FROM: Richard Haley SUBJECT: $1.50 Minimum Wage Bill

Action for human rights in the North may be likened to an equal sided triangle. These three sides would be public education, housing and employment. There is already much activity in the direction of the first two; this memo has to do with stepped-up activity on the third side of the triangle--employment.

A. Phillip Randolph announced several weeks ago, the resumption of the campaign for a $1.50 minimum wage in the State of New York, or at the very least, legislative provision to permit New York City to enact such a law without fear of its being nullified by the courts. At his request, CORE, with numerous other organizations, sent a telegram to Governor Rockefeller requesting that he give this proposal a prominent place in his message to the legislature. Governor Rockefeller, however, asked that a study commission be set up by the legislature to investigate this proposal.

Proponents of the $1.50 minimum wage categorically reject the idea that there is need for any further study of this issue. There are a few straws in the wind that indicate there is greater hope now than ever before that we can win this point. Our weapon is the same as many times before--arousing sufficient public concern to impress the legislators. So, on Sunday, February 9th, the Committee for $1.50 Minimum Wage plans to bring together as many of the public as possible with as many legislators as possible, to listen to our statement of position. The meeting place has not yet been selected; you will receive word of this very shortly. We ask each CORE group to do the following: (1) After you have received notification of the meeting place selected, get out a mailing on this meeting to (a) active CORE members, (b) associate CORE members, (c) other liberal organizations with which you may be acquainted; (2) Announce the February 9th meeting at each meeting of your local chapter. Emphasize the need for full chapter attendance at the meeting. Try to get a list of names of those who will attend; (3) appoint a telephone committee to follow up the mailings (please keep track of the number of pieces of mail you sent out on this meeting. We would like to be able to make a check on this. Perhaps the employment committee would take over this function.)

The Minimum Wage Committee also plans a large meeting and visit to the legislators in Albany, at about the third week in February. This is also a very important project; you will hear more of it in coming weeks. For the present, let us concentrate as much effort as we can on the meeting of February 9th. This year, there is a real chance that we can achieve this progressive step; let us not fail.

Dear Friend:

Recent developments indicate that there exists the realistic possibility of obtaining action, during the 1964 session of the Legislature, to establish a statewide minimum wage of $1.50 an hour.

Much depends on what each of us does to demonstrate to our public officialsthat such legislation has broad-based community support.

As one means of expressing this community support, there will be a public rally held on February 9th to which all legislators from the New York City area will be invited. The specifics are as follows:

Date: SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 9th

Time: 3 P.M.

Place: SALEM METHODIST CHURCH
129th Street and 7th Avenue
Manhattan

Needless to say, the effectiveness of the rally and the impression it makes on the legislators will depend, to a large extent, on the attendance at the rally. It is imperative, therefore, that each of us assumes responsibility to insure a good turnout.

Enclosed is a form with some suggestions as to how YOU can help. Please follow up on these---and any other means---to encourage attendance at the rally.

With best wishes, I am

Sincerely,

A. Philip Randolph

RE: $1.50 Mimimum Wage Bill

The leadership committee of the State Republican Party seems to have the present alignment in regard to the minimum wage bill. Carlino and Lefkowitz favor at least enabling legislation for freedom of action in New York City. Nelson (Lieutenant Governor) and Mahoney are against any progressive legislation whatsoever. The Governor is riding the fence. Hank Pailey, Assistant to Carlino, urged Gus Sedares to soft pedal any strong anti-Rockefeller demonstrations for the next week and a-half. By that time, the committee will have come to a decision. Gus plans to speak further to Norman Hill on whether to continue tentative plans they have discussed for a West Coast demonstration.

Gus is very hopeful that you will be able to speak at the public meeting at Salem Church, here in New York City, on Sunday, February 9th..Gus is working for a big turn-out of the public and legislators. We are working with him for a big turn-out of CORE people. You know my naivete about politics; even so, the situation looks much brighter to me than last year. I hope very much you can be one of the speakers at this meeting.

FEB 5

Dear Friend:

The February 9th rally in support of the establishment of a statewide minimum wage of $1.50 an hour is just a few days off.

I hope, therefore, that you will make an extra effort to urge people to attend the rally. Needless to say, the effectiveness of the rally will depend, to a large extent, on the attendance.

What can you do ?

If possible, send out a special mailing to the members of your organization, urging attendance at the rally.

Announce the rally, urging attendance, at all meetings of your organization or at church services and functions.

Attend the rally yourself.

These are just a few suggestions which I urge you to act upon. I am certain that you have many other additional means of mobilizing the members of your organization or congregation.

Thank you very much for your assistance in this important struggle for a decent minimum wage.

RE: $1.50 Minimum Wage Bill

We must have a big turn-out at the mass rally for the $1.50 Minimum Wage. This will be held at Salem Methodist Church, on the corner of 129th Street & 7th Avenue, Sunday, February 9th at 3:00 P.M. We are keenly aware that time is short--far too short for the thorough preparation required by such an important issue.

Again, let me emphasize that time is short; we have no choice but to ride rough-shod over problems, disadvantages, opposition and apathy. This is a time for CORE to show its strength. There are 18 chapters in the New York area. Let each chapter guarantee 75 people in attendance. No less; 75. This will provide a CORE audience of 1350. We can ask the rest of New York to finish the job of filling the church--capacity, 1600.

That is not all. Have you announced this rally at membership meetings. Will you man a sound truck in Harlem, Friday and Saturday, the 7th and 8th? Will you provide ten people to distribute leaflets on these same days? Have you sent a SPECIAL MAILING to associate members, friends of CORE and other organizations? Will you see that the minister of your church announces this meeting?

These are not simple things that can be done--these must be done. In civil rights, as in any other challenge, "You got to put your mind where your mouth is."

RE: CALL TO ACTION IN SUPPORT OF MINIMUM WAGE BILL NOW PEND_ ING BEFORE CONGRESS

A growing criticism of the civil rights movement has been its failure to deliver tangible improvements in the living conditions of Negroes, particularly in the ghettoes of the North. The majority of the Negroes in the United States live in poverty. Though unemployment among Negroes is inconscionably high, an often overlooked fact is that the majority of poor people have jobs. They simply do not earn enough money to live on. THE PRESENT MINIMUM WAGE LAW EXEMPTS THOSE INDUSTRIES WHERE THE MAJORITY OF NEGROES IS EMPLOYED, IN PARTICULAR, HOSPITALS, LAUNDRIES AND DRY CLEANING ESTABLISHMENTS, RESTAURANTS AND FOOD SERVICE ESTABLISHMENTS, AGRICULTURE AND AGRICULTURAL PROCESSING, HOTELS AND SMALL LOGGING INDUSTRIES. This is in part because those business interests have lobbied vigorously against having themselves covered and civil rights groups have not orgznized an effective enough lobby to preserve the interests of Negroes.

FOR THE AbOVE REASONS, I URGE THAT CORE TAKE THE INITIATIVE IN THE FIGHT TO EXTEND MINIMUM WAGE PROTECTION TO THESE INDUSTRIES WHERE MOST NEGROES WORK.

Adam Clayton Powell's committe has drafted a fairly decent bill. It would extend coverage to nearly eight million workers not presently covered by the minimum wage laws. It would, over a period of several years, raise the minimum wage for non-agricultural workers to $1.75 per hour and for agricultural workers to $1.25 per hour. (Additional information on the proposed bill, HR-10518, is enclosed. The blue sheet is a brief summary of the bill. The magazine reprint was written before the bill was drafted and describes proposals which are less liberal than actually contained in HR-10518. It contains much useful background information, however).

A civil rights delegation saw House Speaker McCormack on Thursday, September 23rd. McCormack indicated that he favored the bill and would discharge it from the House Rules commettee on October 11th, 1965 if Congress is still in session at that time. It is important that the bill not be put over until January because the closer one gets to the '66 elections the less possibility there is that Congress will pass something that might offend business interests. The bill may not get to the Senate this session, but the Senate looks like less of a problem than the House.

There is probably enough liberal strength in the House to pass a bill in some form. We must fight to keep the parts affecting Negroes most directly from being amemded out of the bill, as has happened in the past.

Suggestions for action: This issue presents a unique opportunity to combine two major elements of CORE's new direction. It is a political issue that lends itself particularly well to involving Negroes in every community in the country. 1) Wires and letters to Congressmen asking them to support the bill in its present form and without any weakening amendements are of course obvious, 2) getting together people who are directly affected by the provisions of the bill, explaining the bill to them and seeking their participation in lobbying for the bill's passage, 3) organizing delegations of these people to meet with the Congressman from your district to urge his support of the bill. Similar meetings could be held with the officials of the major political parties, influential citizens and civic and fraternal groups to urge their support of the bill. I would even suggest that groups regard themselves as being in negotiation with either the Congressmen or the major political force in power and if they refuse to agree to support the bill, consider direct action against them. 4) Alerting the Negro community to the importance of the issue and the developments as they go along. This of course can be done through traditional methods of leafleting, street meetings, speaking in churches, rallies, and so on. 5) Sending people to Washington to lobby directly for the bill, beginning Monday, October 11th. This should be coordinated with the Field Secretary in your region and with the National Office, 6) enlisting the support of the trade unions in your areas. All of the unions should be vigorously supporting this and should be willing to provide considerable resources in support of the program. This is an excellent chance to find out which unions in your area can be counted on to fight for economic issues that are of great importance to Negroes, as well as to their general constituency.

Please report on any action you will be taking on this issue. Also send the name of the political contact in your group if it is different from the chapter chairman. We will try to keep you posted on developments and changes in the tactical situation, as they unfold.

AFL-CIO LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS

1965 FACT SHEET NO. 4
(Revised)

The AFL-CIO supports improvements in the Fair Labor Standards Act as set forth in H.R. 10518, the bill reported by the House Committee on Education and Labor on August 25, 1965.

H.R. 10518 raises the minimum wage gradually to $1.75 an hour in 1968 and extends coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act to 7.9 million additional workers.

Enactment of this bill would be a tremendous step forward toward the wage-hour objectives of the AFL-CIO. It would help assure a decent minimum standard of living to America's working people and it would make a major contribution to the elimination of poverty.

Therefore, H.R. 10518 should have the support of AFL-CIO affiliated organizations.

Coverage

At present, some 10½ million non-supervisory wage and salary earners who should be covered are excluded from FLSA protections by unduly narrow coverage definitions and by special exemptions. Excluded workers are among the most poorly paid in the nation and must endure the worst working conditions.

H.R. 10518 would extend minimum wage protections to 7.9 million workers in the following categories of employment:

Category of employment	Number of employees covered by minimum wage under H.R. 10518	Cumulative total of employees covered by FLSA plus H.R. 10518

Enterprise Coverage

H.R. 10518 changes the Fair Labor Standards Act definition of an "enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce" to include an enterprise which has employees engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce and which has an annual gross volume of sales of $500,000 or more beginning January 1, 1966, until December 31, 1967; and an annual gross volume of sales of $250,000 or more thereafter. There is no dollar volume test for laundries, drycleaning, or construction enterprises. "Mom and pop" establishments remain excluded as do individual retail and service establishments with annual sales of less than $150,000.

$1.75 Minimum Wage

H.R. 10518 would be a substantial step forward toward the AFL-CIO objective of assuring low-paid job-holders a standard of living above the poverty level.

The bill would raise the minimum hourly wage to $1.75 in 1968 for workers now covered by FLSA and to $1.75 in 1970 for workers newly covered. Here is the step-up schedule for increasing the minimum hourly wage under H.R. 10518:

For 29.6 million presently covered employees:

(1) Beginning July 1, 1966 ..... $1.40
(2) Beginning July 1, 1967 ..... $1.60
(3) Beginning July 1, 1968 ..... $1.75

For 6.6 million newly covered employees (nonfarm):

(1) Beginning January 1, 1966 ..... $1.00
(2) Beginning July 1, 1966 ..... $1.15
(3) Beginning July 1, 1967 ..... $1.25

(4) Beginning July 1, 1968 .....$1.40
(5) Beginning July 1, 1969 .....$1.60
(6) Beginning July 1, 1970 .....$1.70

For "tipped employees," the wage paid by an employer shall be deemed to be increased by the amount of tips received by or attributed to such employee, but not by more than 50 percent of the applicable minimum wage rate.

For 1.2 million agricultural employees:

(1) Beginning July 1, 1966 .....$1.15
(2) Beginning July 1, 1968 .....$1.25

Overtime

H.R. 10518 would extend overtime protection to many workers in the following categories of employment:

- Retailing
- Construction
- Laundering and drycleaning
- Nonresort hotels and motels
- Transit
- Automobile, truck and farm implement dealerships (excluding salesmen and mechanics)
- Restaurants and food service establishments
- Motion picture theaters
- Agricultural processing
- Logging
- Gasoline service stations

These newly covered workers would get overtime protection starting July 1, 1967. For these workers, overtime pay—time-and-a-half pay—would be required after

44 hours in any workweek after July 1, 1967
42 hours in any workweek after July 1, 1968
40 hours in any workweek after July 1, 1969

AFL-CIO Wage-Hour Goals

H.R. 10518 is a significant step forward toward the AFL-CIO wage-hour goals. The bill deserves the support of AFL-CIO affiliated organizations.

Opponents of wage-hour improvements are trying to convince members of Congress that H.R. 10518 will injure business and cut back job opportunities. This is not true. A 1965 U.S. Labor Department study shows that "the economy adjusted easily to the increase in the minimum wage" under the 1961 Fair Labor Standards Act amendments, and that "employment in these newly covered segments did in fact go up."

It is vitally important that Congressmen learn immediately that there is strong support in their home districts for the 1965 wage-hour bill, H.R. 10518, as approved by the House Education and Labor Committee.

Urge your Congressman to vote for the wage-hour bill approved by the House Labor Committee, and to oppose weakening amendments.

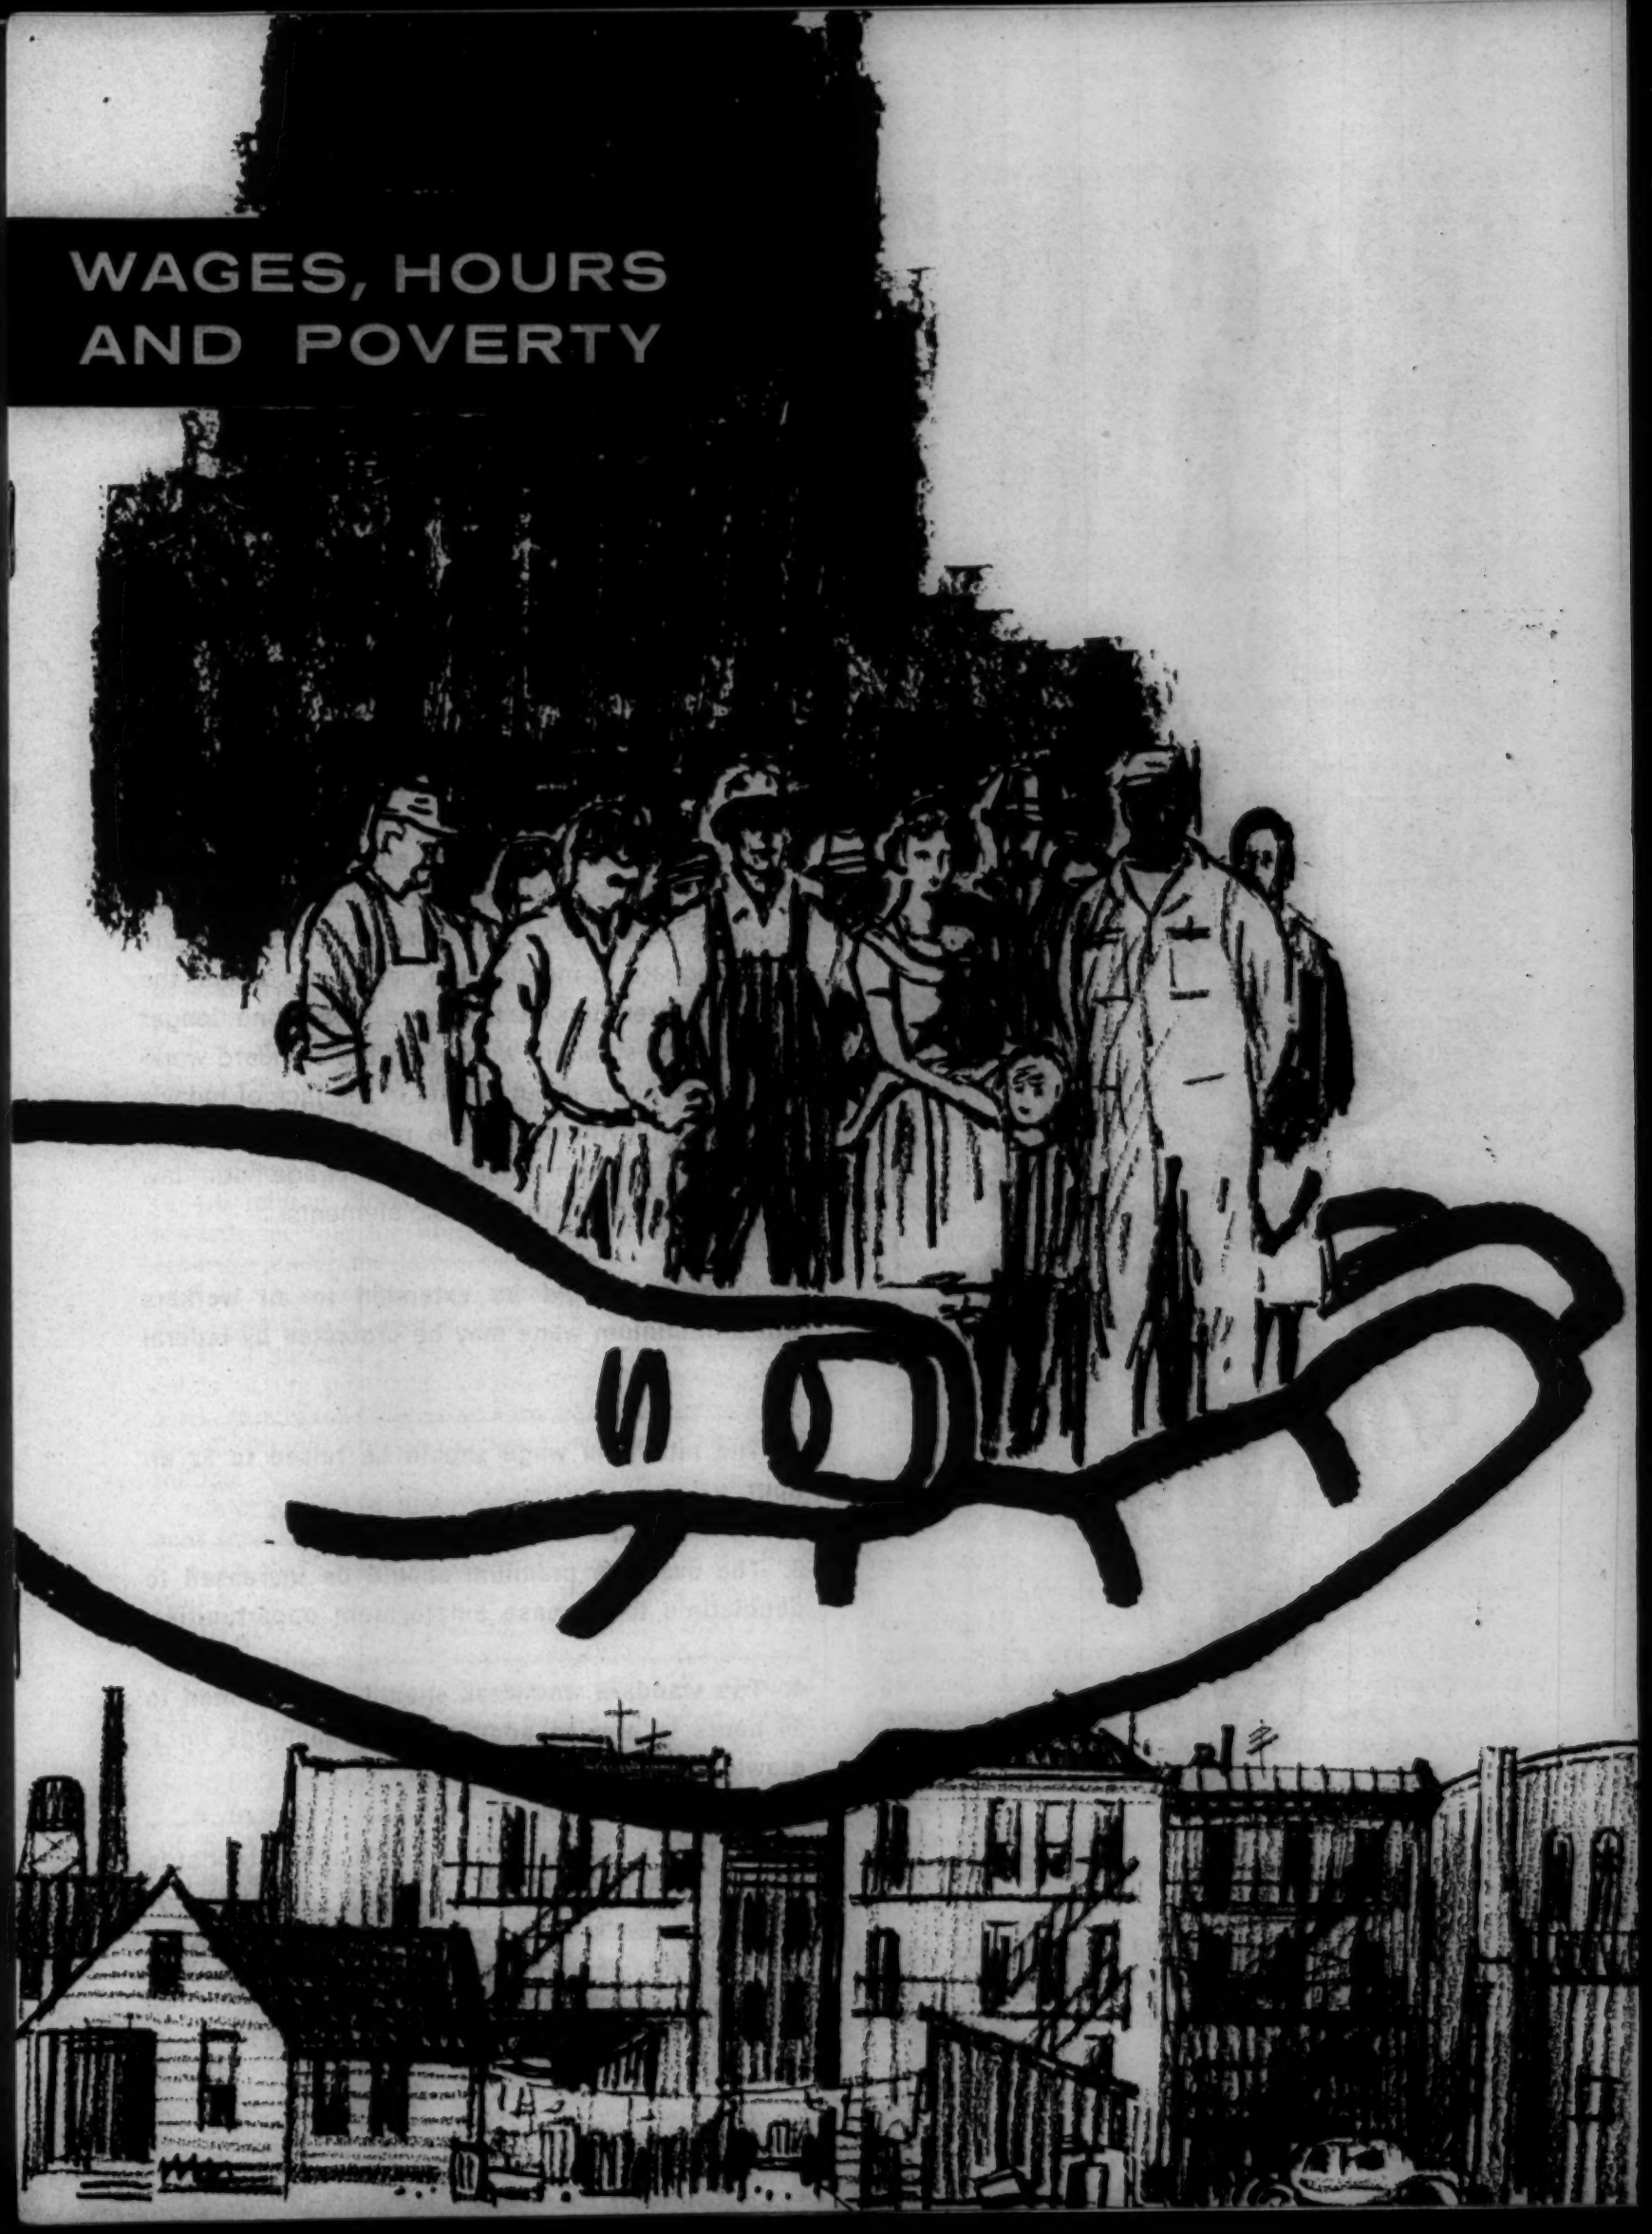
WAGES, HOURS AND POVERTY



More than 30 years ago, one of the first New Deal programs to meet the problems of unemployment and poverty of the 1930s was to establish a floor under wages and a ceiling over hours. ● The National Industrial Recovery Act first contained such protection for workers. When it was declared unconstitutional, Congress enacted in 1938 the Fair Labor Standards Act to help meet these objectives. ● In the years since the enactment of FLSA, the minimum wage has been raised three times and coverage of the Act was extended once. In 1949, the minimum wage was raised from 40 cents to 75 cents; in 1955, it was set at $1; in 1961, it was increased in stages to $1.25 and coverage was extended to an additional 3.6 million workers. ● Today, millions of workers remain unprotected by the Act. The present $1.25 minimum is inadequate in meeting the needs of workers; the overtime premium of time and a half no longer protects the standard workweek; the standard workweek of 40 hours is out of date in the face of today's high unemployment and the rapidly-growing labor force. ● Modernization of the wage-hour law means revisions in all its basic elements:

1. Coverage should be extended to all workers whose minimum wage may be protected by federal law.

---

2. The minimum wage should be raised to $2 an hour.

---

3. The overtime premium should be increased to doubletime to increase employment opportunities.

---

4. The standard workweek should be shortened to 35 hours to provide additional job openings for a growing labor force.

These four revisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act are all necessary and important. This issue of The Federationist discusses each specific proposal and why its adoption is in the best interests of the nation.

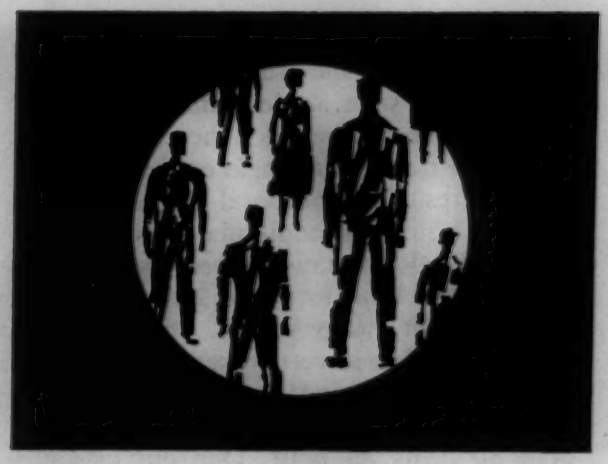
Modernize Wage-Hour Law

Wage-Hour Protection For The Exploited



Of the 47.3 million workers holding non-supervisory jobs in private industry, only 29.6 million are covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act. The other 17.7 million are denied federal minimum wage protection.

Of these 17.7 million, nearly 2 million are farm workers in dire need of special legislation to provide them with an adequate federal minimum wage. Another 2.5 million are domestics also sorely in need of wage protection, but the issue is tied to the problem of federal jurisdiction and a decent wage floor for them probably depends on state action.

The other 13 million workers are in industries that clearly fall under the interstate commerce provisions of the Constitution and, therefore, come under federal jurisdiction.

President Johnson's proposals to extend protection to 4.6 million more workers are an important step towards meeting the objective of the widest possible coverage under the law.

If FLSA coverage were extended to all workers in chain enterprises doing a quarter of a million dollars worth of business or more, regardless of the gross receipts of the particular establishment in which they work, minimum wage protection would cover an additional 800,000 workers, bringing the total to about 5.4 million.

About a third of those workers who would be covered now earn less than $1.25 an hour:

- Of the 1.5 million additional workers in retailing who would be protected by the President's proposal, nearly 500,000, or 30 percent, are paid less than $1.25 an hour while nearly 50 percent of them receive less than $1.50 an hour, according to the U.S. Department of Labor. A large percentage of the nearly 600,000 additional workers who would be covered by the $250,000 enterprise test earn less than $1.50 an hour.
- In eating and drinking places, about 123,000 of the 425,000 workers who would be covered by the President's proposal, or about 29 percent, are paid less than $1.25 an hour. Nearly 50 percent are paid under $1.50 an hour. A large percentage of the nearly 200,000 additional workers who would be covered by the $250,000 enterprise test earn less than $1.50 an hour.
- In hotels and motels, where 225,000 workers would receive FLSA protection, about 99,000, or 36 percent, are paid under $1.25 an hour and over 50 percent are paid under $1.50.
- In laundries, where 175,000 workers would be covered, over 40 percent earn less than $1.25 an hour and 65 percent are paid under $1.50 an hour.
- Of the three-quarters of a million hospital workers who would be covered, about 34 percent earn under $1.25.

In the absence of minimum wage protection, the wages of these workers at the bottom end of the nation's wage scale remain stationary or creep up belatedly over the years at only a fraction of the pace of general wage advances.

Manufacturing production workers averaged $2.53 an hour in 1964. This is 75 cents higher than 10 years ago and 42 cents higher than in 1958.

Non-covered industries such as retail trade, laundries and hotels have lagged behind this pace. Average hourly earnings in retail trade were $1.87, an increase of only 58 cents in the past 10 years. In laundries, the average hourly earnings of non-supervisory workers were $1.44 — only 27 cents more than in 1958. In hotels, average hourly earnings rose merely 23 cents in the period from 1958 to 1964.

Retail Trade

Out of 6 million retail workers, 2.5 million are now provided with FLSA protection while 3.5 million are excluded.

The President's proposal is an important step for increasing FLSA protection of retail employes. The removal of the exemption for automobile and farm implement dealers and of food service employes removes unwarranted exclusions. Lowering the enterprise tests from gross sales of $1 million to $250,000 is also an important improvement in extending FLSA coverage.

In addition to lowering the gross sales test of a company to $250,000, the $250,000 per establishment test should be repealed. If a company does $250,000 or more business in a year, all its stores should be covered. Under the Administration's proposal, two stores of the same chain could be treated differently. If one store of Company X has sales of $250,000 or more, it would be covered; the other store of the same company may not be covered if its sales are less than $250,000. This situation could be eliminated if the establishment test were deleted in favor of a single enterprise test.

The President's proposal would bring FLSA coverage to 1.5 million additional retail workers. An additional 600,000 retail workers would be covered—bringing the total to about 2.1 million—by applying the $250,000 enterprise test.

The situation in certain segments of the industry is particularly shocking. One out of seven workers in women's ready-to-wear stores in the South earns less than 80 cents an hour. One out of eight employes of apparel and accessory stores in the South earns less than 80 cents an hour.

Employes of automobile dealers are excluded from FLSA and a significant number earn low wages. Six percent were paid less than $1 and 17 percent were paid less than $1.25 an hour in June 1962.

A Labor Department study of the impact of the 1961 amendments shows that employers adjusted easily to the extension of minimum wages to the retail industry. The continuing exemption of large numbers of workers causes unfair competition for covered employers and harmfully low wages for the unprotected.

(a) Some coverage in nursing homes.
(b) Need special legislation for federal minimum wage.
(c) Minimum wage coverage complicated by Federal jurisdiction; probably depends on State action.

Overtime protection also is needed by non-covered retail workers. The June 1962 survey of the Labor Department showed that 1.5 million of the unprotected retail employes were working over 40 hours per week. The effects of a statutory 40-hour standard in retail trade could result in as many as 125,000 additional fulltime jobs.

Restaurants

There are 1,753,000 restaurant workers not protected by FLSA. The President's proposal would extend coverage to 425,000 of these workers in large establishments with sales of $250,000 or more. Use of the $250,000 per enterprise test would extend protection to nearly 200,000 additional restaurant workers, bringing the total to over 600,000.

Last year, in passing the Civil Rights Act, Congress specifically recognized that restaurants affect interstate commerce. The Act covers "any restaurant, cafeteria, lunchroom, lunch counter, soda fountain or other facility principally engaged in selling food for consumption on the premises, including, but not limited to, any such facility located on the premises of any retail establishment or any gasoline station." The only limitation on the coverage of such establishments is the test of whether "it serves or offers to serve interstate travelers or a substantial portion of the food it serves, or gasoline or other products which it sells, has moved in commerce."

The Supreme Court, in a series of civil rights cases last December, upheld the power of Congress to regulate such activities. The Court held that "Congress acted well within its power to protect and foster commerce in extending the coverage of Title 2 only to those restaurants offering to serve interstate travelers or serving food, a substantial portion of which has moved in interstate commerce."

Surveys by the U.S. Department of Labor show that 65 percent of all restaurant workers were paid less than $1.25 an hour in June 1963.

America's most exploited workers are found in hospitals, restaurants, laundries, behind retail counters and in hotels. They serve and, in effect, subsidize the better-off. They badly need wage-hour protection.

Nearly a fifth of all restaurant employes are already guaranteed a minimum wage of $1.15 or more an hour by state minimum wage laws. Thus it is clear the industry can adjust to a minimum wage level when one is set.

One-third of all restaurant employes are now working 48 hours or more each week. If a statutory 40-hour week were established for restaurant workers, as many as 60,000 full-time jobs could be made available.

Hotels and Motels

There are 549,000 workers in the hotel and motel industry. The President's proposal of extending coverage to hotels and motels with sales of $250,000 would extend the Act's protection to about one-half of the workers—275,000. The $250,000 per enterprise test should be applied, but the number of additional employes who would be covered is not substantial.

Wage surveys made by the Labor Department show chambermaids in some cities earning less than 50 cents an hour in 1963. In New Orleans, the average hourly earnings of such workers had risen from 29 cents in July 1948 to only 50 cents in July 1961—an increase of 21 cents over a 13-year period. This compares with a 60-cent increase in the federal minimum wage over the same span.

Earning less than $1.25 in 1963 were 61 percent of the non-supervisory employes in hotels and motels. Approximately 20 percent of all hotel and motel employes are protected by state minimum wage rates of $1.15 or more—indicating the ability of the industry to adjust to minimum wage laws.

Long working hours also are a feature of the hotel and motel industry. Thirty percent of the employes work 48 hours or more a week. By extending the Fair Labor Standards Act to those workers, and establishing a standard workweek of 40 hours, as many as 15,000 additional full-time jobs could be created.

Laundries

Of the 523,000 laundry workers in the United States, only 18,000 are currently covered by FLSA. These are workers in laundries selling across state lines or selling primarily to manufacturing plants.

The President's proposal would extend coverage to an additional 175,000 laundry workers in large establishments with sales of $250,000 or more. The $250,000 per enterprise test should be applied in this industry, too, although the number of additional covered employes would be small.

Wages paid laundry workers are particularly oppressive. Fifty-three percent of the employes are paid less than $1.25, according to a June 1963 survey by the Labor Department. Of these workers, 40,000 earned less than 75 cents an hour. The 100 lowest-paid employes, according to the survey, were in establishments with annual sales of $250,000 or more. And these employes were paid less than 35 cents an hour!

Other Labor Department studies show that average hourly earnings for bundle wrappers in Memphis increased only 11 cents—from 47 cents to 58 cents—between 1951 and 1963. In this same period, the federal minimum wage rose 50 cents.

Eight states have minimum wage rates of at least $1.25 an hour—indicating the ability of the industry to adjust to minimum wage levels where they exist.

Overtime protection is needed by laundry workers. One-fifth of them work more than 44 hours a week and two-fifths work over 40 hours. The overtime worked is the equivalent of about 10,000 full-time jobs.

Hospitals

The President's proposal would extend FLSA protection to about 890,000 workers in non-governmental hospitals, nursing homes and homes for the aged. These workers who would be covered are in establishments with annual gross receipts of $250,000 or more.

According to the Labor Department, 29 percent of all hospital workers earned less than $1.25 in June 1963. Some of these workers are engaged in the same type of work described above. Among the lowest-paid hospital workers are kitchen helpers, dishwashers, porters, maids and laundry workers. The earnings of some of these hospital employes are as low as those found in the surveys of restaurants, hotels and laundries.

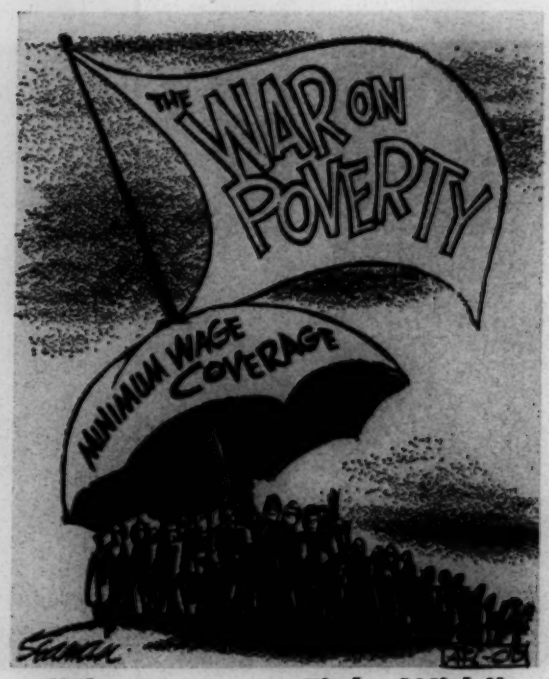
Without minimum wage protection, there is little general movement in hospital wages. In Atlanta hospitals, for example, average wages of laundry and kitchen-type jobs increased 14 cents an hour or less in the period from September 1956 to June 1963. The average increase for these jobs was 7 cents. This is a 1-cent per year increase.

A review of state minimum wage laws shows that it is feasible to cover hospitals by minimum wage and hour legislation. Twenty-three states provide some coverage for non-governmental hospitals. In 10 of these states, a minimum of $1.25 an hour or more is required. However, only 31 percent of the employes of private hospitals are in such states.



"The Better to Fight With"

According to Labor Department surveys, 40 or fewer hours per week are the normal schedule in hospitals. Nevertheless, the full protection of FLSA should be extended to hospital workers, including the law's overtime provisions.

Motion Picture Theaters

The President's proposal would extend coverage to 75,000 of the 114,000 motion picture theater employes. A 1962 Bureau of Labor Statistics' survey of wages paid in the District of Columbia showed that 40 percent of the men employed in motion picture theaters were paid less than $1 an hour.

Taxis

Taxis are an important means of interstate commerce. But they have been exempted from FLSA, thus denying protection to 122,000 cab drivers.

The President's proposal would remove this unfair exemption and thus bring minimum wage and overtime protection to 100,000 cab drivers.

Small Logging

Logging workers presently are covered by FLSA, except that operations involving less than 13 employes are exempted. This is the only exemption in FLSA based on number of workers. The President's proposal would remove this exemption, thus extending the Act's protection to the 87,000 workers now excluded.

A Labor Department survey shows that, in 1963, 52 percent of the workers in small non-integrated logging establishments in the South earned less than $1.25. When the $1.25 minimum wage went into effect for the larger sawmill and planing mill workers who were covered, 73 percent of them in the South received wage increases to $1.25. The industry met this re-

To End Substandard Wages

Extending wage-hour coverage to retail trade showed that such new coverage was accomplished without adverse employment effects. The Labor Department study reports:

"Employment data obtained through the surveys suggest that the minimum wage requirements did not change employment in the retail trade industry significantly. In all covered retail stores, 2,422,000 workers were employed in June 1961 and 2,437,000 in June 1962. Nationwide, employment increases occurred in all lines of business except gasoline service stations, in which the proportion of employes earning less than $1.00 remained practically unchanged (6 percent in 1961; 5 percent in 1962), and the 'other' category which raised only 1 percent of its employes to the minimum rate. . . .

"However, there are indications . . . that there were some employment declines in covered retail trade in non-metropolitan areas of the South."[1]

"One of the main arguments that has been advanced against extending the Fair Labor Standards Act to additional low-wage industries is that it will curtail employment opportunities in these industries. Recent experience has indicated that the extension of coverage to low-wage industries has not in fact curtailed employment. Even more important, the idea that substandard wages should be retained in some occupations and industries to provide marginal jobs is in direct contradiction to our goal of eliminating poverty. . . ."[2] quirement and continued to prosper—showing that the industry can adjust to a minimum wage.

Overtime protection also is needed for workers in this industry. The survey showed that 15 percent of the employes worked more than 40 hours a week.

Agricultural Processing

Specific exemptions exclude 90,000 agricultural processing workers and 34,000 cotton ginning employes from FLSA protection. The President's proposal would remove these exemptions.

The great bulk of agricultural processing workers are already covered by FLSA, without any detrimental effects upon the economy. The exemption for agricultural processing workers is a hodgepodge. For example, a grain elevator that (a) is not located in a place of 2,500 or more population or within a mile of such places and (b) has not receive 95 percent of the grain from within 50 miles of the elevator, is exempt. However, for the storing of commodities other than grain and soybeans, a 20-mile test applies. For cotton ginning, a 10-mile test applies. A tobacco warehouse has to be within 50 miles of its source of tobacco to be exempt.

There is no reason for such special exemptions given to particular interest groups at the expense of workers who are thereby denied the protection of FLSA.

Construction and Other Industries

At present, 2.25 million workers in construction, manufacturing and other industries generally covered by FLSA are not afforded minimum wage and hour protection. There are two reasons for this large number of unprotected workers. First, certain jobs are not considered to fall under the definition "engaged in commerce," even though the enterprise as a whole falls within the interpretation. Second, the enterprise may not meet the million dollar or $350,000 sales test currently in the Act.

The President's proposal would establish a uniform $250,000 enterprise test, thus extending FLSA protection to about 250,000 construction workers and 660,000 workers in such other industries as manufacturing, trade, finance and local transit.

Mom and Pop Stores

The minimum wage law actually helps Mom and Pop stores since it means they are not competing with the low wages sometimes paid by large enterprises.

For example, Labor Department studies show there are some laundry workers in big establishments with sales of over $250,000 a year who are paid less than 35 cents an hour.

The minimum wage law protects Mom and Pop standards from being undercut by unscrupulous large concerns which may exploit their workers by paying unfair sub-minimum wages. The minimum wage law means that Mom and Pop can figure an hourly rate earned working in their own store at no less than the minimum wage. Other employers will not be able to undercut them.

The Failure of the States

In theory, workers unprotected by the federal wage-hour law ought to be covered by state law. But the fact is that state laws have not filled the gaps left by the limitations of federal coverage.

Seventeen states have no minimum wage laws at all. And, in the other 33 states, what passes for protection is often grossly inadequate either as to employment coverage or level of minimum wage required or both.

Some state laws, for example, cover only three or four industries. Equally serious is the failure to cover male adult workers. Men are covered by state minimum wage laws in only 21 states and Puerto Rico. Thus, men are without any state minimum wage protection in 29 states and the District of Columbia.

All told, because of the failure of many states to enact legislation at all, the failure of others to provide adequate occupational or industry coverage and the frequent failure to provide coverage for both sexes, less than 30 percent of workers not protected by the federal law have any kind of coverage under state laws.

In five states, no minimum rate is higher than 85 cents per hour. Under the Arkansas law, the minimum rate works out to only 16 cents an hour. In Arizona, current rates range from 47 cents to 55 cents per hour. Under an updated South Dakota law effective July 1964, the minimum wage is set at $17 to $20 per week.

Extension of Hours Protection

Certain groups of employes covered by the federal minimum wage are exempted from the law's maximum hours provision. These exemptions from the FLSA overtime pay requirement have no rational basis at the present time.

The President's proposal would remove the hours' exemption applying to 86,000 gasoline station workers and 103,000 local transit employes. These loopholes, written into the Act in 1961, need to be closed.

The proposal also would consolidate the overlapping exemptions pertaining to agricultural processing workers. Some 500,000 agricultural processing employes have been plagued with duplicating and overlapping overtime exemptions, all applying to the same industry. The Labor Department, in its study of the handling and processing of agricultural products, reported that the "differences in extent of the exemption period available for the various industries are not related to length of season or length of workweeks."

A Minimum Wage To Fight Poverty

To succeed in the war against poverty, the nation needs a $2 an hour minimum wage. The economy can adjust to a $2 minimum without serious effects. In the past, the economy has adjusted easily to increases in the minimum. With productivity and profits rising rapidly in a rich and affluent nation, an increase in the minimum wage to $2 an hour can be absorbed without difficulty—and with great benefit to millions of low-income families.

A $2 wage floor, along with extension of coverage, would be the greatest single step in the war on poverty. An immediate start should be made in 1965 toward assuring all workers covered by the federal wage-hour law a minimum wage of $2 an hour.

Statistics on poverty show that in more than half of all poor families, the family head has a job. Moreover, half of these employed family heads, representing almost 30 percent of all poor families, hold a full-time job for the entire year.

The poor families headed by a man fully employed throughout 1963 included 5.2 million children under age 18. Families headed by a fully employed woman worker had half a million children. Thus, two in five of all the children growing up in poverty were in families of workers with regular full-time jobs.

This is the most shameful aspect of the poverty problem—the working poor. For poor families headed by full-time, year-round workers—almost 30 percent of the total—a substantial increase in the minimum wage would mean the major lift out of poverty. The same is true of poor families headed by part-time workers; they total 20 percent of all poor families.

At $1.25 an hour, a worker earns an annual income of only $2,500 to $2,600 if he has a full-time, year-round job. Even a $2 an hour wage is not much above the poverty level for a family with two children. The Social Security Administration reports that a family of four needs an income of $3,130 per year to begin to move out of poverty. If a family has three children, $2 an hour is hardly enough to provide the $3,685 needed to progress beyond poverty. A family with four children needs $4,135 to rise out of poverty.

The result of poverty wages is an inadequate diet.

Poverty family budgets, on which the government's figures on poverty are based, involve food consumption that is admittedly for "temporary or emergency use." The Department of Agriculture's "economy" budget allows less than 70 cents a day per person for meals in a family of four—23 cents a meal!

A minimum wage must be set that allows a worker some dignity; a wage that shows his children it is worthwhile to work. The wage should be one which makes work attractive and a real alternative to crime, idleness and delinquency. Without a realistic minimum wage, these alternatives have little meaning.

A most important program to alleviate poverty, therefore, is to raise the inadequate wages of the working poor. If the conditions that breed poverty in this country are to be changed, poverty wages must be eliminated. These conditions will not change unless the federal minimum wage is raised.

An individual employer cannot unilaterally raise the minimum wages of his employes to $2 if it places him at a competitive disadvantage. But all employers could raise minimum wages at the same time to fulfill the requirements of a federal minimum wage statute.

A $2 minimum wage is not an adequate wage. It is merely a floor that could begin to lift many families out of poverty.

For a worker and his family to enjoy a modest and adequate standard of living, he needs at least $3.20 an hour, according to updated figures of the U.S. Department of Labor's City Worker's Family Budget. An updating of the government agency's 1959 figure to 1964 indicates that a city family of four needs an annual income of $6,418 to live in "modest but adequate" circumstances.

An increase in the minimum wage to $2 an hour would have a beneficial effect on the national economy, in addition to the socially desirable effect of assisting millions of families to move out of poverty.

Low-income families, who would receive the direct benefits of a rise in the minimum wage, spend all of their earnings quickly. The increased earnings would be spent rather than saved or hoarded.

This additional buying power and spending among the nation's lowest-income families would lift the demand for goods, services and jobs. And as these additional funds were circulated through the economy—re-spent and invested by merchants, distributors and manufacturers—the economy would receive a continuing and multiplying lift.

In a period of spreading automation, when the economy can produce an increasing abundance of goods, it is economically sound to provide additional, much-needed buying power to low-income families.

The Ease of Economic Adjustment

The economy can adjust easily to a $2 minimum wage. The real impact of the $2 minimum wage on unit costs is rather small. In manufacturing, for example, it would mean an increase of 7 percent in total wages and salaries paid to covered workers and about 5 percent of all wages and salaries, including salaries of executives and supervisors.

Statistics of the Labor Department show that productivity has been growing at a rate of 3.5 percent in the 1960s. Thus in a short period the entire cost effect could be offset by higher productivity.

Even if none of the cost were offset, the impact on total production costs—in distinction to wage costs—would be only about 2.5 percent, since wage and salary payments account for only half of the total value added in manufacturing.

Although the increase to $2 an hour is easily within the ability of the economy, there is congressional interest in approaching this goal by steps. For this reason, data is presented on the impact of a first-step $1.50 minimum and this change is compared to the recent increase to $1.25 that resulted from the 1961 amendments to FLSA.

Comparing the earnings in manufacturing (those earning less than $1.25, according to the Labor Department's pre-1961 survey, with the percentage earning less than $1.50 now), the same general picture prevails now as prevailed in 1961. Sixteen percent of factory workers earned less than $1.25 in the pre-1961 survey; in 1964, 18 percent earned less than $1.50. For the South, the percentages also are similar, 37 and 38 percent, respectively.

In manufacturing, in industry after industry, there is a remarkable similarity between the percentage of workers who earned less than $1.25 before Congress adopted that figure as the minimum wage, compared with the percentage currently earning less than $1.50.

In the apparel industry, 44 percent of the workers earned less than $1.25 in 1958, (the survey year before the increase to $1.25). In 1964 in this same industry, 44 percent earned less than $1.50. In the lumber and wood products industry, the percent earning less than $1.50 in 1964 was less than the percent below $1.25 in 1958—39 percent versus 41 percent.

Industry adjusted easily to the increase from $1 to $1.25 and today it can adjust as well to a step-up in the minimum.

Further indications that industry adjustments would be fairly easy show up in a study of the increase in the hourly wage bill required to raise the minimum wage to $1.50 an hour. In most industries, the impact on the hourly wage bill is less than 3.5 percent—and a much smaller impact on total costs, excluding the cost-reducing effect of rising productivity.

The Labor Department has made estimates of the direct impact on the hourly wage bill of a $1.50 minimum in various industries. Only one of these industry sub-groups showed an impact of over 7 percent. This was one of the segments of the apparel industry —men's, youths' and boys' furnishings, work clothing, and allied garments—where there would be a 7.9 percent adjustment in the wage bill due to a $1.50 minimum. In other industry sub-groups, the direct impact varied from 0.1 per cent to 6.2 percent. The average increase in the hourly wage bill for all manufacturing industries would be 1.3 percent, according to the Labor Department estimates, with a much smaller impact on total production costs.

American industry can easily and rapidly adjust to such a small cost increase—less than seven-tenths of one percent of total production costs in manufacturing —out of sharp increases in production efficiency. In addition, the public welfare costs for the working poor would be cut.

The social cost of an inadequate minimum wage is apparent in welfare costs. In New York City, it is estimated that the cost of low wages to the public treasury in the form of welfare payments amounts to over $1 million a month or $13 million a year. This involves the 7,729 welfare cases being cared for in 1964 who received supplemental assistance because their wage earnings were less than the welfare budget.

According to the New York City Deputy Commissioner of Welfare, most of the supplementation was received by families where the family wage earner earned less than $1.50 per hour.

In Cook County, Illinois, the situation is similar. Some 3,000 families receive supplemental assistance checks. These are just two examples of a national problem.

In addition, low wages place a considerable burden on other services, both public and private, such as public and charitable health facilities, increased fire and police protection and other specialized services. These then become a drain on the general public.

Such costs to the community can be reduced by a rise in the minimum wage and the elimination of poverty among the working poor.

The very high level of business profits, in addition to the economy's rapidly rising productivity, enables the economy to adjust easily to a rise in the minimum.

The U.S. economy is now in its 53rd month of steady economic growth. Although all segments of society have not been equally blessed by the expansion of national wealth, American corporations and their owners have been reaping fantastic financial benefits from America's economic growth.

A higher wage floor is needed in low-wage industries.

From 1961, when FLSA was last adjusted, to the first quarter of 1965:

- After-tax profits increased by 67 percent to a record $36.5 billion annual rate for the first quarter of 1965.
- Cash-flows of American corporations (after-tax profits plus depreciation) increased by almost 60 percent to a record annual rate of $70.5 billion for the first quarter of 1965.
- Dividends were paid out by American corporations at an annual rate of $20.5 billion in the first quarter of this year—up 35 percent over 1961.
- For manufacturing corporations, after-tax annual rates of profits on stockholders' equity were 12.4 percent in the fourth quarter of 1964—up 43 percent since 1961.

Much of the financial bonanza that American corporations are now enjoying stems from substantial government aid during the past few years. This aid came in the form of a 4-point reduction in corporate income taxes, changes in depreciation procedures and the investment credit. A rise in the minimum wage—to boost the incomes of poor families—is needed now to help restore needed balance to the economy.

Most sectors of the economy and most industries can easily absorb an increase in the minimum wage to $2 an hour out of rising productivity and high profits. Some high-productivity, high-profit industries can absorb the increase and reduce prices. Some others, whose productivity and profits are low, would probably have to raise prices somewhat. But the overall impact on the price level should be very small if at all.

The original Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 provided for an increase of the same magnitude proposed in the $2 minimum—a 60 percent increase in the minimum wage.

In 1950, the minimum wage was raised 87 percent, from 40 cents to 75 cents. Again in 1956, and in 1961 and 1963, the minimum wage was increased without any appreciable impact on the nation's price level.

There has been no change in the overall wholesale price index as a result of recent minimum wage changes. This is what the Secretary of Labor said in his 1965 Report: "Wholesale prices of industrial commodities remained relatively stable during the period in which the federal minimum wage became $1.15 an hour in September 1961 and $1.25 two years later.

Industrial commodities, which exclude farm and food commodities, in 1961 and 1962 averaged 99.5 percent of the 1960 wholesale price level and, in 1963, 99.4 percent. Prices edged upward during the first nine months of 1964, averaging 99.7 percent of the level for the same period in 1960."

During that same period, the consumer price index moved up only moderately. In fact, both the government and business have taken great pride in the price stability of recent years.

Opponents of minimum wage laws claim such laws cause unemployment. But there is no evidence to support their claim.

Obviously, payment of the minimum wage is a cost to employers. But it is also income to workers, who spend their earning to buy goods. The buying power of these workers is spent and multiplied as it circulates through the economy, adding to sales, production and employment. Without any minimum wage laws, many workers would be badly exploited. In addition, many consumer goods industries would weaken and collapse in the absence of minimum wage legislation. Moreover, in the real world productivity is rising rapidly; automation is spreading; business profits have risen fantastically.

The evidence indicates that a rise in the legal minimum wage—as the nation's productivity, profits and incomes increase—adds to employment generally by increasing production and sales. In some specific instances, a few jobs may be eliminated in low-profit and low-productivity companies. But such instances have proven to be relatively few in number. And the beneficial impact of lifting the general level of economic activities and employment is clear.

Today's national economy can readily absorb a $2 minimum wage. The minimum wage in 1938 was 25 cents an hour. At that time the gross national product (total production of goods and services) was $85 billion. In 1965, the GNP is expected to be $660 billion, or eight times as great as in 1938. If the1938 economy could stand a 25-cent an hour minimum wage and even expansion of that minimum to 40 cents by steps, a $660 billion economy can stand a $2 minimum wage.

The beneficial social impact of an increase in the minimum wage to $2 an hour—accompanied by an extension of wage-hour coverage to about 5.4 million workers—would be great. The prevalence of poverty would be reduced and the social costs of welfare assistance could be cut.

Moreover, the increased buying power of low-income families would lift the entire national economy although there may be displacement of some jobs in a few isolated cases. Most, if not all, of the cost to employers could be absorbed easily out of rising productivity and high business profits. Any remaining cost-impact on the prices of a few low-productivity and low-profit industries would be small, and, in terms of the overall price level, the impact would be negligible, if any at all.

The Effect on Employment

What happens when the federal wage-hour law is improved? Congress requires the U.S. Department of Labor to study the effects of each change. Here are some relevant findings:

"The 1961 minimum wage increases had no discernible effect on the nation-wide level of employment in the industries affected. On an overall basis, employment has risen in these industries since the 1961 amendments took effect.

"Despite repeated predictions to the contrary, the evidence is emphatic that the successive amendments to the Act have gone far toward its objective of eliminating 'conditions deterimental to the maintenance of the minimum standard of living necessary for health, efficiency and general well-being of workers . . . without substantially curtailing employment or earning power.' "[1]

In the areas most directly affected, the Secretary of Labor stated:

"Employment in low-wage areas increased, and no rise in layoffs in low-wage industry groups, other than seasonal changes, is reflected in the labor turnover series. . . ."[2]

In a special follow-up of the effects in 15 low-wage areas of the South, chosen because of the larger impact of the minimum wage laws, the Secretary of Labor found similar results:

"In the 15 low-wage areas combined, 129,300 workers were employed in October 1960 and 141,300 in March 1964, an increase of more than 9 percent. This is about twice as great as the increase in employment in all nonagricultural industries over the same period in the country as a whole. When the comparison is limited to manufacturing industries, the increase in these nonmetropolitan areas is 9 percent as compared with one and one-half percent in all areas of the United States. . . ."[3]

"There does not appear to be any direct correlation between the impact of the minimum wage in these areas, when measured in terms of proportions of workers earning less than the minimum wage prior to the effective date and the changes in employment. . . .

"On balance it would appear that the $1.25 minimum wage was adjusted to without adverse employment effects in these low-wage, high impact areas. . . ."[4]

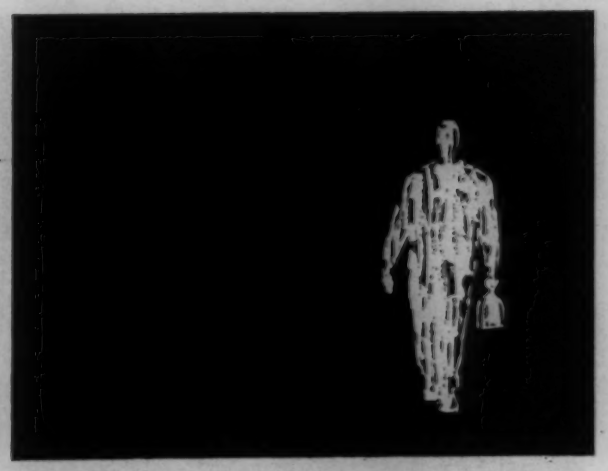
Doubletime Pay To Spread Employment



President Johnson has proposed an increase in penalty pay for overtime work. It would move from time and one-half after 40 hours to doubletime after 48 hours and gradually down to doubletime after 45 hours of work per week.

This points in the right direction but fails to go far enough. The objective remains—doubletime after 40 hours for all—to discourage employers from scheduling overtime work and to encourage them to hire additional employes.

The present overtime provision was adopted 27 years ago. It was written into law to discourage the scheduling of overtime work so as to provide additional employment opportunities. At that time, an overtime penalty of time and a half was adequate for the purpose; it is much less effective today.

Time and a half is not as costly to the employer as it might appear. The increased volume of production during overtime hours reduces the employer's overhead costs per unit. But more than that, the cost of hiring additional workers has increased. Through both legislation and collective bargaining, various fringe benefit costs have been added to the employment-cost package—such as social security payroll taxes, paid vacations and pension plan contributions. Such costs vary with the number of workers employed rather than with the number of manhours worked. In balancing out these additional costs against the present overtime penalty, many employers believe that overtime is cheaper.

In 1938, fringe benefits were about 4.5 percent of employe wages and salaries. In the 27 years since, the percentage spent on fringes has doubled.

There has been a tendency, therefore, for many employers to schedule overtime work rather than increase employment. This has created the paradox of substantial overtime in a period when millions of workers are jobless and when millions more are compelled to work part-time because full-time jobs are not available.

"Recipe for Jobs"

The Labor Department reports that in 1964 nearly 8 percent of the hours worked by manufacturing production and maintenance workers were overtime hours. This overtime totalled 39.7 million hours a week, the equivalent of 1 million full-time production and maintenance jobs at 40 hours a week. In 1963, the number of overtime hours was about the same.

These figures do not reflect the overtime of non-production workers in manufacturing—the growing body of white-collar and technical employes. They exclude also the large amounts of overtime worked in non-manufacturing industries.

Although the precise amount of overtime hours worked outside of manufacturing is unknown, the Labor Department said that in 1963 more than 40 hours a week were worked by 39 percent of the wage and salary workers in wholesale and retail trade, by 27 percent of those in service and finance, by 28 percent in transportation and public utilities and by 27 percent in construction.

For all workers now covered by the federal wage-hour law, it is estimated the total overtime in the past two years has been the equivalent of about 1.5 million full-time jobs. Overtime worked in industries not now covered by the wage-hour law is the equivalent of several hundred thousand additional jobs.

The Labor Department's Wage and Hour Divisions' report on overtime hours in manufacturing in March 1964 states that 42.5 million hours of overtime a week were worked by non-supervisory employes, mainly reflecting the overtime work of production and maintenance workers. This would be the equivalent of 1.1 million full-time non-supervisory jobs in manufacturing industries alone.

But even this is an understatement, for an analysis of the monthly variation in overtime hours of production and maintenance workers, as reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, shows that March was one of the months with the least overtime in all 1964. In March, the average overtime hours were 2.8 hours, whereas in every month from May to December, the average was 3 to 3.5 hours per week. And this trend has been continuing in 1965.

About 4.25 million non-supervisory employes in manufacturing worked over 40 hours in the March 1964 week surveyed by the Labor Department. Half of them, or over 2 million, worked 48 hours or more.

Those who worked overtime put in an average of 7.8 overtime hours per week. Twenty-seven percent of all overtime hours worked were above 48 hours a week—hardly unavoidable overtime.

A comparison of the earnings of overtime workers with those working 40 hours showed a small difference in the level or distribution of wages. Those working overtime averaged 9 cents an hour less than those who worked 40 hours a week. This does not substantiate the contention that overtime hours are necessary because of a lack of highly-skilled personnel.

The manufacturing overtime involves the average worker—with neither a concentration of high-paid and high-skilled nor of low-paid and unskilled.

The Wage-Hour Divisions estimate that employes subject to the law worked some 62.5 million overtime hours in a single week of March 1964. This is the equivalent of 1.5 million full-time jobs.

An increase in the overtime penalty from time and a half to doubletime would increase the employers' costs of scheduling such overtime and provide an incentive for business firms to hire additional workers.

It is not possible to make a precise estimate of the number of additional jobs that would result from an increase of the overtime premium to doubletime. There is a lack of detailed data on overtime in some non-manufacturing industries and some overtime is unavoidable and would be worked even at doubletime.

To make the doubletime penalty fully effective, the coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act needs to be extended to millions of workers who are excluded from the law's protection. A Labor Department survey showed that some 70 percent of the wage and salary workers who put in more than 40 hours a week in May 1963 did not receive premium pay for overtime work. These, of course, were people not covered by the federal wage-hour law.

An increase in the overtime penalty to doubletime, coupled with extended coverage of FLSA, would probably result in as many as a million additional jobs—about 550,000 in manufacturing and a similar number in other types of employment.

Creating Jobs Through A Shorter Workweek

The aim of organized labor's campaign for a reduction of the workweek is clear, simple and direct —to spread job opportunities and reduce unemployment.

Unemployment is still America's number one domestic problem, despite the improvements of the past year and a half. It has been undermining the nation's strength, affecting race relations and creating difficulties in labor-management relationships.

There is no one-shot cure-all for this serious and growing problem. The tax cut adopted in March 1964 lifted economic activities, prevented the onset of a 1964 recession and provided an economic lift into 1965. But a tax cut alone cannot reduce joblessness to a minimum and keep it there. Additional measures are required, such as a great increase in job-creating public works programs, extension of federal minimum wage coverage to millions of unprotected, low-wage workers and an increase in the minimum wage to $2 an hour.

Reduction of working hours and an increase in the overtime premium to discourage employers from scheduling overtime work are elements of the needed series of measures to increase employment and ease the growing job displacement that results from automation.

The facts are plain. In the 11 years, 1953-1964, the number of unemployed workers doubled—from 1.9 million to 3.9 million. Even in 1964, a generally prosperous year for most Americans—with booming business profits and dividend payments to stockholders —high-level unemployment continued.

The unemployment situation is more serious than realized. In 1964, there were 3.9 million unemployed or 5.2 percent of the civilian labor force. There were also 2.4 million additional workers who were compelled to work part-time because full-time work was not available to them. In addition, about 1 million to perhaps over 2 million men and women were neither employed nor counted as unemployed since they had given up seeking work because of a lack of job opportunities.

When these figures are added up, it is estimated that about 8 percent of available work-time in 1964 was lost as a result of unemployment and part-time.

This is the record of the 11-year period 1953-1964:

- The civilian labor force increased 10.1 million;
- Total employment rose 8.2 million;
- The number of unemployed increased 2 million;
- As a percent of the labor force, the number of unemployed jumped from 2.9 percent to 5.2 percent.

Jobs were provided for only about four-fifths of the increase in the labor force. But the record is considerably worse than these bare figures indicate.

Much of the increase in employment was in part-time work. Moreover, there is the hidden unemployment of workers who are discouraged and have given up seeking jobs.

During the past 11 years, employment in most major parts of the economy declined or failed to show adequate growth:

- Farm employment dropped 1.9 million between 1953 and 1964. Hundreds of thousands of farmers, farm laborers and their families left the rural areas in search of work in the cities.
- Factory production and maintenance jobs fell by 1.2 million.
- Railway jobs declined by over 500,000.
- Mining employment dropped more than 200,000.
- Jobs in the telephone industry remained about the same and there was a small increase in electric and gas utility jobs.

While nearly 4 million jobs disappeared in these key sectors of the economy between 1953 and 1964, there was an insufficient rise of employment in other parts of the economy.

- Jobs in the federal government increased only slightly.
- Contract construction employment rose 376,000 between 1953 and 1956 and only 105,000 between 1956 and 1964.
- Jobs in the services—such as hotels, laundries, restaurants and hospitals—increased 2.7 million.
- Retail and wholesale trade employment was up 1.9 million.
- Employment in the finance, insurance and real estate industries increased by approximately 800,000.

"Life-Line"

Much of this rise in employment in trade and the services was in part-time work at considerably lower wages than in manufacturing, mining and the railroads, where jobs dropped sharply.

- Non-production jobs in manufacturing—scientists, engineers, technicians, executives, supervisors, sales personnel and clerical employes—increased by nearly 1 million.
- State and local government employment rose 2.8 million—mostly in school systems.

These are jobs for which few displaced workers are qualified by education, skill or training.

The increase of about 1.1 million in the number of household workers and self-employed people in non-farm activities—such as doctors, lawyers and shopkeepers—offered very few full-time job opportunities for displaced wage and salary workers.

While total employment rose 8.2 million in the period 1953-1964, the net increase of full-time employment was essentially in state and local government jobs, which rose 2.8 million. Much of the net job increase in private industry was in part-time work. After accounting for the increased employment in government jobs and in private, non-profit institutions—such as private schools and hospitals, churches and religious institutions—it is clear there was little increase in full-time jobs in private, profit-making businesses between 1953 and 1964.

These trends of the past 11 years occurred when the labor force was growing by about 920,000 per year. Moreover, those born after the the end of World War II, when the birth rate moved up, are now becoming adults. Between 1965 and 1970, the labor force is expected to increase by 1.5 million a year—more than 50 percent higher than in the past decade. And if jobs are provided for only four-fifths of these new additions to the labor force, which was the record of the past 11 years, unemployment will continue to rise.

But the problem of the future is much greater than merely the accelerated growth of the labor force—which is a big enough problem in itself. An even greater problem is the continuing spread of automation—not only in manufacturing, mining and the railroads, but into offices, warehouses and retail stores as well. Output per manhour of work is rising at a rapid rate.

The pace of rising productivity is revealed in Labor Department reports that output per manhour in the total private economy increased 3.5 percent a year between 1960 and 1964, compared to an average rate of 3 percent a year between 1947 and 1960.

These striking increases in the efficiency of production explain how it has been possible for production to rise substantially in the last few years with only a slow improvement in employment. They also go a long way towards explaining the increase in profit margins and the sharp boost in corporate profits during the same period.

Yet true automation is still in its infancy. There is reason to believe far more sweeping changes are ahead.

The number one reality is the need for jobs. The increasing impact of automation and the accelerated growth of the labor force, on top of the present high level of unemployment, add up to the need for about 4 million to 4.5 million additional job opportunities each year from now until 1970. America requires about 80,000 new job opportunities every week through the remainder of the 1960s to reduce unemployment to a minimum and keep it there.

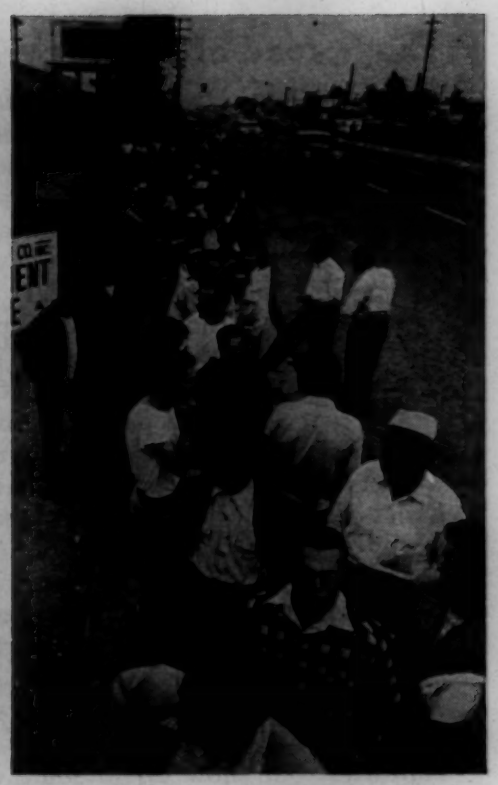
An essential part of the effort to meet America's job needs is a reduction in working hours.

There is nothing sacrosanct about the 40-hour week. It has been enshrined as one of the New Deal's achievements and deserves its position in history.

But the 40-hour week had no such aura of sanctity when it first came along. In the 1930s, the 40-hour week was simply regarded as an improvement over the 50-hour week or the 44-hour week which were then so common. As a matter of fact, there were some very distinguished Americans, some of whom are still in public life, who thought, even 30 years ago, that 40 hours was too conservative a goal. A bill introduced by the distinguished Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, Hugo Black, then a senator, called for the 30-hour week.

A look at the history of the American workweek shows that, on the basis of past performance, another reduction is already overdue. For example, from 1900 to 1940, the average workweek shrank four or five hours a decade. Since 1940, it has been cut only three hours, even allowing for paid vacations and holidays.

The argument has been made that a 35-hour week would cut down the nation's productive power at a time when it is most needed.



Automation and growing labor force combine to keep unemployment high; shorter hours can create jobs.

The aim and result would be not less production, but more production—sustained by greater purchasing power stemming from high employment.

In calling for a shorter workweek, organized labor is calling for more total hours of work, not less. The whole idea behind a reduction of working hours is to increase employment.

In the 1920s, employers refused to shorten hours of work. Ford's 8-hour day and 40-hour week in 1926 was the exception, so that in 1930 less than 6 percent of the workers in manufacturing had attained the 40-hour week. The nation suffered a catastrophe in the 1930s because of the failure to act in the 1920s to provide additional job opportunities. In the mid-1960s, there must be action to cut the workweek in order to prevent mass unemployment in the late 1960s or 1970s.

The pivotal question, of course, is to what extent shorter hours will be a dynamic new force for the expansion of employment in the nation as a whole. Although no precise answer can be offered, some rough statistical estimates may be useful.

If Congress were to reduce the standard workweek from 40 to 35 hours, this reduction would provide the equivalent of about 2.5 million full-time jobs to maintain the same total number of working hours involved in producing goods and services on a 40-hour schedule under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

In manufacturing, where the greatest impact would be felt, the equivalent of 1.5 million full-time jobs would be provided. The Labor Department survey of hours worked in manufacturing by workers under FLSA protection showed that 10 million manufacturing employes worked 40 or more hours a week. If these jobs were all cut to a 35-hour standard and the 5-hour reduction per worker were converted to full-time jobs, this change would mean one new worker for every seven presently on a 40-hour schedule.

Outside of manufacturing, the impact of an FLSA reduction in the standard workweek to 35 hours is estimated to be the equivalent of at least 1 million full-time jobs—bringing the total to about 2.5 million.

There is wide recognition, particularly at the individual plant level, that cutting working hours will help prevent layoffs of workers—"cutting hours means less cutting of men." It will surely reduce or eliminate labor displacement. How effectively it does this depends largely on the pace of productivity changes and on trends in sales.

The extent to which it will lead to new hiring depends on such factors as management's judgment about future needs for labor and the level and trends of sales for the company's products.

But, typically, a company that reduces its workweek by several hours ordinarily will have to hire additional workers if it wants to maintain or increase production.

Other factors would make for even greater hiring. To the extent that new hiring occurs, for example, it would quickly increase the economy's sales and touch off additional production and hiring.

In summary, then, reduction of working hours without curtailment of weekly pay is an important tool to spread employment.

Now as to costs. This issue arises because the proposed reduction of working hours must be linked

The Spread of Shorter Workweeks

Scheduled workweeks of less than 40 hours are much more prevalent today than is generally realized. Although a minority practice, they are sufficiently widespread across various industries and areas of the country to indicate their practical feasibility.

Available information indicates that the proportion of wage and salary workers on full-time weekly schedules under 40 hours is 15 percent. This means approximately 8 million workers.

A recent Labor Department survey of both union and non-union conditions of 17 million workers in 82 metropolitan areas in 1962-64 found over 15 percent were on schedules shorter than 40 hours.

The survey findings show that (1) such shorter workweeks are much more common for office workers than for production workers; (2) the most frequent shorter workweek schedules are 35 and 37½ hours and (3) the shorter workweeks are not peculiar to one or two areas or industries, but show up to some extent in virtually all areas and in each broad industry sector.

Here are some specific examples: In New York, 19 percent of the factory production labor force and 86 percent of the office and clerical workers were on full-time schedules shorter than 40 hours. In Boston, the percentages were 15 percent for production workers and 66 percent for office workers. For Chicago, they were 9 and 39 percent. In Philadelphia, they were 10 and 52 percent; and in San Francisco, 16 and 35 percent.

Nationally, over 35 percent of all office workers covered by this survey were regularly scheduled for less than 40 hours per week. Shorter workweeks are fairly common in the ladies' garment industry and in printing, brewing, rubber, construction and coal mining. Two Labor Department surveys in 1963 of major service industries found notable proportions of their workers also on shorter than 40-hour schedules.

with the need to maintain weekly pay. A reduction in working hours, accompanied by a corresponding reduction of weekly wages, would be self-defeating; it would depress consumer buying power and sales. To maintain weekly earnings while the number of working hours is cut requires an increase in hourly wages.

If the standard workweek were cut from 40 hours to 35, it would require a 14.3 percent increase in hourly wages to provide the same weekly pay. If the hours reduction were to 37½ per week, the needed hourly increase would be 6.7 percent.

To the employer, the increased cost of cutting working hours without reducing weekly pay is essentially similar to an increase in hourly wages.

The employer is primarily interested in his unit costs—not in hourly wage rates. To the extent that productivity increases, it offsets all or part of the rise in hourly wages and the unit labor cost may actually remain the same or even decline.

It is obvious that a reduction of standard working hours from 40 to 35 in one fell swoop—requiring a 14.3 percent increase in hourly wages in one year—would boost unit labor costs substantially. Productivity for the economy as a whole does not rise that rapidly, although the spread of automation does, sometimes, result in such spectacular bursts in individual plants of companies.

If the reduction of working hours is spread out over a number of years, however, the needed increase in hourly wages can be absorbed without a general rise in unit labor costs or pressures on the price level. Since productivity in the total private economy has risen at an average yearly rate of 3.2 percent in the postwar period—and 3.5 percent a year since 1960—the American economy can absorb, without prohibitive difficulty, a substantial cut in working hours that is spread out over several years.

It should be recalled that direct labor costs are only one element of costs. There are many others—depreciation of plants and machines, power, raw materials and numerous overhead items. In addition, there are profits. Although labor costs as a share of the sales dollar vary from one company to another, the direct labor costs of the average company (including management and executive salaries and fringe benefits) are only about one-quarter of the sales dollar. A small rise in unit labor costs, therefore, can usually justify, at best, only a tiny rise in the price of a company's products.

Shorter hours undoubtedly will increase leisure and recreational activities. The reduction of working hours and the spread of paid vacations and holidays in the last 30 years have created new industries, such as motels, and have added substantially to others, such as the producers of leisure and recreational goods and the various industries involved in travel. This trend will continue as working hours are reduced in the future—adding to jobs and general economic activity.

In addition, judging from the past, reduced working hours will increase educational and cultural activities —an important investment in the nation's future.

Finally, in considering the issue of cost, it should be remembered that unemployment is not without cost —unemployment compensation and public assistance, for example. Although it is not feasible to attempt a breakdown on a company or industry basis, the economic and social costs of unemployment to the community—including business—are considerable. To the extent that shorter hours will help to avoid layoffs and to aid in reducing unemployment, they will reduce these society-wide expenses and thereby help to finance the cost of reducing working hours.

AN EDITORIAL

To Rescue the Working Poor

The opening shots have now been fired on the most important battlefront of the war on poverty—the drive to assure every worker of at least a subsistence wage.

The field of battle is the Fair Labor Standards Act—the wage-hour law. Only through a thorough and far-reaching modernization of this law can the war on poverty be won, for low wages are the most significant single cause of poverty.

As the ensuing articles in this publication make clear, we propose three immediate and one long-range attack on this front.

First, we want a $2 minimum wage established now.

Second, we want the law to cover all who should reasonably fall within its protection.

Third, we want a double-time penalty to discourage overtime.

Down the road, but not very far down, we want a reduction in the basic workweek to 35 hours with no loss in earnings. We are, as always, realistic and pragmatic; we recognize that this must be done a step at a time, but a start must now be made.

What concerns us most is the plight of the working poor.

It is bad enough to be without a job, or to have a job of sorts which offers only part-time work. It is even worse to work hard, every day and every week, and still earn too little to be self-supporting. Yet this is the plight of many thousands of workers from coast to coast—including many who are assured of the present minimum wage of $1.25 an hour.

The fact that more than half of the American families now living in poverty are headed by an employed worker—and 30 percent of them by a full-time worker—is a national disgrace by any measure. Surely it is indefensible for any American, fully employed at useful work, to be paid less than he needs to support himself and his family.

That is why a $2 minimum must be established; and that is why many more millions of working Americans, now denied the protection of the law, must be covered by it.

The working poor refute the basic assumptions of American society; in their own lives the American dream is a nightmare. A $2 minimum, universally applied, is the least the nation can do to eradicate this blight.

An increase in the overtime penalty is essential to re-establish the standard workweek. A generation ago, time and a half discouraged overtime work, as it was intended to do. It no longer serves that purpose; thanks to both union and federal benefits, it is often cheaper to pay time and a half than to hire additional employes. Moreover, time and a half work is all too often scheduled as a substitute for a decent hourly rate.

Both these abuses would be met by boosting the overtime penalty. Work over 40 hours a week should cost enough to make new hiring a more attractive alternative. And the contemplated raise in the minimum wage should help low-paid workers to earn a living within the statutory limits.

Of our four-point program, the least understood is the shorter basic workweek, yet in one sense it is the simplest.

We have urged and are urging a whole series of job-creating programs. Some have been adopted; many others are likely to become law. The present Congress will go far beyond its recent predecessors in the enactment of social legislation which will, at the same time, create jobs; and, through the various phases of President Johnson's war on poverty, it is deliberately creating job opportunities as such.

Yet all this, even if supplemented by every other measure we have advocated, could result at best in momentary full employment. In no time at all, the inexorable increase in the labor force and the inevitable impact of automation would again leave millions jobless. This is why the workweek must be shortened—not because 40 hours are too long for workers, but because 40 hours are too long for the nation.

Each of the points I have touched upon is documented in the following pages. The case for each of them is, in the truest sense, unanswerable. To some of you, of course, one or two of the points have more immediate importance than the others; but I assure you that, in the broad sense, every one of them is vital to every worker.

Yes, our primary motive, as I said earlier, is the war against poverty, the rescue of the working poor. But the ultimate effect of this four-point effort goes even further. What we propose in the way of amendments to this single statute involves the security and the ultimate well-being of every wage and salary earner in America and thus of America itself.

Dear Mr. Farmer:

My observations, made during the last three months, of the events meriting national press notice have failed to disclose more than a solitary occurrence of a person of colour seeking 'civil liberties'. My meaning of 'civil liberties' can be best explained by reference to the substance of the event cited. It has to do with the Virginia couple, one of whom is of colour, and their suit to force that state to recognize their marriage.

To articulate my meaning simply it is only necessary to say that equality is synonymous with miscegenation, although, not entirely dependent upon it.

Men and women of colour have not been the only victims of this deception that leads to laws prohibiting miscegenation. There is no human power that can accurately record the number of lives, whose expression has been determined by fear because we have wasted our energy and our substance to maintain the barriers of hate and fallacious race designation by laws prohibiting miscegenation.

In light of the very recent events occurring in Alabama, I am militantly inclined to prove my beliefs in miscegenation. I am making every effort possible to carry these beliefs into the South with action. My plan is to move to the French Quarter of New Orleans and live there with a woman of colour in my apartment. A persual of the attached letter will clarify the manner in which I hope to operate this 'action defiance' of Louisianna civil law until that time that its law prohibiting miscegenation is abolished.

For long I was unsophisticate. Searching for myself and asking questions of everyone except myself. I found these questions to be ones which I, and solely I, could answer. That is why I wish this battle with that body corporate of nineteen states who deny expression of life by laws prohibiting miscegenation. This thought of defiance makes me feel intensely alive and striding on the path of logical living.

To explain the details of this endeavor further a few more pertinent facts need mention. The stipend I have reference to is monthly retirement pay for military service of ammount $126. I feel that two of us shall find existence possible on this sum if it be adjusted to meet food and rental payments only.

The letter to Miss Valdery is indicative of the fact that I do not yet know her, and ample evidence of the difficulties I am having in establishing eommunication with someone having the same thoughts as mine. The name and address of Miss Maria Valdery, obtained from The Times Picayune report of her arrest recently, has been the only method of contact that I have devised.

The basic problem again. It is not whether I accept or reject American ideas on miscegenation. It is, rather, how can I get into a position where I may have maximum influence upon its solution in the only manner I can uphold as being of value to the American people and nation.

Thru the task outlined as my personal undertaking and the present facts brought to your attention may I depend upon the legal aid of an attorney of your organization should my arrest stem from this crusade? May I further ask your indulgence in any help you can of possibility give me in communication with Miss Valdery, in addition to the letter, of which a copy is attached, and I am mailing on this same date?

I shall be available at this address thru 30 April 1965.

Sincerely,

F. D. Van Vranken

New Orleans, La.

My dear Maria,

Consistent with the humid day you are wearing brief shorts and a bandeau, not entirely opaque. You are putting our rooms in order. The vision is enchanting; the bareness of your brown legs and exposed midriff diverting as you bend to pick up an ashtray. The sight of your loveliness once more demanding that I be thankful for the sentiments that were resultant in our association at this Vieux Carre apartment.

As you may have now conjectured I am a free-lance author, aspiring to know you as a companion and confident. Moreover, I have an authentic and militant cause! I am desirous of your companionship and alliance in a crusade for nullification of the laws, prevalent in nineteen states, prohibiting miscegenation, (or the marriage between people of colour and non-colour). The popular term of Negro as used in the United States is now fallacious, and never of my use when avoidable, or when not of direct context to the statement I am making.

The success of this endeavor depends upon the following facts. An atmosphere in which I can employ my time in study and writing upon this subject without regard to housekeeping chores, and a companion of colour who is of the same mind that these laws deprive both peoples of marrying as their heart dictates.

Men and women of colour have not been the only victims of this deception. There is no human power that can accurately record the number of lives, whose expression has been determined by fear because we have wasted our energy and our substance to maintain the barriers of hate and fallacious race designation by these laws prohibiting miscegenation.

To make possible this effort I have a small monthly stipend of adequacy to rent an economical furnished apartment, with provision of food for two if the cooking be done at home. My plan is to rent a furnished three room apartment in the Vieux Carre equipped with, in addition to bedroom for you, a sofa-bed combination in living room, where you and I might reside with all the earmarks of living seperately as housekeeper and patron, while my work goes forward due to your help.

With plan of moving to New Orleans on the first of May, I am making every effort to round out all details first. Would you be interested in room and board at no cost, in return for a minimum

THE PROGRESSIVE

TRUMAN AGAINST MIXED MARRIAGES AMONG RACES

NEW YORK, Sept. 11 (UPI) —Former President Harry S. Truman said today he sympathizes with Southerners who "don't want to be pushed around by damn Yankees."

Reporters accompanying him on his stroll along Madison and Park Avenues asked him if he thought integration would lead to intermarriage.

"I hope not," Truman said. "I don't believe in it. The Lord created it that way. You read the Bible and you'll find out."

Then he turned to a reporter and asked if he would want his daughter to marry a Negro.

"If she loved him," the reporter answered.

"She won't love somebody that's not her color," Truman said.

Miscegenation

Milton Mayer

the issue is MISCEGENATION

by MILTON MAYER

". . . Judge Douglas is especially horrified at the thought of the mixing of blood by the white and black races. Agreed for once—a thousand times agreed."

—ABRAHAM LINCOLN, 1858.

THE INTEGRATIONISTS say that the issue is equal educational opportunity. The segregationists say that the issue is sexual intercourse of Negroes with whites and the consequent amalgamation of the races. When the Supreme Court ordered public school desegregation in 1954 the Jackson, Miss., Daily News said: "White and Negro children in the same schools will lead to miscegenation." As long as the integrationists go on saying that the issue is nothing but civil rights, they will be talking to themselves.

Miscegenation is the way the segregationists have always defined the issue. This is the way it was defined by Stephen A. Douglas in 1858. Lincoln disagreed; like the present-day integrationists, he insisted that the issue was simply legal equality; and he protested against "the counterfeit logic which concludes that, because I do not want a black woman for a slave, I must necessarily want her for a wife." After the Civil War the Knights of the White Camellia said in their constitution that "social equality would soon be the fruitful source of intermarriage between individuals of the two races; and the result of this miscegenation would be gradual amalgamation and the production of a degenerate offspring."

Social equality leads to miscegenation. What constitutes "social equality"? Anything and everything; in the old days, emancipation from slavery, today desegregated schools and buses, restaurants and housing. Gunnar Myrdal, in his monumental American Dilemma, found that "the very lack of precision allows the notion of 'no social equality' to rationalize the whole system of color caste in America." In the segregationist's logic, every deprivation of rights (at least where those rights bring Negroes and whites together) is justified as resistance to miscegenation.

The consecrated taboo in America is, of course, intermarriage, and not miscegenation at all (unless the miscegenation involves a white woman against her will). When the segregationist rails against "race pollution," he does not necessarily care how much the race is polluted or how much his ancestors have done to pollute it, as long as their legal wives were white. When he cries "mongrelization" he doesn't ordinarily mean that he objects to the production of mongrels by himself or the males who listen to him, just as long as the producers, good, religious people that they are, are married only in the sight of God.

"Would You Want Your Daughter . . . ?"

"I was addressing a girls' school recently," says Negro attorney William Kelley, executive secretary of the Milwaukee Urban League. "My subject was the Supreme Court's outlawry of the 'separate but equal treatment' doctrine in public education. In the middle of the question period a girl got up and said:

" 'Do you believe in miscegenation?'

"I said the only thing I could think of:

" 'Do you mean miscegenation, or do you mean the solemnization of miscegenation and the assumption of the legal, moral, and religious responsibilities that such solemnization entails? If you simply mean miscegenation, you're asking about an accomplished fact, and there's nothing to be said about it. There are several million Americans called Negro whose pigmentation ranges from sepia to pomegranate to ochre, from milk-chocolate brown to daffodil yellow, and they didn't get here by any "separate but equal" treatment.' "

The segregationist's trump question is, of course, "Would you want your daughter to marry a nigger?" Many liberals, having tried (and failed) to avoid answering that question, have tried to answer it. I am one of them. My answer, "Not unless she was in love with him," is no answer. Neither is another I've heard given Southerners: "Your daughters have always married Negroes; it's your wives' daughters you're worried about." The only actual answer I've ever heard was the one given by a Jew: "No, I wouldn't. I wouldn't want her to marry any of you gentiles."

There is almost no Negro-white intermarriage in America. The highest rate ever recorded was 1.2 per 100 marriages in Los Angeles 1924-32, and this figure represented the intermarriage of whites with all other races in an area with a comparatively high proportion of Latin Americans, Filipinos, Orientals, and Indians. In 1948 the California statute forbidding interracial marriages was invalidated, and in 1951 there were .56 such marriages per 100 in the state—about one-half of one per cent. Five years afterward John H. Burma reported in the American Journal of Sociology that "no significant trends as to increases or decreases by months or years were observable."

But miscegenation is something else. Its popularity, especially in the segregated South, is attested by the fact, no longer disputed, that at least 70 per cent of all American Negroes have one or more white ancestors. Segregation in the South has always been what proud Negroes bitterly, and proud whites jovially, call "daytime segregation."

Twenty-eight states—including all of the South and some of the West—have laws vividly forbidding intermarriage, but only four penalize interfornication and these four make no enforcement effort. Even before the War (Civil, of course) such statutes were dead letters in the South because a Negro could not testify against a white. Intermarriage, on the other hand, is just as sternly resisted by law today as it was in slavery; more so. Until 1910 it was permitted in Louisiana, where, for a hundred years, French Creoles had married wealthy Negro girls. (Before Emancipation one-fifth of the property of New Orleans was owned by Negroes or part-Negroes, many of whom had Negro slaves.)

Miscegenation has flourished in America as in no other country. Negro and white indentured servants were thrown together in one common depreciated class before the reduction of the Negro to slavery in the Eighteenth Century. Intermarriage was legal, and not infrequent. After slavery was established, the slave girl was not only at the mercy of her master; it was to her advantage to be his concubine and to the master's to breed the highly valued mulatto. (Breeding slaves was cheaper than buying them.) And before and since Emancipation (and since the beginning of the world, and until the end) there have been two compulsions to miscegenation. One, particularly strong in America, is the challenge of forbidden fruit; the other is the piquancy of variety or, as the French say in another (but related) connection, "Vive la difference!"

Not As Other Men Are

The white man's traditional repugnance toward miscegenation—Lincoln said he felt "disgust" at the idea—is not Southern. It is American, "remarkably similar," Myrdal found, "throughout the country." And in a truly miscegenated populace like ours—composed of all the racial stocks of Europe—the Negro is the one distinguishable outsider, the most obvious and ubiquitous "other." True, the Northerner does not appear to be thinking about miscegenation; perhaps because he doesn't dare to. But the Southerner isn't thinking about anything else. "They don't build a federal government big enough," says school segregationist Ace Carter of Alabama, "to integrate my daughter with niggers."

Is it the white man's fault; or is it his history's? He is pre-conditioned. He can not help discriminating the Negro; how can he help discriminating against him? And his country's peculiarly puritanical tradition, sensitizing him to sex, focuses his discrimination on miscegenation. The Northerner's prejudice against actual propinquity seems to be much stronger than the howling Southerner's; many old Southern cities have no residential segregation, and Professor E. Franklin Frazier, an authority on race relations in the post-bellum South, found very few Northern soldiers among the white ancestors of part-Negroes. "Northern soldiers," he says, "had an aversion to close intimate contacts with the blacks, an attitude that was lacking among Southern whites." As well it might have been, among a people who as children had played and eaten and slept with Negro children and, as infants, may even have been suckled by a Negro "mammy."

On the surface the Negro is as firmly opposed to miscegenation as the white—but not for the same reason. White and Negro scholars agree that the Negro's race pride is a defense reaction or response to white prejudice, a "secondary attitude." Common as this pride is among Negro chauvinists, it is, says Myrdal, "a white, not a Negro, argument." Negroes know that their race is not pure. They know it by looking at themselves. And for two hundred years they have had a social stratification among themselves based upon their knowledge of their racial impurity: a "good complexion" is a light one, "good hair" straight, a "good nose" thin-nostriled.

Does this mean that the Negro favors miscegenation? In a negative sense he does; he would be inconsistent if he didn't. But what he wants is the repeal of racist marriage laws—not merely because they insult him and deny his civil liberty, but because of their effect in encouraging illegal miscegenation, with its abuse and exploitation of the Negro woman and the legal impunity of the gallivanting white man.

A harder question is whether the Negro actually shares the white man's "natural disgust" at the idea of miscegenation. The answer—impossible to come by statistically—would seem to be that he doesn't. Repugnance requires a sense of superiority. Equals may hate those who subjugate them, but they do not find them categorically obnoxious; the man who is excluded from the country club because of his race or religion has no primary feeling against intimate association with the members. Similarly, the Negro who considers himself the white man's equal would seem to have no primary attitude toward miscegenation, any more than, say, Pennsylvania boys react to Ohio or Michigan girls. People tend to fall in love with "their own kind"—nationally, religiously, or racially. Negroes assume they will marry Negroes; and nearly every last one of them does.

The White Man's Dream World

There are two kinds of reality—the reality of things as they are (or may be) and the reality of things as people see them. The two realities may coincide, but the white man's hostility toward miscegenation and his dread of amalgamation arise strictly from three realities of the second kind.

First, he sees that there are such things as races and there is such a thing as a pure race.

As far as science now knows, there aren't and there isn't. In the middle of the Eighteenth Century the "father of anthropology," Blumenbach, concluded that "no variety of mankind exists, whether of color, countenance or stature, etc., so singular as not to be connected with others of the same kind by such an imperceptible transition that it is very clear they are all related or only differ from one another in degrees." Two centuries later the eminent Krogman, in The Concept of Race, summarizes the present state of our knowledge: "Below the level of the species definition is uncertain, persistence is doubtful, and transmission is variable. In other words, the breakdown of Homo sapiens into subgroups is zoologically very risky business . . . We are all far more alike than different . . .[There are] no fundamental differences . . . biogenic potentialities are shared equally . . ."

There are observable and measurable physical differences that enable us, simply for purposes of superficial classification, to distinguish human groups. How did these differences come about? The only possible assumption, says Krogman, is that "the basic sapiens population from which modern races developed was relatively homogenous, and that via mutation, isolation, selection, and recombination diverse gene-populations emerged." Physical traits, bred into geographically isolated groups, show signs of adaptation to the conditions of environment. Says Huxley: "The dark skin, which characterizes most of the people living near the tropics, is almost certainly the result of elimination by natural selection of the fairer types of pigmentation less fitted to afford protection against the actinic rays of the sun. The greater number of sweat glands in the Negro and the reduction of their number among the yellow-skinned peoples, are probably adaptations to hot and to dry conditions respectively . . . A white skin is a disadvantage in the Tropics and a wide nostril in the Arctic."

The "pure race"—if it could be found anywhere on earth—would have been utterly isolated for ages, culturally primitive, technologically backward, and undeveloped in the arts of civilization which the crossing of cultures has produced. We shall never know how "impure" the first American settlers, black or white, were when they got here; we know that African soldiers invaded Britain with Caesar two thousand years ago, and, boys being boys, one thing certainly led to another. We know that Europeans, especially Portuguese, were frequent settlers in the West African ancestral areas of most American slaves. And we know that in America free intermarriage between white and Negro indentured servants was not prohibited until 1691, in Virginia, and that prior to the reduction of the Negro to slavery the "poor white's" hatred of him was unknown. How much Negro-white miscegenation there was between 1619 (when the first Negroes reached Virginia) and the Civil War is suggested by Ray Stannard Baker's calculation in 1908 that three million of the country's ten million Negroes were mulattoes, or half-whites. Wirth and Goldhammer, in Characteristics of the American Negro, tell us that "contemporary observers, on the whole, tend to leave an impression that no likely-looking Negro, or especially mulatto, girl was liable to be left unmolested by the white males [in the ante-bellum South]; that few of the young white men grow up 'virtuously,' and that their loss of virtue was scarcely to be attributed to cohabitation with white women."

The rate of miscegenation continued to rise in the South even after the Civil War. (The original Klan required its members to swear only that they would not marry a Negro.) After her emancipation the freedwoman could move about, and into the white man's cities; but she was still defenseless against him. "Father Abraham" had made her his equal, but Father Abraham wasn't down in Dixie in the '70's and '80's. Besides, concubinage with a white man was, if anything, more than ever economically better than marriage to a Negro. And the mulatto's high value—as the white man's sex object and the white woman's servant girl—was still an incentive to "breeding" half-bloods.

The reduction in miscegenation probably set in in the '90's or shortly afterward; no one knows. Urbanization would tend to increase it (especially in the North) and so would the sexual laxity of the Twentieth Century. But that same sexual laxity made white women more readily available to white men, and would therefore tend to reduce "mixing." The decisive factor in reduction was doubtless the rising status of the Negro and, with it, rising pride and moral dignity.

But there is no *un*miscegenation. The "white" and "Negro" blood that was mixed at the pleasure of the bygone Southern gentleman is mixed forever. If there is no pure race now—and there isn't—there never will be.

Second, the white man sees the Negro as a race, to which an individual either belongs or doesn't.

As long as the white man defines Negro simply as "Negro" (as he does in the marriage laws of West Virginia and Colorado), he is safe from contradiction, if not from redundancy. As long as he talks (as he does in the Oklahoma law) about "any person of African descent," he is safe; providing, of course, that he doesn't mind excluding some whites of African descent and some Negroes of non-African descent. As long as he says (as he does in Nevada) "any person of the Ethiopian or black race" or (in South Dakota) "members of the African race," he is all right providing he agrees that a nation or a continent is a race. But the minute he tries to make more sense than any of this, he gets into trouble.

If he prohibits the intermarriage of "persons having one-fourth Negro blood," as he does in Kentucky and Oregon, he seems to have decided that a person with 24.99 per cent Negro blood is a white; a very difficult decision, especially when Florida, Indiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, South Carolina, and North Dakota have decided that persons having 12.50 per cent (or one-eighth) Negro blood may not marry whites; the 24.99 per cent man appears to be white in Kentucky and non-white in Mississippi. The Mississippian with 12.49 per cent Negro blood is eligible to marry the Natchez Magnolia Queen—but he'd better not let the sun set on him in this town if he has 12.50 per cent.

In Alabama we draw the line just a little bit finer than we do in Caroliner. We don't fool around with percentages. We cal'ate in drops. Persons having "one drop of Negro blood" are interdicted; should such person be waylaid en route to his wedding with the local Cotton Queen and, in the ensuing confusion, lose one drop of blood, and that one turn out to be the Negro drop, he could proceed with his now honorable intentions. But not in Georgia or Virginia, where "any ascertainable trace of Negro blood" puts a man beyond the palefaces. Now everybody knows that a trace is less than a drop; thus Georgia and Virginia must look upon Alabama (not to say Mississippi and Carolina) as a hotbed of "mixing."

There is, of course, no such thing as "Negro blood," in any quantity. Human blood can be differentiated only in one way—by the four common groups found indiscriminately in all human stocks. During World War II the American Red Cross (then a semi-official agency of the government) first refused Negro blood donors. A howl went up, and the Red Cross thereafter accepted "Negro blood" but segregated it for transfusion to Negro soldiers only.

Third, the white man sees not only that there are Negro and white races, but that the white is superior.

Because the mulatto's white father prized him for his "white blood"—even educating and occasionally freeing him—the full Negro of slave times accepted the mulatto as a superior kind of creature, a sort of tertium quid, below the white, but above himself. This acceptance by the Negro of the white man's theory of racial superiority has descended in the Negro social mythos to the present day. But there are signs of a change, although the successful or attractive Negro still tends to "marry light" and is more readily hired by Negro employers. The mulatto myth always involved envy and resentment among full blacks anyway, and it is now beginning to lose its status with them. They know that, belatedly given opportunity, they are as capable as mixed-bloods.

With the abolition of slavery, the white man's new race hatred of his newly legalized equals compelled him to relinquish one of his favorite arguments for white superiority, namely, the obvious superiority of the mulatto over the "pure" Negro. (The argument, of course, ignored the fact that the mulatto had always enjoyed superior advantages.) Today the prejudiced white sees Negroes, dark or light, as indiscriminately inferior. And they are inferior, on the average, in their occupations, their housing, their education, their achievement in almost every field.

"The American," said Bernard Shaw, "compels the Negro to black his boots and then says, 'He's fit for nothing but blacking my boots.' " To say that all, or most, or many, or some Negroes are found among lowly placed, or unskilled, or uncouth people is simply to say that whatever it is that makes people that way also makes all, or most, or many, or some Negroes that way. But to say that the Negro race is an inferior race is to say that every Negro is born that way and will die that way, no matter what his opportunity. It is to say that he is in an inferior situation.

Myrdal, though he found the Northerner more polite, more "tolerant," could find no substantial difference among whites of different regions or classes on this one fundamental belief—that the Negro is somehow racially inferior. The white man's aversion to miscegenation requires that he believe the Negro inherently subhuman. Even a Lincoln, seeing nothing but the then condition of Negroes, recorded his conviction that "in some respects he certainly is not my equal." In what respects he doesn't say—few whites do. And if a Lincoln, why not you and I? If the "nigger" were your equal, you would want your daughter to marry him.

The Negro's racial inferiority is something the white man knows in his bones, or in his viscera; in other words, a prejudice, which, like all prejudices, may with equal likelihood be true or untrue. When, under some duress, the locus of the inferiority is specified, it is invariably in one or more of three areas—biological, intellectual, or cultural.

One—The Negro's racial inferiority is proved anatomically and physiologically—that is, he is constructed differently and, as an organism, functions differently from the white; and the differences are hierarchical, lower-higher, like those of the ape and man.

Scientifically this supposition is wholly discredited. Of the four characteristic features of the "typical" Negro—dark skin, broad nose, woolly hair, thick lips—the first two are a little closer to the ape man than the white man's while the white's hair and lips are much closer to the ape than the Negro's. As for "primitive" and "advanced" stages of evolution, all morphological evidence indicates that man evolved only once. We have already seen that there is no such thing as "Negro" blood. It is equally impossible to determine by examination of the human brain whether its owner was black, white, or pimiento. True, the ideal Negro type tends to dolichocephaly—long-headedness, to you and me—and to a degree matched by only one other human type: the ideal Nordic type. By all other standard indices, such as fertility of mixed mating (even the fox and the wolf can not mate fruitfully) and comparative harmony-disharmony of parts, there is no evidence of hierarchy.

In the late Nineteenth and early Twentieth Centuries the facts of biology and psychology proved that Negroes were different from whites, not just in visible and measurable bodily features but in higher susceptibility to disease, in lower mental ability, in greater personality disorder. The rise of social research in the 1920's began to complicate the picture. And if there is anything that people who have simple scientific facts to sustain their prejudices do not like, it is complications. The findings of social research were facts, too, but they had the disadvantage (in the layman's view) of being come by without microscope or stethoscope. They were facts about environment—housing, diet, climate, clothing, medical care, and educational and occupational opportunity.

But the new facts coincided with new medical knowledge. Pellagra, syphilis, and nephritis were now known to be environmental, not constitutional. The Negro's notorious susceptibility to tuberculosis declined as his living conditions improved. A study which showed that Illinois Negroes had a dementia praecox rate three times as high as whites had to be reinterpreted—or, rather, interpreted for the first time—in light of the facts that Illinois Negroes were concentrated in cities (where the overall rate is twice as high as in rural areas), that Illinois Negroes were concentrated in those age and income groups with the highest rate of d.p., and that most Illinois Negroes were recent migrants, whose mental disease incidence, regardless of color, is much higher than that of natives. In every area where social research was correlated with the biological facts, the inference of racial superiority has been undermined or exploded.

Two—The Negro's racial inferiority is proved intellectually—that is, he is unable to think as well or learn as much as a white man.

Less than 20 years ago a Fortune survey found that a majority of whites, ranging from 60 per cent in the North to 76.9 per cent in the South thought that "Negroes now generally have lower intelligence than white people." The percentage of those who regarded the difference as due at least in part to heredity ranged from 55.5 to 79.2. The Negro's actual inferiority was obvious, and, besides, the new intelligence tests showed that the average Negro I.Q. was 20 to 25 per cent lower than the white.

But was it—again—because he was a Negro?

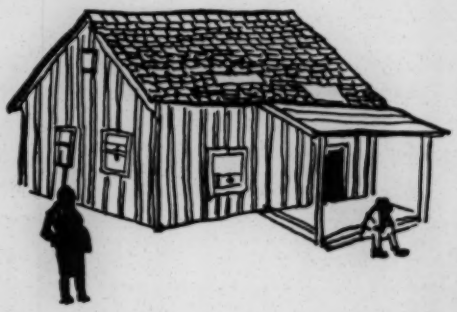
Intelligence tests tried to measure the innate capacity of the subject to learn. But nobody knew then (or knows now) if mental capacity is an innately determined quantum, or if the tests we have yet been able to devise operate prejudicially in connection with the subject's environment. Complications again—and the I.Q. figures were so nice and simple. As a matter of fact, the rug had already been pulled out from under the superior intelligence superstition (a superstition confirmed by scientific facts!) in 1921, with Yerkes' classic monograph, "Psychological Examining in the U.S. Army," published quietly in the Memoirs of the National Academy of Science. In the Army Alpha test of 1917, a language-based test given only to literate recruits, Negroes as a whole had scored much lower than whites, but Northern Negroes had scored much higher than Southern whites, and the same thing was true of the non-language Beta test. The median scores for Negroes from New York, Illinois, and Ohio were 45.02, 47.35, and 49.50 respectively; of whites from Mississippi, Kentucky, and Arkansas, 41.25, 41.50, and 41.55.



Either Northern Negroes were innately more intelligent than Southern whites, or the education of Southerners was so poor that Northerners, white or Negro, appeared to be innately more intelligent than white or Negro Southerners. Which was it? The answer was obvious: Environmental conditions made Southern whites look as if they had been born less intelligent than Northern Negroes.

Before the I.Q. fad subsided at the end of the '30's, it was found that one group of underprivileged Negro children in Tennessee had a score of 58; another group of privileged Negro children in California had a score of 105. The Los Angeles Public Schools tested 500 Negro children with the whites in 15 elementary schools and found the median I.Q. slightly higher for the Negro group. Successive types of testing have all demonstrated that group biological differences, however real, do not account for group intellectual differences.

Three—The Negro's racial inferiority is proved culturally—that is, by his inability to develop an "advanced" society or keep pace with the one he is in.

Of the three race dogmas this is the hardest to investigate. It requires the impossible—an objective definition of culture. People who cut off their enemies' heads with machetes and people who cut off their friends' heads with two-toned convertibles both regard their cultures as advanced. Still the fact (at least a fact) remains. The American Negro as a whole is backward in terms of American cultural standards in science, art, morals, and manners. This anyone can see, and what anyone can see must be true. But is it because he is a Negro? Even before the development of social research this particular dogma was shaky. True, the racist saw the shiftless, "worthless" Negro all around him; but he also saw the Frederick Douglass, the George Washington Carver, the Booker T. Washington, indubitable Negroes of indubitable genius. Carver could not be a Negro and still save the "goober" economy by his plant research—but he was and he did.

There was something else, something that the Southern racist did not see. That was his own culture. The behavior he ridiculed or condemned in the Negro was his own. The Negro was a Southerner. The lazy, good-natured, romantic, immoral, profligate, shabby, violent Negro reflected traits that are so common in the South that the foreign visitor (not to say the Northerner) calls them all Southern traits. What produced them in many or most Southern whites produced them still more prevalently in the most depressed Southerner, the Negro. Climate, soil, boll-weevil, poverty, defeat—in a word, environment.

Still the fact remains: Negro culture is inconsequential. The Negro's sole contribution to American culture is American music, which is tom-tom primitive. But we don't ask what the Swede's contribution is, or the Pole's, or the Irishman's, or even what American culture is, or how much there is of it. If there were only one "pure" Negro who was a genius or a saint (instead of hundreds or thousands), the white man could not say truthfully that the Negro is culturally incapable, or that only white men develop a culture. In deference to the "exceptions," the white modifies his generalization, then, and says that most or many Negroes are backward; and the next thing he knows (or doesn't), he has forgotten the qualification and talks about the Negro.

However "culture" is defined, cultures rise and fall; we have only to think of ancient and modern Greece. The Negro slave's ancestral culture may well have been much higher than his first American master's; several pre-medieval African cultures (notably Ethiopia's) were more advanced, even by present Western standards, than any of contemporaneous Europe's. But the black man's culture was beaten out of him with the lash. He was separated from his kinsmen and countrymen so that he could more easily be brainwashed. And for two hundred years he was fixed in his degradation. Literacy, property, and human rights were forbidden him by law until 1863 and for another half century denied him in fact. He is just now emerging from all the indignities that can be visited upon a man. And unlike the Japanese- or Chinese-descended Americans, he has no culture other than America's to call his own, no other basis for group pride, no memory (so immutably tied to language) of another civilization. If he has got to be a second-class American, then he has got to be a second-class man, because an American is all he is.

Like "Negro intelligence," "Negro personality" and "Negro character" appear to be the product of environment; at least, other persons and groups of people in the same condition act, never uniformly, but, like the Negro, on the average, in the same way. Summarizing the vast Carnegie Study in Characteristics of the American Negro, Klineberg writes: "What differences there are appear to depend on existing discrepancies in the opportunities afforded to the two groups." The popular concept of the "marginal" man originally described the individual of one culture who had to live in another, the "cultural hybrid." When the individual is racially, as well as culturally, marginal; when, in a word, he can be distinguished not only by background but by appearance, his maladjustment is, axiomatically, intensified. That a culturally and racially "marginal" man should ever achieve "normal" behavior might well be viewed as something of a superhuman achievement, a sign of individual, if not racial, superiority.

"But We Always Knew That"

When we submit the arguments against white superiority to our enlightened neighbor, he says, "Of course, of course. I've known that for years. There's nothing really inferior about Negroes. Why, I know a Negro college professor who. . . ." We must interrupt him at this point and say, "Would you want your daughter to marry a nigger?" He rocks on his heels, and, while he is still rocking, we ask him, "Would you want niggers"—we are very careful here to say "nigger," not "Negro"—in your golf club?" As soon as he recovers sufficiently to begin sputtering, "Why—why—why—," we must interrupt him again and say, "Why not?" It is only then that we come to the heart of the issue.

It doesn't matter whether Negroes are innately inferior, equal, or superior, temporarily or permanently. What matters is something so profound that no argument touches it, no evidence speaks to it. Our enlightened neighbor, who is long since convinced that there is no such thing as racial superiority, is ourselves. And like ourselves he is moved by a mechanism hidden in the deepest recesses of the heart. He has rejected every argument against segregation—which means every argument against miscegenation. But the hidden mechanism still functions. He is a racist. You are a racist. I am a racist. Why?

The Christian has the easy answer: The Devil. The Devil has planted in all of us the love of unearned increment, of something for nothing. If, without lifting a finger, I can be superior—well, why not? If, however worthless I may be, I can be worth something by having been born white, or American, or the eldest son of the Duke of Marlborough, I will cherish the worth all the more mightily. It's my one absolutely inalienable possession. I may forfeit my good name; my purse, my home, my family, my job, my health, my liberty, and my life may all be taken from me. But nobody can take my whiteness away from me. I'm in.

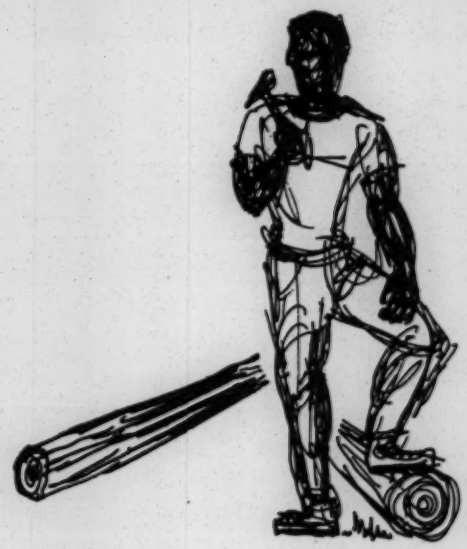
When a few members of what the sociologist calls the out-group come—unwillingly, in the Negro's case—to live among the in-group, they are depreciated—the depreciation ranging from the city man's ridicule of the yokel to the native white's dislike of the foreigner or the Negro. As long as the out-group are few (or are held in subjection as they increase), they are not thought of as dangerous. But when they increase and are no longer legally subjugated, they are no longer merely comical or obnoxious, but dangerous, and the in-group's sense of security requires their segregation.

The white man who has never directly injured a Negro may nevertheless bear the unconscious guilt of chattel slavery and hate the cause of his vicarious wrongdoing; while the white who has directly injured a Negro (merely, for example, for living in a "restricted" neighborhood) may have a still heavier guilt to justify by hatred. Deeper buried still: Man, the impure, wants to be freed from his impurity—from impure flesh and blood and bone, from impure occupations and associations, from impure thoughts and desires. He wants to be "washed," "cleansed," "white as snow." And the Negro is black—the color of evil and dirt and the dread unknown.

Acceptance of this racist mystique, below the level of rationality, is not confined to yahoos and legislators. Learned men of the greatest consequence, judges, South and North, low and high, have generally upheld the racist marriage statutes of the states, and their opinions ring repetitiously with the characterization of mixed marriages as "unnatural," "productive of deplorable results," "conducive to a degeneration of the public morals," and detrimental to the "moral and physical development of both races and the highest advancement of civilization." The documentation of such assertions from the bench is invariably missing; white judges turn out to be white men. Four years ago the "liberal" Virginia Supreme Court, upholding that state's statute, found that "there is no requirement that the state . . . must permit the corruption of blood [which would] weaken or destroy the quality of its citizenship."

In the Evening, by the Moonlight . . .

Does the "social equality" which the segregationist says leads to miscegenation actually lead to it? It was the social inequality of slavery and the segregationist South, reinforced by laws which forbade interracial marriage and even interracial fornication, that led to miscegenation on a colossal scale, while the relative social equality of the North led to intermarriage on a miniscule scale. The racist's ready invocation of white Southern womanhood and its protection suggests that he is preoccupied with rape; but it would not seem to be rape that he has on his mind when he asks, "Would you want your daughter to marry a nigger?" And rape accounts for almost no miscegenation; voluntariness is of the essence of the evil (if it is an evil). The question has often been asked of the whites who enact laws against intermarriage: If their white women do not want to marry Negroes, why is it necessary for them to pass laws forbidding them to do so? The question is a mean one.



It would be a little more decorous to discuss miscegenation without reference to sex, but it would also be a little more difficult. To begin with, the fascination of the repugnant, in any area of life, is a commonplace: "I simply couldn't take my eyes off it," whether the "it" is a murder on television or a monster in a sideshow. It not only rivets the eyes, it unrivets responses we normally try to keep cribb'd, cabin'd, and confined. And the fascination and the repugnance both seem to spring from the same aspect of the object: its difference from ourselves and what we know. Deep stuff, perhaps; but the soul is not a shallow saucer, and sex is an emanation of the soul.

Whether white women are more attracted to Negro men than white men to Negro women is undetermined and, probably, undeterminable. The few (and necessarily inadequate) studies of intermarriage, in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, and Los Angeles County, reveal a great preponderance of Negro husbands and white wives. But this fact, even if it is universal, is not conclusive alone. The human male is the aggressor; it is he who does the courting and proposing. And most intermarriage is in Northern cities, where the proportion of unattached Negro males to females is high. In addition, intermarriage in America nearly always involves "emancipated" individuals, among whom there are many white and few Negro women. A considerable percentage of white female-Negro male marriages certainly involves a degree of "protest" on the part of the white females—protest against the sexless preoccupation of the modern white American male with "getting ahead," or against their own fathers.

But sex rears its beautiful head in the midst of these pedestrian speculations. Both classic and modern historians confirm James Baldwin's assertion, in Notes of a Native Son, that "darker races always seem to have for lighter races an aura of sexuality." The rapist of the Southerner's nightmare—or dream—is the "buck nigger," big and black. The Nubian slave of high romance was a Negro. And the chronicles of explorers abound in their coming to rest (at least temporarily) by the side of a dark-skinned girl. Whether tropical peoples are more interesting sexually than non-tropical peoples may be debatable; but it is generally observed that they are more languid and more excitable—qualities that in combination are not unpraised by the poets.

There is no doubt, however, that the Southern white preferred the mulatto slave girl to her full-blooded Negro sister as the object of his passion. The storied "quadroon ball" of early New Orleans, the commonplace marriage of French Creoles to mulatto girls in the same city, and the well developed placage system there, in which white men established a permanent contractual relationship with mixed-blood girls, whom they courted and whose parents' permission they asked, all suggest that the nearer to white a "Negro" girl was, the more desirable she was to white men. Why? She was more "white" than her black sister but, above all, rarer, and rarity, like variety, is said to be spicy.

Sex is the opposite of the weather; everybody talks about the weather and nobody does anything about it. The role of sex in miscegenation is more obvious than the way in which the role is played. There are some things that Professor Kinsey despaired of learning, and should. But Myrdal was willing to say that "the South has an obsession with sex which helps to make this region quite irrational in dealing with Negroes generally. . . . The sadistic element in most lynchings"—often involving emasculation of the victim—"also points to a close relation between lynching and thwarted sexual urges."

It was out of this unpenetrated and perhaps forever impenetrable complex of non-rational drives that the South's "third sex" was born—the "flower of Southern womanhood." The origin of this "woman on a pedestal" may in part (but only in part) be explained by the Puritan strain in American culture, South and North; the Negro slave girl, defenseless in any case, was uninhibited by the blessing of a puritanical upbringing. The white wife was absolutely unable to avoid knowing of the carryings-on of her husband—and of her father and her son. And the Northern abolitionists were loud against it. The Southerner's answer to both his wife and the Yankee was the construction of a beautiful fiction. "On the one hand," says Wilbur Cash in The Mind of the South, "the convention must be set up that the thing simply did not exist . . . and on the other, the woman must be compensated, the revolting suspicion in the male that he might be slipping into bestiality got rid of, by glorifying her." The Southern gentleman was able to convince himself, as he found his way down to the cabins by moonlight, that his wife was a paragon. She may have had little occasion to be anything else.

The Mongrel and the Hybrid

Miscegenation certainly can't impurify the race unless it produces offspring. And even then, unless the offspring miscegenates, the impurity, if any, dies with him. But the inferiority of the Negro and the superiority of the white ought both to be apparent in the half-breed. He ought to be superior to his Negro parent and inferior to his white. The proof of the mixing is in the mulatto. Unless the mulatto is inferior to the white—and not because of environment—the Negro is not inferior to the white and miscegenation can not be condemned on the ground of racial corruption.

We know a little about the mulatto. We know that, at least until recently, he was generally the intellectual and cultural superior of the unmixed Negro. But was it because he had "white" blood? Social research does not say No; it simply says that the mulatto has always enjoyed (until very recently) an immense superiority of opportunity over the "pure" Negro. But the rate of anti-social behavior among mulattoes was also high. It has declined radically, as the mulatto has shared the increased opportunity for Negroes generally and as his once intense resentment of being peculiarily déclassé has faded with time and color; with greatly decreased miscegenation in the past half century, the mulatto has been disappearing. (Of course, the white racist who cited mulatto criminality or immorality was arguing against himself; if mixed-blood Negroes are inferior to pure-blood Negroes their inferiority must be the consequence of their "white" blood.)

You would rather be a hybrid than what the Kluxers call a mongrel—but there isn't any difference. Cross-fertilization has produced "mongrel" agricultural stocks of such superiority that the pure strain has in many instances been abandoned altogether. But the superior plant or animal hybrid is produced by controlled experimentation, while the consequences of random cross-fertilization in humans can only be observed. The studies of miscegenated groups—the Rehobother Bastards (a cross between South African Boers and Hottentots, as divergent a pair of "races" as can be imagined); the Polynesian-white descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty on Pitcairn Island; the Chinese-Hawaiians in Honolulu; white-Negroes in Brazil; and Indonesian-whites on the Timor Archipelago—all support the theory of heterosis, or hybrid vigor: the offspring of the cross tend to be larger in size, more active, more fertile, and with improved vitality and longevity. Scholars generally agree with Benedict, in The Races of Mankind, that "as far as we know, there are no immutable laws of nature that make racial intermixture harmful."

Of course the human hybrid will usually resemble each of his parents in some physical respects, but Hooten in the Harvard African Studies discovered that "Negroid features seem to be attenuated, rather than intensified, by successive generations of inbreeding of mixed types." "While two parties with Negro blood may very occasionally have an offspring with somewhat more Negroid features than themselves," say Wirth and Goldhammer in the Carnegie Study, "it is not possible for a white person and a person with some Negro ancestry to have an offspring more Negroid than the partner with Negro blood." The "black baby" of melodrama—the spawn of the young aristocrat and the beautiful brunette whose telltale shadows on her fingernails nobody ever noticed—is a complete fiction.

Who's Negro? Who's White?

If there is no other reliable basis for determining race, the only thing left is appearance. And here, as elsewhere in this life, appearance is deceitful. It is estimated that 30,000 part-Negroes a year "pass" into white society permanently, and that many times 30,000 might, but refuse to because of pride or family ties. And many "pass" without ever knowing they have done so. Unlike the "black baby" of fiction, the white baby of real life is often part Negro. Occasional instances reach publication; a few years ago a good "white" farmer in Mississippi named Davis Knight was convicted of miscegenation when a family feud disclosed (to him, as well as to his wife) that his great-grandmother had been a slave girl.

In A Study of Some Negro-White Families, Day of Harvard found that "dominant mulattoes and five-eighths [-white] individuals are frequently mistaken for foreigners of various nationalities, or for white Americans . . . I know of no case of a quadroon [one-fourth Negro] who could not easily 'pass' for white . . . In the few cases of octoroons [one-eighth Negro] which I have studied, I have been able so far to see no traces whatever of Negro admixture." Of 35 intermarried Negroes who "passed" for white, Day found 16 quadroons, 15 three-eighths Negroes, and four mulattoes. On the Von Luschen skin-color scale a study of mulattoes showed absolutely "white" pigmentation in 12.55 per cent of the males and 20.6 per cent of the females.

Nearly all of us know nothing of our ancestors beyond our great-grandparents. The shadow sinister may be just beyond the far side of our limited acquaintance with our forebears. And although most race marriage laws stigmatize Indians as well as Negroes, it should be observed that in Virginia, where a trace of Negro blood pollutes, a trace of Indian makes a First Family; intermarriage of whites with persons of one-sixteenth or less "Indian blood" is permitted in the Old Dominion, in deference to the proud racist descendants of the one good Indian who wasn't a dead Indian—Pocahontas. Will Rogers and Vice President Charles Curtis were proud of their Indian ancestry; it is only the Negro who is irredeemably inferior.

Once appearances have been shown to be deceitful of race, the ground begins to give way under the marriage statutes and the Red Cross "white blood" bank, and all the processes, legal, non-legal, and illegal, of racial discrimination totter on their single foundation. You may think you wouldn't eat with a Negro—or your daughter marry one—but for all you know you do and she has. You may cry up the protection of the white race without knowing that you don't belong to it. You may lynch your own half-brother on the charge that he plucked the flower of Southern womanhood—and the flower may have been a black one.

And if the preservation of the supremacy of the white race depends on the preservation of its looking white, the supremacists should turn their attention immediately from the "nigger-lovers" to the biochemists. The doom of white civilization may be foretold in the following words of Professor John A. Kenney in the Journal of the National Medical Association:

> "Lerner has shown [in the Archives of Biochemistry and Biophysics, 1952] that mercury will compete with copper ions in tyrosinase which in turn inactivates the enzyme which catalyzes melanin formation. Once this has occurred, the reaction is only slowly reversible."

It should be added that melanin is the black pigment present in the skin of all human beings except albinos. Almost any Negro—whose skin is not allergic and whose spirit is willing—can use a variety of standard formulae to whiten himself. The Citizens Councils should smash the pharmacist's jars of monobenzyl ether of hydroquinone and p-hydroxypropiophenone, the most effective devices against melanin formation.

Who Intermarries and Why

Most Negro-white marriages (and courtships), if not secret, are at least furtive. Unless the two partners have already cut themselves off from their backgrounds, their marriage will ordinarily do it for them. The relatives, friends, and business associates of the white partner will be the more hostile; the white is "marrying down," the Negro "up." Not that the Negro's circle will approve of the marriage—it won't—but it will be readier to forgive and to accept the white partner on the basis of merit. Negroes may be inferior, but they seem to be a little more human.

Thus the newlyweds move immediately into isolation—or into the Negro world. But there they are also uneasy. Negroes generally look upon the white bride or groom much as the whites do: There must be something wrong with a white who marries a Negro (or a Negro who marries a white). An occasional Negro—and a rare white—will marvel that two people could be so much in love as to have been willing to make the desperate sacrifices that intermarriage entails. Either partner, but particularly the white, is liable to lose his job if the marriage becomes known. So the tendency to keep it secret or, at least, "close" abides. Their friends are other intermarrieds (if there are any); in New York and Chicago there have been informal clubs of such couples. The intermarried pair ordinarily lives just inside the boundaries of a Negro neighborhood in a large city.

Something like half of the estimated ten to twenty thousand Negro-white couples in America are politically or artistically "advanced" individuals, people whose social and economic sanction does not depend on the church, the P.T.A., the Legion post, and the luncheon club. Among the other half of the intermarrieds, white immigrant males of low social status (and low native race prejudice) are common, especially since there is ordinarily a shortage of their countrywomen among them. (With immigration almost cut off, this source of intermarriage is disappearing.) Then there are native white males of low status, often personally unattractive to white girls.

Probably because of the immigrant and the unattractive male, the marrying age of interracial couples is very high; in the Los Angeles study, for instance, it was 39 for the white grooms. The proportion of divorced persons intermarrying is also very high, especially among the whites involved; in Philadelphia 34 out of 80 intermarried persons had previously been married to coracialists; it would appear an unsuccessful marriage is broadening.

Attractive white girls marrying Negroes are usually collage graduates and daughters of prominent parents, apparently from the "protest" category. Like white males of such standing, Negro girls with high status almost never intermarry, partly, no doubt, because of pride, partly because it's polite for a girl to wait until she's asked, and partly because they can "marry up" to a light-skinned Negro of position. Three times as many white women marry Negro men as Negro women marry white men.

The intermarriages that make news usually involve a Negro artist—Lena Horne and MGM Musical Director Lennie Hayton, Sugar Billy Daniels and Martha Braun, Sidney Bechet and Elizabeth Taylor. When Stuart Outerbridge of the Bermuda Outerbridges married Royce Wallace, a singer at his night club, he was thrown out of the Royal Bermuda Yacht Club and, he said, completely ostracized. Only once in a great while does a Negro leader "cross the line;" diplomat Frederick Douglass did, and so did NAACP secretary Walter White.

The wars of 1941-45 and 1950-53 added something new to American miscegenation—the white war bride, German, French, or English, brought back to America by the Negro soldier, and, more significantly, the Japanese or Korean war bride. Asians, especially Japanese, have a strong aversion to intermarriage (with whites or Negroes). Prior to the second world war there was almost no intermarriage among Japanese-Americans with any "out-group." It is very slowly increasing now, with whites, but almost no Mongoloid in America ever marries a Negro; yellow plus white racism. Europe has a fine new crop of mulattoes, Germany in particular; the French and American Occupation commands were more than benign in their attitude toward the Moroccan and Negro "debasement" of Hitler's Aryans.

Half of the Negro-white marriages in America are barren, and the other half produce remarkably small families, often one child, rarely more than two. The late age of the marriage combines with the unwillingness of the couple to subject children to the fearful strains of their position. More important, as regards amalgamation: inter-racial mating is almost always limited to a single generation, the reason, of course, being that the American mulatto is accepted only in the Negro world. The worst sufferer is the child whose white parent wants him accepted by whites.

If the American Negro is marginal, the mulatto child is sub-marginal. In his early teens he is likely to be called "bastard" or "miskeg" by Negroes, and in his childhood he may be taunted by his Negro playmates for the same reason that Negroes are taunted by whites: for being different. I knew a ten-year-old Negro boy during the second world war with very light skin but no sign of the epicanthic eye-fold common to Orientals; his black schoolfellows called him "Jap-eyes." The last stanza of Langston Hughes' poem, Cross, though its setting is the old South, portrays the mulatto adolescent everywhere:

My old man died in a fine big house
My ma died in a shack.
I wonder where I'm gonna die,
Being neither white nor black.

Wherever he dies, the chances that he (or she) will die married to a white are almost nil. The world (the American white world) says he's a Negro. He may hate being a Negro; but, if he does, he hates the world that made him a Negro still more. Marrying Negro, he will introduce a little more "white" blood into the next generation of blacks, but no more "Negro" blood into the white. If he marries. The tensions of his childhood may make a criminal (even a suicide, rare among Negroes) of him. Or a genius; the well known Negro journalist, George Schuyler, married the daughter of a white Texas banker, and their thirteen-year-old daughter's Manhattan Nocturne was premiered by the New York Philharmonic.

Who's Christian? Who's American?

Racial equality has come about—like miscegenation—without benefit of clergy. It is said that in America there is more racial segregation between 11 a.m. and noon on Sunday than at any other hour of the week. The church has been moving since the 1954 school segregation decision; the Roman Catholic church rapidly, the Protestant (with spectacular exceptions) slowly. But on the segregation of would-be wives from would-be husbands it is as silent as it is on war. It no longer quotes Scripture, as the "Bible-bangers" of the old South misquoted it on the inevitable slavery of the "descendants of Ham, accursed of God." (It was Canaan, not Ham, who was cursed, and it was Noah, not God, who cursed him.) On the ultimate, last-ditch issue of racism—miscegenation—the church today says nothing. A very rare clergyman speaks, at his peril, like the Rev. Kelly Barnett of the Episcopal Seminary of the Southwest, who, testifying against school segregation before a Texas legislative committee, was (of course) asked by State Senator Wardlow Lane if he believed in intermarriage. Barnett said that, while he thought it "sociologically inadvisable," he believed that "the right of marriage is a personal right." A few days later Lane leaped to his feet on the senate floor and shouted: "Why, these preachers want to mix colored and white. That's what Dr. Barnett said. He said it's all right for nigger and white to intermarry, but if one of my East Texas niggers married Barnett, I would feel sorry for the nigger. I want that clear: For the nigger."

The Lanes will not let the church remain silent indefinitely. And the church is the church that preaches the brotherhood of man under the fatherhood of God; that preaches the parable of the black Samaritan in answer to the Pharisee's question, "Who is my neighbor?" that preaches the Ten Commandments received from the hand of God by the man who married an Ethiopian woman; that preaches the Disciple who said, "God hath made of one blood all nations of men," and the Apostle who said, "He who does not love his brother, whom he has seen, how can he love God, whom he hath not seen?" The church is the church that preaches Christ crucified that "they may be as one . . . one flock, one shepherd."

One of the strongest statements made in support of the Court's school decision—a statement the Christian Century called "a model of clear-thinking insight"—was made by 74 Atlanta ministers. They quoted the Golden Rule, and went on, after saying that Negroes have the full privileges of first-class citizenship, to suggest that they should have all the privileges but one: "We do not believe in the amalgamation of the races . . ." They did not say whether God does.

It is not just the church that trusts in God; the national motto commits every American to that trust, and the national creed proclaims that all men —not all white men, or all Negroes, but all men—are created equal. But nowhere in the Western world today is a caste system of rigid inequality so vigorously expressed in law as in America. (Even the Nazi "Aryan marriage" laws were more liberal than Virginia's.) Perhaps the belief in the inferiority of the Negro race alone enables us to square our racism with our American creed of equality: American Negroes must be inferior creatures—otherwise American whites are inferior Americans.

Nor is it our creed alone that confronts us; the fact that our country is the great melting-pot confronts us too. We are proud of creating an "American tribe" out of the most diversified of the world's populations except Russia's. We are fanatical, not only about American equality, but about Americanism. We mistrust things foreign and alien; everything and everybody that comes to America has got to be Americanized. The American dream is the dream of complete assimilation —except for the Negro.

When novelist Erskine Caldwell says, "Eventually you'll have an amalgamation of the two races in the South," he would seem to be trying his hand at science fiction. What the sociologist calls assortative mating—like marrying like—tends to keep intermarriage from spreading. There will, of course, be more "white" blood in the Negro population, as part-whites marry non-whites; but the six million part-white Negroes will, the present pattern indicates, continue to marry non-whites. The Negro population as a whole will become a little lighter and more homogeneous in color; but that is all.

The racist marriage statutes have become more numerous and more rigidly enforced against Negroes in the past 50 years. They stand court tests because marriage has been held to be within the power of the separate states. But so is education. The 1954 decision in Brown et al v. Topeka Board of Education did not place education within the power of the federal government; it simply forbade unequal protection of the state's public school laws, under the Fourteenth Amendment. That decision overturned Plessy v. Ferguson, the famous case in which the Court upheld "equal but separate" railway accommodations in Louisiana. In 1896 the Louisiana statute was upheld on the ground that it enjoined members of both races from sitting together in railroad cars; it was therefore equal treatment. The state laws against intermarriage likewise forbid Negroes and whites to intermarry. But Justice Harlan said, in his historic dissent in Plessy: "If a white man and a black man choose to occupy the same public conveyance on a public highway, it is their right to do so, and no government, proceeding alone on grounds of race, can prevent it without infringing the personal liberty of each." What if two persons, one white and one black, choose to marry? Can a government prevent it, proceeding alone on grounds of race?

The California Supreme Court said No in 1948. The case at bar involved a Catholic couple, one white, the other Negro, who sued on the ground that the California marriage statute forbade them the sacrament of marriage in violation of the religious freedom clauses of the state and national constitutions. This argument, together with the equal protection finding in Brown v. Topeka, indicates that the statutes of all twenty-eight states forbidding intermarriage will be swept away in one U.S. Supreme Court decision, and the present attack on the Court has been said to involve that consideration. A couple of months ago, after Harry Bridges, who is always up to something, discovered that he could not marry a non-Caucasian in Idaho, that state quietly erased its intermarriage statute.

But it is doubtful, in view of the California experience since 1948, that such changes will affect miscegenation or intermarriage except in principle. The big change is already taking place—a bigger change than any law will ever induce: The Negro is at last rejecting the white man's doctrine of white supremacy. Not resenting it, or complaining of it, or defying it; rejecting it. It was his acceptance of this doctrine that spread miscegenation; his rejection of it will speed the rate at which miscegenation is declining. The Negro is completing the half of his emancipation that he has had to achieve himself. His hands and feet unshackled, he is climbing Jacob's ladder. He is deserting the white man's racism as he climbs from a sense of inferiority to a sense of equality. From there to a sense of unconsciousness of race is a long step—a step that will take a century or two for the Negro and at least that long for the white man. Along about then, or another century or two thereafter, amalgamation of the races will be a conceivable possibility. But along about then nobody will care.

Re: WNEW Panel Discussion

Some time ago radio station WNEW did a taped broadcast containing charges of maltreatment of civil rights prisoners by local and state arresting and penal officers.

On Thursday, 24 October, 1963, at WNEW, 565 5th Avenue, at 7:30 P.M., a studio broadcast has been arranged and a discussion of the national and international implications of state and local authorities vis-a-vis political prisoners will follow.

Discussing the subject and answering questions will be:

Hon. Theodore Kupferman, City Councilman, Professor of Federal Law and Procedure, New York Law School.
Herbert Monte Levy, Esq., Chairman of the Bill of Rights Committee of the Federal Bar Ass'n of NY, NJ and Conn.
Hon. William Hand, Jr., Former NY State Supreme Court Judge, Chrmn., NY Metropolitan Committee, United World Federalists, Inc.
Lea Singer, Esq., Co-Chairman Women's Law Division, Federal Bar Ass'n of NY, NJ, and Conn.
Hon. Cornelius W. Wickersham, Jr., Former U. S. Attorney of the Eastern District of New York.

Since the program will be taped for possible future broadcast, participation from the audience will be limited. It is suggested that questions be limited to twenty-five words, and in writing. The studio capacity is thirty, so it is necessary for persons planning to attend to phone my office: PL. 9-3223 so that a seat can be reserved.

(WNEW fans might be interested to know that Marlene Sanders, who has charge of this project has promised to invite William B. Williams to join us!)

Hope to see you,

CITY OF NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
NEW YORK 7, N.Y.

JULIUS C. C. EDELSTEIN
EXECUTIVE ASSISTANT TO THE MAYOR

December 2, 1963

Mr. James Farmer
National Executive Director,
CORE
38 Park Row
New York 7, N. Y.

My dear Mr. Farmer:

Just a line to let you know that the Mayor was pleased to know that you had taken the time to attend the memorial meeting. He was sorry that I hadn't interrupted him to tell him that I had you in town. He asked me to convey his greetings and salutations.

I must apologize on my own account for having ambushed you without even taking the opportunity to discuss some of the matters which I am handling on behalf of the Mayor, in which I know you have an interest. I have always said to myself that I wanted to -- as they say -- sit down with you one day. There I had the opportunity, but I was too cold, too embarrassed and too pressed. Perhaps we can repair the omission one day.

Cordially,

Julius C. C. Edelstein

re: MAY 17th

I am sure that we all agree that May 17th is the NAACP DAY, and is thus an ideal time to seek to generate some mass enthusiasm and mass identification. I know that branches have been urged to plan something for May 17th, and that churches are being urged to hold some sort of celebration. While this is very good, it seems to me that the Day would have more impact for the NAACP program if one specific suggestion were made and followed through vigorously. In this regard I would offer the following suggestion:

That we seek to organize mass parades in key cities north and south around the central issue of school discrimination.

Specifics:

I think we should select a dozen or more cities in the north with at least five hundred thousand population, and a large percentage of Negro population, and try to sell the branch officers and/or executive secretaries on planning a gigantic parade on Sunday afternoon, May 15th. In New York, without too much difficulty, it should be possible to put 10,000 people in the street. Chicago, Detroit, etc., should not fall far behind. We all know how lodges like to parade in full regalia. They should be brought in, in force. Trade unions likewise are much given to walking in such lines and carrying their union banner pledging support on a specific issue; they,too, should be tapped. Friendly churches, especially large ones, can be urged to organize motorcades, and to turn their services out in time to shuttle a large part of their congregations to the parade starting point.

With careful attention to planning, even five thousand in New York would be a tremendously impressive demonstration. I would suggest that the lead walkers carry a huge banner stretching across the street, with a blown-up quotation from the Supreme Court's decision - "We conclude that in the field of public education" etc. etc. The whole march could be to the accompaniment of muffled drums, as has been done in the past by the NAACP with effectiveness. Children and youth should also be in the parade carrying their banners, protesting the various specific forms of discrimination in northern schools and making their demands for changes. I would suggest also that the paraders march to a hall to culminate in a giant mass meeting of brief duration, with 'punchy' speeches for the purpose of getting a shouting approval from the assemblage for certain previously drawn up demands to be made to the Board of Education. These demands might be as follows:

1. Compliance with the Supreme Court decision by accepting integration as a key principle in establishing school zones and in construction of new schools.

2. Re-zoning so as to cut across segregated residential areas.

3. Establishing free transfer zones for pupils to transfer out of ghetto areas.

4. Change of sight for contemplated construction of new schools, if applicable.

5. Equali- of use of substitute and temporary teachers sation

throughout the school system, rather than heavy concentration in ghetto areas.

6. Improvement in vocational and curriculum guidance and counseling in schools with predominantly minority group attendance.

A meeting should have been previously arranged with the Board of Education for Tuesday, May 17th, at which the demands would be presented, possibly in the form of a huge petition, signed by thousands of citizens.

In the south those cities which could arrange such a parade or "march" might concentrate on two things:

1. Full, not token integration of schools, and

2. Arousing Negro parents to apply for re-assignment of their children to white or integrated schools.

This is ambitious, but I think we need an ambitious act on May 17th. It will cost money, but it should be able to more than pay for itself with high pressure fund-raising at the mass meeting on the theme - "Fight For Your Children's Education", and signs on the collection barrels - "Give For Your Children's Future." Also, it would seem to me appropriate to use a suggestion made by Mr. Current last month; namely, having people with cans soliciting contributions on street corners and in business establishments with friendly proprietors in Negro areas, during the parade, saying in effect "you are not marching so give for your children's future.

Announcement of the project:

It seems to me that an important factor in getting something like this going is the very act of announcing it with as much fanfare as possible. Not only should it be announced in the daily and weekly press (to appear simultaneously if possible), but it would seem well to me for Mr. Wilkins to make the announcement via radio and/or television in a Report To The Nation on discrimination of schools. Perhaps the Public Relations can get an invitation to an established network television show, where the announcement can be made.

Additional Note:

It seems to me that May 17th falls close enough to our Annual Convention that even if the demonstrations are only moderately successful in terms of the original plan, much enthusiasm will be generated which will of course carry over into the Convention. Also, May 17th follows the White House Conference on Children and Youth closely enough so that we can, in a sense, ride on whatever comes out of that - or fails to come out of it. Such parades as suggested above will require two months of preparation, so whatever we do should be done quickly.

NAC MEETING - MARCH 18, 19, AND 20 - HARLEM YMCA

The following NAC members were present: McKissick, Dyes, Williams (Phila). A.D. Moore, Lynch, Hall, Bradley, Wilson Lewis, Curvin, Turner, Montiero, and Ussery.

The following agenda submitted by National Chairman, Wil Ussery, was approved by the body:

1. Discussion of meeting arrangements
2. Director's report
3. Financial report
4. Dept. of organization report
5. Lunch - committee meetings
6. General session (include the NE region recommendations)
7. Joint staff - NAC social gathering
8. Reports from special committees and recommendations - Sunday

Corrections to the minutes

Marlene Wilson submitted the following corrections to the NAC meeting minutes from Dec. 31 - Jan. 2:

1. Page 7 (Open Session). Motion - Leeds, adopt in principle the idea of endorsing one or more Northern projects and set up the necessary committees to bring in proposals as to what staff is feasible, financing and other ramifications .....motion failed, 6 in favor (Riley, Curvin, Rosenfeld, Williams, Leeds, Robinson), 11 against, 2 abstentions. Correction - Wilson also voted in favor, making the total 7 in favor.

2. Page 8 (Open Session). Ollie Leeds is shown as chairman of the Special Projects Committee. In fact Marlene Wilson is chairman.

3. Page 15 (Semi-Closed Session). Motion- "adopt recommendation of committee about Assoc. Director's increased salary to $12,500 (Brown, Montiero). Motion passed, 14 in favor, 6 abstentions (Dodie Smith, Curvin, Leeds, Dyes, Rosenfeld). Correction - Wilson also abstained but not named here.

Meeting arrangements

Julia Lewis raised the question that the notice of this meeting indicated that it was a Steering Committee and not a full NAC meeting. When calls were made to the office, NAC members were told by a secretary that only certain people were to receive expenses to come to the meeting, when in fact all NAC members receive expense money for NAC meetings. McKissick replied that arrangements were made to provide all NAC members with expenses. The only exceptions had to do with field staff. Ussery - also explained that there was a discussion with national staff and he told them that this was a full NAC meeting. The suggestion was made to check on NAC members not present to see why they were not present. Also since Lewis was not being notified of meetings nor receiving minutes, her address should be checked on all mailing lists to see if she has been sent her mail.

National Director's Report - McKissick

McKissick reported on a meeting at the White House March 13 with Johnson and leaders of civil rights organizations. Present were King, Wilkins, Young, A Phillip Randolph, John Lewis, Clarence Mitchell, and himself in attendance. Pres. Johnson presented the following issues to the group for consideration:

1. It was an election year and therefore there would be a problem in steering the legislative matters through Congress on civil rights. There was a general feeling that his administration had accomplished enough in the area of civil rights. There was general agreement among those present that the bills should be presented in a package. The housing bill will probably get the most opposition.

2. The move of the mediation service (Collins' office) to the commerce dept. or the Dept. of Justice. Most felt that the Dept. of Justice was a much better location.

3. Center for Community Action Education (Farmer's program). There is great opposition mounting against OEO; Johnson expressed the fear that the program could be killed if Farmer got the money. HEW also has a plan for literacy training more comprehensive than Farmer's Powell wanted to wait until after the appropriation committee hearings to pass on the CCAE. Randolph, speaking for the group, took a strong stand and insisted that the President take action immediately. Pres. Johnson said he would see what he could do.

4. March 19 there was a meeting of the White House Planning Conference; Don Smith was CORE's representative. Purpose of the meeting - to come forth with positions for the White House Conference. Rev. Founteroy is the coordinator.

McKissick then pointed out the weakness of CORE in not having a Washington representative because of the heavy reliance of all the civil rights groups on Clarence Mitchell's know-how and expertise. There is also a need for a CORE position paper to present to the Pres. Conference in the spring with special emphasis on the War on Poverty and its obvious shortcomings. McKissick pointed out that he made it a point to emphasize that CORE would not be committed to any political party since he sensed that was a main reason for the President's calling them all there.

Report continued - National Office

The fund-raising department is the major weakness of the organization. Methods of raising funds must be carefully analyzed. Salaries and front costs are depleting our budget. We lost money on the Farmer Salute. (In fact we have not made money on any major project.) We entered into a number of contracts with entertainers, etc. and lost money. The Department did focus on this project over a period of the last 4 days and did manage to salvage something. One problem was the failure to advertise sufficiently. It is obvious that we must have new ways to develop funds.

Office overhead is still a problem. We have not yet been released from our lease which calls for $1200 monthly rent. Other locations in Harlem are much more promising if we can make arrangements with the landlord (e.g. two adjacent brownstone houses, a location across from the Theresa Hotel and another location on 7th Ave., which the owners will let us have free if we would assume the costs of renovation, taxes, etc. Recommendations - must make drastic changes in the fund-raising dept.; need to investigate other agencies who will fund-raise on a percentage basis. The membership drive material will be available Tues. at the latest and this is a source of funds. B. Elton Cox has made himself available to head a church dept. if we want him.

Financial Report - Mrs. Clora Coleman

The financial situation is critical. Income for the month of January is figured at $69,492.49 (including a $25,000 loan and a $6,000 bequest). Income for Feb. was a very low $19,872.42. At the same time our bills have gone up in Jan.

and Feb., a large portion of them resulting from fund-raising front costs.

At present $2,000 is on hand. Loans due Monday March 21 will take $1500 of that amount, and phone bills are due, Humble Oil bill of $11,000 is due and of course salary. Most pressing is the unpaid tax bill, IRS has not yet brought the matter up but they can and will and they have the power to padlock the doors and freeze assets.

The total debt, once down to $230,000 is back up to $266,000 because the suppliers debt has climbed. (the suppliers' debt is now back to $115,516.71). A $10,000 error in our bank balance which occurred in our book keeping dept. April, 1965 will make matters much worse when discovered by the bank.

We have not had an audit for 1966.

	January	February
Income	$69,492.49	$19,872.42
Disbursements	66,619.67	36,664.70

Ben Peterson, Director of Direct Mailing, also reported. The Winter Outside Appeal has not gone into the mail yet because of lack of funds, although $18,756.00 have already been incurred in production costs. There has been a drop in the returns from the Brotherhood Appeal ($23,478 vs. $30,709 this time last year) for a number of reasons: the Mt. Vernon incident, the appeal went out late and the New York list which was sent to was also used to promote the Lincoln Center benefit. The Appeal should have gone out the first of Feb.

Peterson's recommendation (although not cleared with Coleman, Hall or McKissick) was that there be a revolving account of $10,000 which would be used for direct mail expenses only.

When asked, he felt that we do not have too many appeals. The copy of the letter included in an appeal however should be simple, direct, concise and informal. Wilson questioned whether people might be asked to pledge more regularly. This will be looked into. Peterson said that the % of response from mailings is as follows: 12% Budget appeal, 7-8% Brotherhood appeal and C.5% Spring appeal.

The response from chapters has been negligible. Only 10-15 chapters requested Holiday cards, so far only 3 chapters have asked for Farmer's book. Curvin - noted that chapters need to be notified sooner about the cards. This year, according to Peterson, a large Holiday card will be sent out that can't be missed.

Dept. of Organization - Herb Callendar

1. Recommendation about Morris City. CORE (submitted in writing) be disregarded. Regional Vice Chairman Curvin urged that the chapter not be affiliated at this time.

   Turner raised the question about the standards for affiliation and whether we should be affiliating anyone when we obviously cannot service the chapters we have. Although there are constitutional obligations, it was discussed that even they are not being met in terms of affiliating chapters. More discussion postponed until the committees have a chance to meet.

Staff changes

1. Recommendation that the NAC ratify Callendar decision (to dismiss) regarding field secretary Mike Lesser. Motion - that the recommendation be approved (Bradley, Montiero). Discussion - Wilson explained that the Columbus chapter wanted to clarify its position on the matter. There was an implication in the letter of dismissal that Lesser was responsible for the chapter's raising certain questions at the RAC meeting in Chicago. This was not true. Motion passed. Curvin, Lewis, Wilson abstained.

2. Recommendation that the NAC ratify Callendar decision to dismiss Tony Riley. Callendar explained that the Maryland Freedom Union had developed in Baltimore but not because of Riley (more in spite of him). There were a number of financial problems as well connected with his employment. Motion - passed 9-1.

Curvin noted that the regional officers want to be informed of any such decisions in the future before the action is taken.

3. The Southern office

a. Ed Hollander is supposedly the public relations officer but is presently serving as a book-keeper in the so. office and should be transferred to the Mid-West.

b. Dave Dennis is presently working on only one campaign in New Orleans and is not functioning as a program director for the South. The recommendation is that he be transferred to the West Coast as a field secretary.

c. The So. office operate with Mr. Haley and one office secretary and the book-keeping operation for that office be put back in the National office.

d. Mrs. Annie Devine be made director of Miss. operations since George Raymond is in Detroit and there is no head now.

Callendar explained that he had sent these recommendations to Haley and the So. staff. They are still in discussion and the response of the staff is forthcoming. The informal response gotten so far is that Haley, Hollander and Dennis are not willing to make such changes. And yet the southern staff is not getting serviced by the so. office at present. In the recent blow-up in Bogalusa, no word could be gotten from the so. office about what was going on because no one went to the scene. By common consent it was decided that no action could be taken until discussion with Southern staff had been held.

4. Stu Wechsler, task force worker in So. Carolina

Pending discussion with Jim McCain and his recommendation, it was the director's opinion that Wechsler either be fired or placed in another area.

The need for an issue

Bob recommended that a strategy be developed for all CORE chapters and field staff persons to organize poor people for a minimum income program. One of the immediate steps that could be taken would be to call a meeting of all CORE field staff and at least one representative from each chapter. Then all civil rights groups could be called together and third, we could begin to set up the legal apparatus needed to deal with the legal problems of the project.

2. Another issue is the organization of Negro contractors similar to the assoc. of United Contractors of America, an organization that insisted on 15% of the rehabilitation contracts in New York (because Negroes represent 15% of the population) and finally got 28%.

3. Another prospect is the Maryland Freedom Union, the organization of low paid workers in Baltimore which has recently been joined by some locals in Baltimore who left their own unions.

By common consent these ideas were referred to committee for further action.

Callender also explained the Mt. Vernon incident involving the anti-Semitic statement of Clifford Brown. It took place at a board meeting (of Education) was convened to discussion why integration plans had not been submitted. Another organization besides CORE was present, Parents and Taxpayers, some of whose members were vocal and insulting. Obscene remarks and an actual attack was attempted on Mrs. Isabel Hawkins, chairman who was attempting to testify. The chairman of the PAT was Jewish and Brown's statement was aimed at him. He said, "Hitler didn't kill enough of you." As a result of that statement, Wil Maslow resigned and the advisory committee was called together. The statement had apparently also impaired plans on a benefit planned by the Seafarer's Union. Brown was not chairman of CORE, but chairman of the education committee and he has since resigned. The statement has been condemned by Farmer and the surrounding circumstances have been presented.

Callender then called on Tony Perot to give a report on the Chicago situation. Tony Perot, field secretary of the North Central region submitted his report on Chicago,(local federation of civil rights groups) site of a joint SCLC and CCCO campaign. After discussing what is going on in Chicago and the resources committed to the city by various organizations, he recommended that "Chicago be designated as a special project, funded by national CORE and by monies raised locally." Tony explained that the need for such a project was obvious. "That CORE is the only national organization committed to community development in Northern urban centers of which Chicago is the prototype. The increased awareness being generated by the charisma of Dr. King and the impetus of the Chicago Freedom Movement provide the best vehicle to build a solid community base in selected geographical areas and/or the entire ghetto of Chicago. The project also can be used as a training ground to develp CORE leadership and organizational skills for the long struggle ahead because of the presence of the Urban Training Center, a program headed by C.T. Vivian who is willing to lend CORE assistance. He recommended specifically that a special team of technicians drawn from among the most skilled people in national CORE be used in the Chicago area and elsewhere as the need arises and that a task force of at least 10 community workers be drawn from the Chicago area.

NE REGIONAL PROPOSALS

Bob Curvin presented some concerns of the region relating to National office and local chapter relationships. In light of a development in Syracuse when national staff was involved in a local project, the following recommendation was made: On Local Projects.

"That National CORE adopt the policy that there be consultation with the chapter in the particular area in which persons from National staff plan to operate. If a chapter asks for help it should retain authority over the project. National staff must keep in mind the CORE Rules for Action and consult with local chapter." Motion passed, (Hall opposed).

"That the NAC Support the activities of the Mt.Vernon CORE chapter in its efforts to gain better education, housing, and welfare services for the minorities in that community" (Curvin, Lynch). It was explained that there have been several breaches of basic rights in Mt.Vernon in view of Brown's statement; for example, City Hall has been declared 'Off Limits' to CORE chapter members. Therefore it was added to the motion "that the NAC condemns the actions of Mayor Joseph Vaccarella (of Mt.Vernon) in restricting the rights of CORE members to appear and speak at public meetings, etc. "Motion, passed unanimously.

"National must consult with the local chapter when planning fund-raising in a local area." (Curvin, Lewis). Motion passed, 7 in favor, Bradley, Lynch, Hall abstained.

Roy Innis, Chairman of New York CORE, asked to be heard on the proposed move to Harlem. At present he stated the relations between his chapter and the National office are good, because McKissick is making an effort to keep them that way. Innis wanted to know whether persons below McKissick would continue to work in harmony. If not, he wished to put the NAC on notice that the chapter wanted a right to present a bill of particulars to the organization. Turner noted that as we get larger, individual chapter chairman cannot expect to get the attention from National staff they got in the past since staff will have an even greater job to do. Callender remarked that other National staff besides McKissick had tried and were presently trying to relate to New York CORE (police brutality case and training conference).

Fund-Raising Department Report - Norman Hall

Norman outlined present, summer and long-range proposals for fund-raising. Our present plans include a Labor Salute to Jim Farmer at the Americana Hotel ballroom schedules for April 9th. Admission is $50 per plate. The hall holds 2000 people. Plans were snagged because of the Mt.Vernon incident because a number of Jewish Labor leaders were involved but they are on the way to being solved. If the event is successful, CORE could get substantial money.

Other events in the near future include: a CORE Day in Harlem which has some fund-raising aspects (luncheon, cocktail party, ball): Schaefer fashion show given in conjunction with Queens CORE; an Art Sale conducted by the Chelsea Friends of CORE; CORE nights in a series of nightclubs. Long range plans include a Blues Convention, a clambake and boatride up the Hudson to Bear Mountain and the establishment of co-op stores in the ghettos as well as benefit concerts.

Norman reported that these events, although smaller in scope than some in the past, required little in the way of initial investments, thus sparing the organization the fund-raising front cost that have been so costly. He also felt that they were in keeping with the mandate of the National Convention, to establish ties with the ghetto in a meaningful way. He did not feel that he was in position to judge the work of the fund-raising dept since he had only been director three weeks.

General discussion

The need for a focussing project was discussed at length. McKissick-CORE is its own greatest enemy. We're on the peripheria when we do not have to be. Our problems are interrelated. Curvin- need to focus on Washington. Hall - our staff is not trained to go into Washington right now. Chicago is one of the few places where training can be secured. Lewis - need to question some of our past decisions in view of our great financial needs. Dyes - Chicago is all right but Los Angeles needs to be considered, Lynch - Washington is the most important city in the country, but we need to lay the groundwork if we want to focus there. Rachlin - CORE has to earn the right to earn money in the community. Callendar - there are civil rights aristocracies in each community not community movements. We need issues that chapters and staff can rally around. Turner - we are greatly handicapped because the committees did not do theie homework; there is no proposal for Washington. If King is in Chicago, does it make sense to be somewhere else. When King was in Selma and we were in Washington, we were eclipsed totally. Do we have the resources to develp something on our own at this point? And have the kind of summer success that will draw national attention else where? Perot - King can concentrate; he analyzes first what he is doing and what he has to work with. We must analyze our resources first/ Leeds - everyone recognizes that the black community is a base. Money will come as the result of what you're doing. Who says King will be successful, wasn't in the past. Need to pick somewhere (leans toward Washington) and concentrate. Also need to continue to encourage chapters who are engaged in community action. Coleman - the problem is that things have gone too far and too long already. We must have $25,000 next week. Ussery - if we decide we must have a project to move us, we must either cut back or plan to focus for a major effort. Chicago will not get money results Washington comes closer. Retrenchment is not the answer. A major project is the only answer. McKissick - retrenchment is possible in some instances; could reduce the staff by four people, can cut down in overhead office expenses, can reorganize the so. office (total budget is $15,000 monthly) and approach certain foundations.

Motion - recess and reconvene at 8:00 a.m. for meeting of two committees - program and finance . Motion passed.

Continuation of NAC meeting - Sunday March 20, 1:00 p.m.

Finance committee report - Bill Bradley chairman

The background of most of the committee's discussion was the immediate need for $25,000 and the present debt of some $266,000. In view of this crisis, the following recommendations were made:

1. Negotiate long term loans well in excess of $25,000.
2. NAC give the committee the names of any persons who might loan CORE money ($500 - $2000).
3. Carry out Herb's recommendations about the southern office - in terms of adopting the policy of transferral where possible.
4. Cut backs in the National office - left to administrative decision.
5. Foundations be approached for support of some of CORE 's programs (Apparently foundations have been reluctant because of CORE's state of disorganization, the problem of frequent policy changes and the amount of autonomy of local chapters).
6. Membership drive a) to be carried out within 30 days through the efforts of the fund-raising dept. b) Major metropolitan areas be targeted (Cleveland, Baltimore, Miami, New York). Discussion was on this point - CORE chapters should be ready to give national its share; at least the $100 chapter assessment could be paid.

Motion to adopt finance committee report - Bradly, Montiero, Passed unanimously.

Motion - that the category of membership for those who pay $500 be considered life membership category for individual and small groups with the appropriate award, but large organizations be asked to pay $1,000. Definition of groups eligible be left to administrative decision. (Turner, Leeds) Motion passed 13-0, 1 abstention.

By common consent - the director be instructed to bring in policy for handling relations with chapters on associate membership drives.

Program committee report

Marlene Wilson reported for the committee. She reported that the committee, after considerable discussion, recommended CORE participation in Chicago in a joint effort with SCLC and CCCO. Motion - that Floyd and other CORE representatives negotiate with Al Raby of CCCO and Dr. Martin Luther King and be prepared to commit a national team to concentrate on the North Side of Chicago, assuring also from time to time the National Director's presence in Chicago. Motion failed - 4-7-2. Because the motion failed to pass, it was ruled by "Ussery that the other parts of the committee's recommendation were no longer relevant. The other recommendation of the committee was a response to Callendar's recommendation; that a workshop on the issue of minimum income be planned for May involving field staff and chapter leadership. Field staff is to come a few days earlier to discuss organization problems. Funded if possible by foundation sources. (Turner, Hall)Motion passed.

Motion - (Leeds,Lynch) open an office in Washington, D.C.; the first job of the personnel there would be to investigate the possibility of home rule as an organizing issue in that city. Motion passed - 8-5. Motion - (Leeds,McKissick) that Baltimore be made a target city for a special project. Motion passed, 11-1-1 (abstention).

Motion - that CORE participate in the Chicago project. This participation depending upon an agreement that can be made with King on the basis of our limited finances. We will give our public endorsement to that project (McKissick, Leeds). Motion passed , 12 to 1.

Motion - that CORE develp and promote a sound public relations program around Operation Bootstrap (Los Angeles, Cal.) and the So. Carolina voter registration project and any other ongoing projects. (Dyes, Turner). Passed unanimously.

Motion - that the chairman of the Program Committee (Wilson) send letter of ackowledgement to all chapters, who sent in proposals that their proposals were received, studied, but because of our financial condition we could not accept all of them. Communicate further that the national office stands ready to assist chapters with their projects, inform of the present training programs, (Turner, Leeds). Motion passed, 13-1 (abstention).

Other recommendations were: that King and CCCO issue a joint invitation to National CORE to come into Chicago in a press conference; that CORE request of King immediate funds to ease CORE's financial straits ($15,000) and the local chapter be consulted, by the national chairman and other national staff.

Motion - (Lewis, Dyes), that the NAC go on record giving the same support to Operation Bootstrap as is being given to the Chicago situation Motion passed 12 in favor Curvin opposed, 3 abstentions - Montiero Leeds Turner

1966 Convention

Ussery reported that a meeting of the Convention Committee had been held in St. Louis March 17, and there was a meeting March 27 to work out the details of the convention agenda, make decisions as to site and plan for details.

Date of Convention - July 1,2,3, and 4.

Place: a. Hotel near center of town (Statler, Jefferson, Lennox)
b. Concordia Seminary
c. Washington, University

Staff needs - full or part-time convention aide who will work with the planning committee Guidance needed: a) approximate no. of guests, b) capacity of auditorium, c) national entertainment, d) theme: "Political Strength of the Ghetto" e) preliminary cash needs, f) local housing sub-committee, g) suggested key noters (Julian Bond, Al Raby).

By common consent the chairman was empowered to make decisions regarding the convention.

Memo from OEO - written by Theodore Berry - Dated March 3, 1966

Ussery explained that the San Francisco DEO Executive Committee went on record against the memo because it perverts the intent of the poverty act.

Motion

1. The NAC condemns the memo 23-24 by Theodore Berry, head of the CAP section, applying the Hatch Act in an unconstitutional way.
2. Our motion of condemnation be taken to the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights and also be used as part of a position paper to be presented to the President Inference "To Fulfill These Rights."
3. The NAC support the action of the San Francisco executive committee of the local OEO in opposing the memo.

(Ussery, McKissick). Motion passed unanimously.

Next NAC Meeting

Held jointly with staff two days prior to the National Convention. (Lewis) Motion passed unanimously.

Motion - the NAC endorse an increase in minimum wage for the state of N.Y. Motion passed.

CLOSED SESSION

McKissick offered a motion regarding personnel as follows: to endorse Lincoln Lynch as Associate Director and as soon as funds are available hire Bill Bradley in the area of program (McKissick, Leeds).

Discussion

Curvin raised the question that because of the lateness of the time, it was not possible to discuss the matter as thoroughly as need be. Someone else commented that the need for additional staff is undisputed, but we need better idea of how decisions are arrived at. What are our criteria and how do the candidates fit them. This is very necessary if we are going to be able to deal with questions raised at the convention..

Lynch gave a brief description of himself. He was born in Jamaica of poor background. He joined the RAF after school (not college graduate) and was there 10 years. He considers himself dedicated, radical all his life and has been a CORE member the last 7 years. He hopes to help Floyd to do the job he wants to do, but will continue to be the same kind of person. If he disagrees, he will tell you.

When asked why he picked the two, Floyd responded that they would both be an asset to the kind of team he was trying to build in the national office, each bringing besides thinking ability his own special talents. There was a great deal of discussion about Bradley's attitude toward white people and some feeling expressed that he was overly nationalistic and therefore not objective. The motion was separated. Lynch - 11-0--1(Lynch) ; Bradley as program director 8-3 (Curvin, Lewis, Wilson) .

REPORT TO THE NATIONAL ACTION COMMITTEE ON FREEDOM HIGHWAYS

FROM: The Program Department

Introduction. The February meeting of the NAC requested the Program Department to report on the proposed Freedom Highways project. It is the impression of the Program Department that the NAC intended this project to be one of CORE's major undertakings in 1962.

It is further our feeling that this project is complex -- more so in many ways than was the Freedom Ride. It has also been expressed by some that CORE, in undertaking such a new project, appears to be appealing more to the sensational than to the truly productive.

Reasons for Freedom Highways. The most obvious reason for this project is the fact that discrimination does exist in eating places along the highways of the United States particularly in the South. Throughout practically the entire South it is impossible for a Negro traveling by car to eat in any restaurant along the way without submitting to gross humiliation. Consequently most Negro travelers are forced to travel without being able to stop for food, drink, rest or any other purpose. It is not unusual to carry sandwiches. It should be kept in mind that highway travel is a major means of travel and that travel by Negroes is increasing greatly.

The early stages of the Highway 40 project indicated the fantastic interest in a project of this sort. While later the Route 40 episode became a favorite for college students from the North one need only look at the newspaper clippings to see the unprecedented support and participation which this project elicited from Maryland residents, young and old. The Route 40 Freedom Ride provided a more general and a broader support from local citizens than almost any other recent CORE project. It is possible that Freedom Highways could have the electrifying effect on the civil rights movement which the Freedom Ride had. In addition to the opening of restaurants along major U.S. highways another prime goal of this project would be to spur activity in voter registration, housing, unemployment and other endeavors. It is a logical follow-up to the Freedom Ride and could conceivably spark new interest in CORE's struggle North and South. We should keep in mind that much of the dramatic and effective nonviolent action taking place in the North in the past few months stems directly from the Freedom Riders journey into the Deepest South. Student action in McComb, Mississippi and the campaign in Albany, Georgia were directly inspired by the Freedom Ride.

While it is agreed that in the long run progress in the fields of employment and voter registration may be more basic than eating facilities we cannot afford to overlook the prime necessity for some projects which speak to man's dignity, can draw wide support and can be sufficiently dramatic to give a boost to all our other efforts.

There has been expressed the fear that Freedom Highways might require so much effort that other projects would be neglected. In answer to this we feel it essential that we look at CORE with a longer perspective. It should be kept in mind that most CORE activity is carried on automatically by the chapters and that most national program is not very time consuming. A well executed Freedom Highways project should mean more local activity, more national participation, more money and more growth in spite of the fact that at times it will require most of the time of most of the staff.

General Format. The initial portion of Freedom Highways would be a major campaign along a single route through the South. The most likely route appears to be from Miami, Florida to Washington, D. C. along U.S. Highways #1, #301, and #17. Due to the proliferation of restaurants along our highways it is most practicable to pick out a particular chain. Howard Johnsons seems best suited. This is the major restaurant chain along the highways; it has exclusive franchises on several turnpikes; and it affords ample opportunity for supporting action in the North. "Howard Johnsons" is also a brand name for many food products. The initial stage of the project would be a "freedom ride" by trained personnel traveling in automobiles and staging sit-ins at Howard Johnson restaurants. Testing and negotiations would of course preceed action.

Problems. As mentioned earlier this project poses many difficult problems. As opposed to our campaigns at Woolworth and the bus companies where facilities were essentially owned and operated centrally or in the case of Trailways by a number of companies, most Howard Johnson establishments are locally owned and managed and are licensed and serviced by the Howard Johnson Company. Furthermore, we cannot expect or even hope for the kind of federal intervention that occurred when the Justice Department petitioned the Interstate Commerce Commission for a ban on discrimination.

Traveling in cars is somewhat more dangerous than traveling on regularly scheduled buses. But the most severe problem posed by this project is local follow-up action.

Staff Involvement. Because of the nature of this project and since the Program Department recommends that it be a major national project it will of necessity involve the full cooperation of all Departments if it is approved. We should recall that the Freedom Ride at times required the primary attention of 9/10 of the CORE staff. Freedom Highways requires wholehearted participation or none at all.

Timing. As indicated above, Freedom Highways is complex and difficult. It also offers real challenge and opportunity. It is our opinion that we cannot hope to launch Freedom Highways until this summer. We have also been persuaded that participation by students and others who will only be available during the summer months dictates a later starting date than was discussed at the February meeting of the NAC. The proposed approximate schedule might be as follows:

Investigation, testing and negotiations	- already under way
Recruitment	- April
Preliminary field work	- May
Training (2 weeks)	- July (after Convention)
Launching of first demonstrations	- late July or August

Investigation and negotiation. Tests of Howard Johnson were done along the proposed route by individuals from the New York area over the past Christmas holidays. Their report is very adequate and helpful. More testing has been done in Virginia by Alexandria CORE (report not yet received) and current testing is being done in Miami and in other sections of the nation by CORE groups. We have also secured information on the Company's corporate status, list of franchises, etc. Mr. H.B. Johnson, President of Howard Johnson was written to on March 14 requesting a conference. To date we have had no response.

Recruitment. Recruitment of participants can begin almost immediately. Based on our experience with the Freedom Rides we know we must be more selective and careful in recruiting. Recruitment would begin initially with the CORE chapters, then with southern student groups and finally with other groups. Recruitment must be very selective and opportunity for weeding out will be afforded by the training period.

- continued -

Training. It is felt that a two week training period must be provided for. An ideal location would be Miami, Florida where we should be able to use the Sir John Motel (used by two previous Institutes). Miami and vicinity have a large cluster of Howard Johnson Restaurants, most of which are still segregated. This situation would provide a rather easy project for training while in effect beginning the project. Training would include: history and philosophy of CORE and nonviolence; discussions and workshops on tactics; socio-dramas; and actual participation on sit-ins at Howard Johnsons. At the time of recruitment it would be understood that participants would volunteer for a minimum of two months and could be terminated at the discretion of the project leaders.

Advance field work. Advance field work would be of two kinds: that taking place prior to the training session and that following the training project. The first work will probably have to be carried out by the field staff. The latter work can be done by the trained participants and volunteers.

As noted earlier one of the main problems which we see in the implementation of Freedom Highways is that of effective follow-up. The route over which the riders would travel is pitifully underorganized. We have practically no CORE chapters along the way and other effective nonviolent groups are few. The problem is compounded by the fact that many Howard Johnsons are located outside of towns (though often on the outskirts) and are not necessarily in the major cities. Since local activity is essential after the project if there is to be any meaningful follow-through, it is apparent that we must attempt to organize some new CORE units in the cities through which we will pass or at least organize someone to carry on after the project has completed its journey. Since we can count on Howard Johnson to be a tough project it would be irresponsible to launch Freedom Highways without planning an effective program to carry it to completion. The first advance work would be essentially to organize groups to work on the implementation and follow-up. Following the training period and preceeding the "formal launching" the trained participants would be deployed along the route in key cities to prepare action simultaneously with the departure of the main groups of Freedom Highways participants. The importance of the preliminary work cannot be overemphasized.

Implementation. Ten days or so after the end of the training session we would plan for groups of riders in automobiles to depart from Miami en route to Washington. If we had sufficient numbers the participants could divide and half would head North from Miami and the other half South from Washington. At the time this group (these groups) depart we would like to have sit-ins begin in several Howard Johnsons along the route by local people. The effect would be simultaneous action in several states rather than a single dramatic ride.

This stage would not be reached much before the beginning of August. We would allow about two weeks for the groups moving up and down the road to complete the itinerary. We would allow for at least one day for each restaurant at which the protest would occur. Riders would go only to places which we know to discriminate.

The minimum number of cars which could work as a unit would be five. Three would carry participants; the fourth would be for observers and trouble-shooters, and the fifth would be an advance unit. Each car would have a driver and probably four others.

Conclusion. Many problems have yet to be considered. We face the possibility of finding most of the restaurants closed. The schedule will have to more flexible than that used for the Freedom Ride. Can we get enough cars? What about insurance on the cars? How long will participants be committed to stay in jail if arrested? How much full-time staff can be assigned to Freedom Highways? And to what extent can full-time volunteers be utilized? There are many more questions.

We hope the National Action Committee will authorize the staff to begin implementation of this project as outlined above. Criticism and suggestions are most welcome.

NATIONAL CONVENTION SITE

Criteria for selecting a convention site.

Geographical:

There has been strong hope expressed from some quarters that a southern city be chosen. To my knowledge, no other preference has been offered.

It should be a location easily accessible by ordinary transportation.

It should be well-removed from the region of recent conventions.

Host:

CORE ordinarily meets at the home site of some CORE-group. There are exceptions. Last year the convention was originally scheduled for a camp in Wisconsin, a CORE-less state.

In considering a city with no group it would have to be determined if some other local person or group could serve as host. (The "host" would survey the city for food, lodging, meeting-rooms, publicity, entertainment, and government hospitality).

If there is another civil rights group in the city, and it is not disposed to serve as host, there is the distinct possibility that a CORE convention in that city would generate more animosity than love. Such a selection, then, would be strongly questionable.

Physical facilities:

1. An auditorium seating three to five hundred people.
2. At least six conference-rooms in close proximity.
3. Eating facilities nearby.
4. Lodging, preferably nearby so that transportation would not be a problem.

Expense:

Accessibility of the place has a bearing on travel expense.
If a vacation area, it is better that this be the "off" season.

Prior information:

It would be helpful if surveys of local facilities, and expense estimates, were submitted prior to making a choice of location. Since the present suggested dates are Thursday, June 28 through Sunday, July 1, such surveys could only be superficial. This much would help:

1. Would meeting-rooms be free, or rented?
2. Who would be the host?
3. Can eating arrangements be satisfactorily made?
4. How much free lodging (estimate), how much commercial?

CITY	LOCATION	ACCESSI
Nashville, Tenn.	Midsouth	Good
Atlanta, Georgia	Southeast	Excelle
Miami, Florica	Deep South	Good
Kansas City, Missouri	Midwest (with a southern slant)	Good

These cities have been suggested; natu
